CONSULT :— THE WELL-KNOWN EXPERT OF INDIA WHOSE BOOKS ARE CITED IN THE COURTS AS AUTHORITIES.

M. K. MEHTA, Examiner, Questioned Documents,

Diploma Holder of International Criminologist School, (U.S.A.)

Bar Shahbulla Nai Sarak, DELHI-6.

What they say about Mr. MEHTA, the Author :—Kerala Law Reporter : "...His (M. K. MEHTA'S) clear and analytical treatment of a subject brimful of technicalities in a manner understandable without effort is indicative of his mature study, mastery and proficiency in the principles of this little known science....."

Cuttack Law Times : "The author is considered to be a high authority on the scientific analysis of disputed documents and of finger and typed prints....."

D. L. R. Nagpur : "The author is unquestionably a very high authority on the subject of handwriting and who has already to his credit such excellent works as "Whether the identification of handwriting is a Science....."

Hindustan Times New Delhi : "..... The author deserves to be congratulated on rousing public opinion on the need of the lawyer developing skill and patience in the difficult art of cross-examining these experts....."

What the Courts say about Mr. MEHTA, the Expert : — Hon'ble Shri K. N. Wanchoo, Judge, Allahabad High Court (now Supreme Court) in C. A. Nos. 677/49 & 678/49 : "...I am impressed by the reasons given by Mr. Mehta to the effect that the appellant did not sign as Pengergast....."

Munsif, North Faizabad in Suit No. 150/47 : "...M. K. MEHTA has been cross-examined at great length and he has not been at all shaken in his cross-examination...He seems to be a widely read person as regards the subject of handwriting....."

I Addl. Sub-Judge Hazaribagh in M. S. 16/3 of 51/55 : "...Mr. Mehta is an expert of established reputation...The reasonings given by him are so convincing that I have no alternative but to accept his opinion given in this suit....."

Sub-Judge Anantapur in O. S. 23/49 : "...From the evidence of M. K. MEHTA, D. W. 9, it will be seen that he has given very cogent reasons for arriving at his conclusion...I am inclined to place reliance on the opinion of M. K. Mehta which is based on elaborate reasonings given by him than the opinion of....."

II Munsif, Bulandshahr in Suit No. 387/52 : "..... The defendant had categorically denied the fact of his putting his thumb mark on the paper...The matter was referred to the Govt. Expert...who reported that the thumb impression in question was blurred...The plaintiff was not satisfied with the reports of the Govt. Expert. He got the disputed thumb impressions compared by Shri M. K. Mehta...who reported vide Ex. III that the disputed thumb impressions were of the defendant. The report Ex. III was very clear and there were convincing reasons which led Shri M. K. Mehta to the conclusion....."

VOLUME LIII.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 2025 OF 1918.

July 30, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar and Mr. Justice Burn.

THE HON'BLE M. R. RY. B. RAJA RAJESWARA SETHUPATHI ALIAS MUTHU RAMALINGA SETHUPATHI AVERGAL, RAJAH OF RAMNAD—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

VENKATARAMA AIYAR MINOR, BY 2ND RESPONDENT SUNDARAMMAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I Mad. of 1908), ss. 155, 192 (e) —Landlord and tenant—Rent, suit for—Set-off —Tenant, whether can set off manibham as against rent.

Where, admittedly, arrears of rent are due on a holding; and, admittedly also, a certain sum of money is due from the landlord to the tenant for manibham, the tenant is not entitled to set off what is due to him against the rent. Section 192 (e of the Madras Estates Land Act distinctly negatives the right of the tenant to plead any set-off as a defence to a claim for rent.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 17 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Sattur, in Original Suit No. 334 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. R. Krishnamachariar and S. Soundararaja Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The lower Court erred in recognising the set-off. It must come under some provision or other of the Madras Estates Land Act. The only provisions relating to set-off are those contained in sections 155 and 192 (e). Section 155 relates to set-off in cases of eviction. Under section 192 (e) no set-off is allowed in claims of rent. The tenant's claim for manibham can only be separately enforced. The landlord can claim for the arrears and the distraint proceedings are not illegal.

Mr. K. Jagannadha Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The set-off was made outside Court and the prohibition in section 192 (e) does not apply. The landlord is only entitled to claim the balance of the rent due to him.

JUDGMENT.—We are constrained to differ from the Subordinate Judge on the question of set-off: admittedly arrears were due on the holding, admittedly also a certain sum of money was due from the landlord to the tenant for manibham. The tenant deducted the manibham from the rent and paid the balance. The landlord appropriated the payment towards the rent and distrained for the arrears. The property was sold. This suit is to set aside the sale on the ground, among various others, that the sale was illegal.

The Subordinate Judge has held that the tenants were by custom entitled to set off the manibham due to them against the rent and that therefore there were no arrears: We are unable to agree with him. There are two sections in the Madras Estates Land Act which relate to set off, sections 155 and 192 (e). In the first section a right of set off outside Court is given when there is eviction. That has no application to the present case. In the second section, the Legislature distinctly negatives the right of the tenant to plead any set-off as a defence to a claim for rent. It is contended for the respondents that as the set off was made outside the Court, this prohibition does not affect the tenants, But it must be remembered that prima facie each of the two claims referred to by us is mutual and independent. Unless one party chooses to recognize the claim of the other and agrees to arrive at an amicable settlement, it cannot be said that the action of one of them in deducting what is due to him from what is due from him is binding on the other. Nor can it be said that by the action of the tenants, the right of the landlord to the arrears of rent was put an end to. We must, therefore, hold that there were arrears when the distraint proceedings commenced; the further question is whether the attachment and sale were regular. This question has not been considered by the lower Court, as it was unnecessary to decide it and the other questions in the view it took. We must reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge and remand the appeal for disposal on the other points raised in the issues. Costs will abide the result.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 253 (4)—Partnership—Partners, liability of, for negligence, extent of—Duty of partners.

Where in a suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts, the defendants are charged with negligence and contribution is claimed in respect of losses, if the defendants can show that they used such skill and judgment as they possessed in the conduct of the business, they will not be liable to indemnify the plaintiffs for the losses. [p. 4, col. 1.]

The rule of diligence among partners, in the absence of any specific agreement, is that they are not always obliged to use that middle kind of diligence which prudent men employ in their own affairs, they are secure if they act in partnership affairs as they would do in their own, so that if a partner fall into error in the management from want of a larger share of prudence and skill than he is truly master of, he is not liable for the consequences. Good faith is required in a partner as well as diligence and if a partner is guilty of gross negligence, unskilfulness, fraud, or wanton misconduct in the course of the partnership business, he is ordinarily responsible to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Purulia (Manbhum.)

Messrs. Haribhusan Mukherji, Naresh Chandra Sinha and Shishir Kumar Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. C. Roy and Panchanan Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts in respect of a business carried on under the name and style of the Fatka Coal Company. It is now admitted that the shares of the various partners were as follows:—

Plaintiffs Man Gobinda Chandra and Indra Narain Chandra	... 4 annas.
Defendant No. 1	... 2 annas.
Defendant No. 2	... 2 annas.
Defendant No. 3	... 2 annas.
Defendant No. 4	... 1 anna 8 gandas and 2 karas.
Defendant No. 5	... 1 anna 8 gandas and 2 karas
Defendant No. 6	... 18 gandas 3 karas.
Defendant Nos. 7 to 10	... 18 gandas 3 karas.
Defendant No. 11	... 1 anna 2 gandas 3 karas.
Defendant No. 13 Fulkumari	... 3 gandas 3 karas.

It is also now admitted that the business began in 1905.

The suit was instituted on the 19th of July 1911. A preliminary decree was made on the 9th of July 1912 and on the 20th of July 1912 Babu Amaresh Chandra Mukherji was appointed Receiver. The Receiver submitted his report on the 29th of May 1916 and the final decree was made on the 4th of August of that year. The Court found that defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 were jointly liable to pay Rs. 4,025-14-6 to the plaintiff, Rs. 2,196-5 9 to defendant No. 2, Rs. 2,459-14-0 to defendant No. 3, Rs. 156 4 3 to defendant No. 6, Rs. 1,050 7-0 to defendants Nos. 7 to 10, Rs 1,381-4-6 to defendant No. 11 and Rs. 221-14-3 to defendant No. 13.

The individual liabilities of defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 were ascertained to be respectively as follows:—

Defendant No. 1 ... Rs. 6,381-1-9.
Defendant No. 4 ... Rs. 2,348 2 9,
Defendant No. 5 ... Rs. 2,712-11-9.

Against this decree the present appeal is preferred by defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5.

The plaintiffs allege that the managing partners of the business from its inception in 1905 to March 1910 were defendants Nos. 1 and 4, and from April 1910 to August 1912 when the Receiver took possession the managing partner was the defendant No. 3. They charge these defendants with negligence and claim contribution in respect of a large number of items.

The first question is whether defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 were managing partners at all. Now it is said that the managing partners are named in the partnership deed, but that deed is not forthcoming. The defendants say that plaintiff Man Gobinda was managing partner from 1905 till July 1907 and that the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 managed from August 1907 to April 1910, after which defendant No. 3 took charge and managed the business till the Receiver was appointed.

It appears, however, from the written statements printed at pages 4, 5, 7, 9, and 10 of the paper-book that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 were the managing partners from the commencement till March 1910 and defendant No. 3 from April 1910 till August 1912. The allegation that the plaintiff Man Gobinda was the managing partner at any time has not been made out. But it is clear that he, from December 1905 down to about the middle of 1906, took a very active interest in the management of the colliery. He was actually living at the colliery and in constant communication with defendant No. 4 about various matters connected with its management. This is proved by the letters dated 22nd December 1905 (page 42 of the paper-book), 28th December 1905 (page 43), 14th January 1906 (page 44), 29th Magh 1312 (page 41), 3rd March 1906 (page 36), 11th March 1908 (page 45), 14th March 1906 (page 41). This is also clear from the letter written on the 25th of February 1911 by A. K. Bhar, the manager of defendants Nos. 1 and 4, in answer to Man Gobinda's request for a list of the debts which were about to become barred. He sent him the list printed at page 110 of the paper-book and asked him either to institute a suit jointly with the other partners or to execute the necessary power-of-attorney in favour of some one. Therefore Man Gobinda's present allegation that he was entirely ignorant of what was going on cannot for a moment be accepted, and it has been established he was taking a very keen interest in the management of the colliery during the period when defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 were the actual managing partners. So much so that on the 2nd of November 1906 (see letter Exhibit 6, page 113, of the paper-book) defendant No. 4 was obliged to write to Man Gobinda and complain of his general interference in the management of the business, and in particular of his entering into correspondence with the firm of M. L. Laik and Banerji regarding the price at which coal was to be sold to them by the Fatka Coal Company. I think, therefore, that the Subordinate Judge was right in accepting the finding of the Commissioner in regard to this part of the case.

It is next necessary to consider to what extent the defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 are liable to contribute for losses.

The learned Vakil for the appellants relies upon clause 2 of section 253 of the Indian Contract Act, which enacts that all partners are entitled to share equally in the profits of the partnership business and must contribute equally towards losses sustained by the partnership business. The learned Vakil for the respondents, on the other hand, relies upon the proposition that the managing partners were trustees and as such are liable for every loss that has been incurred during their management. The learned Vakil also relies upon Rowe v. Wood (1), but that case does not carry him very far, because it merely decides that one partner cannot exclude another from an equal management of the concern, that it is the duty of each to keep precise accounts, to have them always ready for inspection and to keep good faith towards the other. It is said, however, that the defendants as trustees departed from the strict line of their duty and are, therefore, liable. If this could be shown they would, in my opinion, be liable whether as partners or as trustees, but, in my opinion, the evidence falls far short of this. If again it is sought to make them liable on the ground of negligence, then the law is different for trustees and partners. A trustee is bound to use the prudence and skill which an ordinary person would take of his own similar affairs. On the other hand, the rule of diligence, in the absence of any specific agreement on the point among partners, has been laid down in the civil law as follows "partners are not always obliged to use that middle kind of diligence which prudent men employ in their own affairs, they are secure if they act in the partnership affair as they would do in their own; so that if a partner fall into error in the management from want of a larger share of prudence and skill than he was truly master of, he is not liable for the consequences, for the partners are themselves to blame in not making choice of an associate of greater abilities, and can recover only for the consequences of gross faults" (Digest 17, 2, 52,). Good faith is required in a partner as well as diligence and if a partner is guilty of gross negligence, unskilfulness, fraud, or wanton misconduct in the course of the partnership business, he is ordinarily responsible to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby [Law v. Law (2)]. The rule is really a part of the law of agency and is, therefore reproduced under that head in section 212 of the Indian Contract Act.

If, therefore, it can be shown that the defendants used such skill and judgment as they possessed, they are not liable to indemnify the plaintiffs for the losses; and I quote below a passage from Cragg v. Ford (3), which seems to me to put the law very clearly. In that case the question was whether the defendant was to be charged with the loss which had arisen from delaying the sale of some cotton belonging to the partnership. The defendant was the managing partner and was found to have been the person principally entrusted with the charge of management of the business and the winding up of its affairs. The Vice Chancellor, Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, observed as follows: "The plaintiff was, I think, entitled to have the cotton sold sooner than it was and sold at a time when the loss would have been wholly or to a great extent obviated. Under the circumstances if it had been established and proved that the defendant had acted fraudulently or had beyond merely refusing to sell so acted as to prevent the plaintiff from selling, it is very possible that I might have acceded to the plaintiff's demand seeking to charge the defendant with the loss; but fraud is out of the question. The defendant, whether wisely or unwisely, yet, as it must, I think, be taken, in the honest exercise of his judgment, considered that the sale, which was a matter in which he was interested as well as the plaintiff, ought to be delayed; the plaintiff, for anything that appears, might himself have sold the cotton or have taken measures for its sale or have himself possessed of it."

Bearing these observations in view, I now proceed to take up each item in regard to which the learned Vakil for the appellants has addressed us.

The finding of the trial Court in respect of the other items of the Commissioner's report has not been challenged or if challenged at the beginning of the learned Vakil's address, was eventually accepted on the ground that the items were small and that it was not worth while re-opening the finding in this Court.

As regards defendant No. 1,—item No. 20. This is a sum of Rs. 722-11-6 charged against defendant No. 1 alone, for coal sold by the Fatka Colliery to the Dhadka Colliery of which defendant No. 1 was a partner. It is said that the debt has become barred owing to the negligence of defendant No. 1, who being a partner in the Dhadka Colliery profited by that negligence. No reason has been given why a suit was not brought in time to recover this debt.

The liability to contribute would prima facie fall upon defendants Nos. 1 and 4. The Subordinate Judge appears, however, to have fixed the whole liability upon defendant No. 1 on the ground that he was a proprietor in the Dhadka Colliery and, therefore, stood to profit more than defendant No. 4. He also seems to have been influenced by the consideration that the defendant No. 1 was jointly and severally liable for the whole debt with his co partners in the Dhadka Colliery. The learned Vakil for the respondents supports this view of the case by referring to section 249 of the Indian Contract Act. The answer, however, is that there is no reliable evidence that defendant No. 1 was in fact a proprietor in the Dhadka Colliery at the time that the debt was incurred. On the contrary the evidence of Debendra Nath Chatterjee at page 56 of the paper-book shows definitely that defendant No. 1 was not a partner then. There is also no evidence to show that the debt was incurred by the Dhadka Colliery for the purpose of the partnership business. Therefore section 249 of the Contract Act will not assist the plaintiffs. But on the charge of negligence I think the plaintiffs ought to succeed. It has not been shown to us that the plaintiffs had any notice of this debt. It was contended by the defendants before the Subordinate Judge that notice was given to the Receiver, but of this there is no evidence before us. There being a complete absence of evidence that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 exercised their usual skill and prudence, we must hold that defendants Nos. 1 and 4 are liable equally.

(2) (1905) 1 Ch. 140; 74 L. J. Ch. 169; 92 L. T. 1; 53 W. R. 227; 21 T. L. R. 102.

Items charged against defendants Nos. 1 and 5: No. 34, a sum of Rs. 8,345-2-3, and No. 13, a sum of Rs 588-10 0. The former sum represents money recoverable from the firm of J. L. Banerji and Co., which was subsequently amalgamated with the firm of M. L. Laik and Banerji, and the latter sum represents money due from the firm of M. L. Laik and Banerji. The firm of M. L. Laik and Banerji has gone into liquidation since the amalgamation, and the Fatka Coal Company being creditors should have proved their debt in insolvency. This apparently was not done and defendants Nos. 1 and 5 have been made liable, firstly, because there was negligence on their part in recovering the debts, and secondly, because they are two of the partners of the insolvent firm.

From a petition dated the 4th of September 1913 in the High Court of Calcutta printed at page 114 of the paper-book, it would seem that the insolvents showed a part of the debt in their schedule. After the institution of the present suit the defendants pleaded that the Official Assignee who was representing the insolvent firm should have been made a party and that contention was accepted on the 5th March 1912. It will be remembered that the Receiver was appointed in July of that year, and it was open to the plaintiffs to obtain an order from the Court directing the Receiver to prove the debts before the Official Assignee. It is idle for the plaintiffs to say that they had no responsibility in the matter. The Receiver deposes that he does not remember receiving any notice of the debt, but it is quite clear that the Official Assignee was made a party because he was a debtor and the plaintiffs had full knowledge of his liability.

Let us next see whether there was gross negligence on the part of defendants Nos. 1 and 5. Defendant No. 5 certainly was never a managing partner and as for defendant No. 1, although he was a managing partner at a time when a part of these debts was incurred, there is no finding that he did not act in the ordinary course of business and with all the prudence and skill which he possessed.

But it is said that it was the duty of defendant No. 1 to sue J. L. Banerji and Co. and M. L. Laik and Co. before the insolvency. That again depends on evidence. In the present case it has not been shown that defendant No. 1 had notice of the pending insolvency of M. L. Laik and Banerji. The evidence is that the purchasers were old customers, and I am satisfied that defendant No. 1 exercised his usual prudence in giving credit to them. That there was bona fides on his part is clear from the following circumstance.

On the 25th of February 1911 his manager submitted a list of debts about to become barred to plaintiff Man Gobinda. The debt of J. L. Banerji and Co. is item No. 15 in this list. The last transaction with J. L. Banerji and Co. appears from this list to have taken place in June 1909. It was open, therefore, to the plaintiff to bring a suit for its realisation.

I may also notice that on the 10th of October 1909 the plaintiff Company held a meeting at which the assets and liabilities up to the month of June were examined and the manager was directed to take steps for the realisation of the dues and to inform the partners of the final result, and the plaintiff Man Gobinda's son Kunja was directed to sign the Daily Cash Book. The manager, as has already been seen, pressed for the institution of suits but no action was taken by the partners.

In these circumstances neither defendant No. 1 nor defendant No. 5 can be held liable on the ground of negligence.

The other ground on which it is sought to make defendants Nos. 1 and 5 liable is section 249 of the Indian Contract Act. That section would, no doubt, be applicable if it could be shown that the debts were incurred in the usual course of business by or on behalf of the partnership. There is a complete absence of evidence on this point and, therefore, section 249 would not apply.

Therefore the result I arrive at is that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge in regard to items Nos. 34 and 43 must be set aside.

Debts charged against defendants Nos. 1 and 4, item No. 28, a sum of Rs. 5,599-12-0 remaining due from one Hari Lal Nagar on account of the price of coal sold to him, and item No. 51, a sum of Rs. 2,005-8-0 due from R. N. Biswas for the same reason.

It is alleged that the defendants Nos. 1 and 4 have by their negligence allowed these debts to become barred. It appears that the last transaction with Hari Lal Nagar was in February 1909 and the last transaction with Biswas in June 1909, so that the debts did not become barred till after the suit was instituted. The case of the plaintiffs is that there was collusion between defendants Nos. 1 and 4 and Hari Lal Nagar, that Biswas was a fictitious person and that the sums alleged to be due from both have been really misappropriated by the defendants. The case of the defendants is that Hari Lal Nagar and Biswas were both old customers and it would have been folly to bring a suit against them till the last moment.

With regard to Hari Lal Nagar, it is said that he was a man from Rajputana and that he absconded because owing to a sudden drop in the price of coal his business failed, and that the defendants after due enquiry were totally unable to ascertain his whereabouts between 1909 and 1911. With regard to Biswas they deny that he is a fictitious person.

Now the evidence upon which it is argued that Biswas was a fictitious person consists of the testimony of Debendra Nath Chattopadhya, witness No. 2 for the defendants, but that testimony is of the vaguest description. I am not at all satisfied that there is any substance whatever in the allegation that Biswas was not an old and reliable customer to whom the defendants were justified in giving credit.

With regard to Hari Lal Nagar it is established that he was an old customer, but it is said that the defendants should have brought a suit against him and made substituted service under Order I, rule 8, Civil Procedure Code.

It is also contended as regards both Hari Lal Nagar and Biswas that it was the duty of the defendants to bring a suit between 1909 and 1911. I find no evidence of dishonesty or fraud. At most there was an error of judgment and the defendants are, in my opinion, exempted from liability upon the principle enunciated in Cragg v. Ford (3). It is also to be observed that in the list of debts about to become barred at page 110 of the paper book both these debts appear; also that in the proceedings of the Company of October 1909 the accounts up to June 1909 (presumably including these debts) were passed by the Company. In my opinion the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge as regards both these items must be set aside.

Item No. 52. This was a small sum of Rs. 173-7-3 representing the price of coal purchased by Sachindra Nath Bose, a clerk employed by the Company. This clerk fell ill, took leave and died during his leave. The defendants plead that the clerk had due to him some pay and as he was an employee, the net balance due from him was treated as an advance of salary. The managing partners had implied authority to make an advance of this kind, which, in my opinion, was for the benefit of the business. The finding of the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, in my opinion, erroneous and must be set aside.

The result, therefore, is that defendant No. 1 succeeds as to half of item No. 20 (involving a sum of Rs. 361), half of items Nos. 24 and 43 (involving respectively Rs. 4,172 and Rs. 299), half of items Nos. 28 and 51 (involving respectively Rs. 2,799 and Rs. 1,002). Defendant No. 4 succeeds as regards half of items Nos. 28 and 51. Defendant No. 5 succeeds as regards half of items Nos. 34 and 43. The appeal is accordingly decreed to this extent in favour of defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 respectively.

In regard to the rest of the items covered by the appeal which is valued at a total of Rs. 19,171, the appeal fails. The successes of defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 amount to Rs 16,698, and they will jointly get costs in proportion to this sum and will pay costs in proportion in respect of the balance to the respondents. The costs awarded to defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5 will be shared by them equally.

As regards the lower Court we decline to interfere with the calculation of the costs awarded by that Court.

The necessary corrections should, therefore, be made in column 4 of the statement submitted by the Receiver and printed at page 105 of the paper-book and a decree prepared accordingly.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I entirely agree.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—Costs —Discretion of Court, exercise of, interference with, when permissible.

The discretion of a Court as to the award of costs, so long as it is judicially exercised, should not be bound down by any artificial rules, and, where a suit is based on a state of law which has since been overruled either by Statute or by the decision of a superior Tribunal, it would be a sound exercise of discretion to disallow costs. Much, however, depends upon the facts of each case, and upon its presentation by the party and upon the authorities existing at the time the suit was launched. [p. 8, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge of Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 232 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the 1st Additional District Munsif, Coimbatore, in Original Suit No. 14 of 1915.

FACTS.—The question was whether a mortgage could constitute an antecedent debt for a subsequent alienation of joint family property. Relying on the decision reported as Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (1) an appeal was filed in the High Court. While the appeal was pending, a Full Bench of five Judges upset the decision in Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (1) and consequently the appeal became fruitless and the appellant applied to withdraw it without costs. The respondent claimed them on principle. The question as to costs alone was argued.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Advocate General, for the Appellants.—The question is not whether a party is to be deprived of his costs, but whether he is to be given his costs. For the award of costs is a matter in the discretion of the Court to which no party can put forward an indefeasible right. The English Law is the same. Robinson v. Rosher (2), Sutton Harbour Improvement Company v. Hitchens (3) and Lancashire and Yorkshire Ry., Co. v. Evan (4). Where the appeal was filed because of the uncertainty of the law, the Court ruled that the parties should bear their own costs. Baluswami Aiyer v. Venkitaswamy Naicken (5). Misconduct is not the sole ground for not giving costs. Forster v. Farquhar (6).

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The Code of Civil Procedure is imperative that costs "shall" follow the event: section 35, Civil Procedure Code. So that even though a certain latitude is allowed to the Courts, the Courts are bound to record reasons if costs are to be disallowed. I submit that the real test is whether it would be unfair to the unsuccessful party. Where a plaintiff comes to enforce a legal right and there has been no misconduct on his part, no omission or neglect which would induce the Court to deprive him of his costs, the Court has no discretion and cannot take away the plaintiff's right as to costs. Kuppuswami Chetty v. Zamindar of Kalahasti (7). See also Vembu Iyer v. Srinivasa Iyengar (8). The Chancery Courts follow the same rule. See Order LXV, rule 1 of the Rules of the Supreme Court. See also Daniel's Chancery Practice (8th Edition), Volume II, page 1042. The test is given in Forster v. Farquhar (6). See also Sutton Harbour Improvement Company v. Hitchens (3).

JUDGMENT.—Following the Full Bench decision in Arumugham Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (9) we hold that this second appeal fails and dismiss it. The learned Advocate-General who appeared for the appellant did not argue the second appeal, but contended that as it was filed after the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (10) and on the strength of Badagala Jogi Naidu v. Bendalam Papiah Naidu (1) in which Spencer and Krishnan, JJ., interpreted the Privy Council ruling to mean that a deed of mortgage cannot be relied on as an antecedent debt, this Court should not direct the appellants to pay the respondents' costs. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, on the other hand, contended that unless there was misconduct on the part of the successful party or unless it would be manifestly unjust on the merits of the case to visit the defeated party with costs, costs should follow the event. There can be no doubt that the rule enunciated in section 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure as to costs is wider than the English rule (Order LXV, rule 1) as to actions tried by a Jury, which enjoins on the Judge to withhold the costs for the successful party only for good cause shown. Even under the English rule, Bowen, L. J., pointed out that in order to deprive the successful party of his costs it is not necessary to prove that the opposite party has been guilty of misconduct. See Forster v. Farquhar (6) Mr. Justice North in Walter v. Steinkopff (11) said that the discretion of the presiding Judge is not taken away because he has to decide a bare legal question. The strict rule which was enunciated by Jessel, M. R., in Cooper v. Whittingham (12) has been practically abandoned in these two cases. Mr. Justice Subrahmania Aiyar in Kuppuswami Chetty v Zamindar of Kalahasti (7) has based his judgment on the dictum of the Master of the Rolls which is no longer law in England. Further, for the present case, there is direct authority in Robinson v. Rosher (2) and Sutton Harbour Improvement Company v. Hitchens (3), wherein it has been pointed out that it would be a sound exercise of discretion to refuse costs where a suit was based on a state of law which has since been overruled either by an Act of Parliament or by a superior Tribunal. In our opinion, the above principles are deducible a fortiori from the language of section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Under the Indian Law it can safely be stated that the discretion of the Court as to the award of costs, so long as it is judicially exercised, should not be bound down by any artificial rules. A great deal must depend upon the facts of each case and upon its presentation by the party and upon circumstances and authorities which were pre-existing before the suit was launched. In the present case the 1st defendant has been responsible for the whole of the litigation, neither the plaintiffs nor the other defendants have been guilty of any act of commission or omission which can be charged against them. If the judgment of the Divisional Bench had stood, the appellants might have succeeded. That is a consideration which cannot altogether be ignored in apportioning costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15, Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Order permitting execution subject to furnishing security, effect of—Stay of execution—Exclusion of time.

The appellant obtained a decree from the High Court on 4th July 1913, and on 13th December instituted execution proceedings and attached certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The latter, having applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree, petitioned the High Court in January 1914 to stay execution of the decree pending the decision of the Privy Council. On this application the High Court on 27th January 1914 passed an order directing execution to proceed upon the decree-holder giving security to the satisfaction of the executing Court for the due performance of any order made by the Privy Council. The Court, on 17th February 1914, fixed the amount of the security and called upon the decree-holder to furnish the same in one month. Owing to the inability of the decree-holder to provide the security the Court, on 28th March 1914, dismissed the execution proceeding. On 18th October 1916 the judgment-debtor's appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed for want of prosecution. On 12th April 1918 the decree-holder again applied for execution, but the judgment-debtor objected that the application was barred owing to the expiration of more than three years from the date the last step was taken, i. e, the 13th December 1913. The decree-holder contended that under section 15 of the Limitation Act, the period between the 27th January 1914, when the High Court made the order directing execution to proceed on the furnishing of security, and the 18th October 1916, where the judgment-debtor's appeal was dismissed, should not be computed in the period of limitation. The Court, being of opinion that section 15 of the Limitation Act did not apply as the High Court's order of the 27th January 1914 was not an order staying execution, held that execution was barred by limitation. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court:

Held, that the order of the High Court of the 27th January 1914, whatever the form of it, did in fact in the circumstances, stay the execution of the decree; that apart from any order, the decree-holder already had the right to proceed with the execution, and an order in form allowing him to do that which he was otherwise entitled to do unconditionally but imposing a condition which was impossible of performance and thereby depriving him of his right, was an order depriving him of the right, he otherwise would have had, to continue the execution proceedings, just as much as if the order had been one in form staying execution until the condition was performed and, as the condition could not be performed, the effect was to stay execution altogether; and that, under section 15 of the Limitation Act, the time which had elapsed between the 27th January 1914 and the 18th October 1916 should not be reckoned in computing the period of limitation for filing the execution petition. [p. 10, col. 2; p. 11, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated the 14th September 1918.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and N. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated the 14th September 1918 passed in execution proceedings, wherein he allowed the judgment-debtor's objection that the appellant's application for execution of his decree was barred by limitation.

On the 4th July 1913 the appellant obtained a decree from the High Court at Calcutta declaring his title to possession of certain property together with mesne profits and costs, the latter item amounting to something between four and five thousand rupees. On the 13th December in the same year he instituted execution proceedings and attached certain property belonging to the judgment debtor in order to realise the amount of the costs awarded under the decree. The judgment-debtor, having applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the 4th July 1913, filed a petition in January 1914 praying the High Court to stay execution of the decree pending the decision of their Lordships, and on the 27th January 1914 the High Court on that application made the following order:—

"We will allow the decree appealed from to be executed upon the opposite party giving such security as the lower Court may think fit for the due performance of any order which His Majesty in Council may make."

On the 17th February the lower Court fixed the security at Rs. 50,000 to be furnished by the decree-holder in one month from the date. The decree holder, whose financial resources were admittedly insufficient for the purpose, was unable to provide the security which was a condition precedent to his right to proceed in the execution and on the 28th March 1914, as no security had been furnished within the time allowed, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the execution proceeding, the order on that occasion being "No step taken. Dismissed in default." On the 18th October 1916, the judgment-debtor's appeal to His Majesty in Council, which had been admitted by the High Court at Calcutta more than two years previously, was dismissed for want of prosecution. On the 12th April 1918, the decree holder again filed an application for execution of the decree of the 4th July 1913. The judgment-debtor subsequently filed an objection in that execution proceeding contending that it was barred by the expiration of more than three years from the date when the last step was taken, viz., on the 13th December 1913. The decree holder on the other hand contended that under the provisions of section 15 of the Limitation Act the period between the 27th January 1914, when the High Court made the order allowing execution to proceed subject to the decree holder providing security, and the 18th October 1916 when the judgment-debtor's appeal to the Privy Council was dismissed for want of prosecution, should not be taken into consideration in computing the period of limitation.

The objection was heard on the 14th September 1918 and the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the order of the High Court of the 27th January 1914 was not an order staying execution within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act, and held that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation.

It is from this order that the present appeal is brought. No reported case has been referred to us in which the application of section 15 of the Limitation Act to an order such as the present has been considered. It is contended on behalf of the respondent-judgment-debtor that the order is not one staying execution, but in fact an order allowing execution to proceed subject to a condition to be performed by the decree-holder, and the latter's inability to execute the decree is not due to any order of the Court staying the execution but to his own default in providing security.

The decree-holder-appellant on the other hand contends that whatever be the form of the order, it in substance restricts his right to proceed with the execution and in fact stays the execution by imposing upon him an obligation which it was impossible for him, in the circumstances, to comply with. In support of his contention we have been referred to an unreported case decided by the Calcutta High Court and mentioned in the notes portion of the Calcutta Weekly Notes, Vol. XVII at page CLI [Chidam Santya v. Shaik Pachumuddin Naik (1)], in which the material facts are similar to the present case and was a decision in his favour. In my opinion the order of the High Court, whatever be the form of it, did in fact, in the circumstances of this case, stay the execution of the decree. It must be remembered that, admittedly, the decree-holder was not in a position to provide the security demanded. Had he been in a position to do so and had, nevertheless, purposely refrained from providing the security, different considerations might arise in considering whether there was any default on his part which contributed to the non prosecution of the execution proceedings, but such was not the case. In my opinion it is essential to look at the real effect of the order and not merely at the form. The effect in the present case was undoubtedly to stay the execution of the decree unless a condition impossible of performance were complied with by the decree-holder, and I do not think that the stay of proceedings can be attributed to his default simply because the condition imposed was beyond his power to comply with. Apart from any order, he already had the right, notwithstanding the appeal from the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council, to proceed with the execution and an order in form allowing him to do that which he was otherwise entitled to do unconditionally but imposing a condition which was impossible of performance and thereby depriving him of his right, is an order depriving him of the right he otherwise would have had to continue the execution proceedings just as much as if the order had been one in form staying execution until the condition was performed and as the condition could not be performed, the effect was to stay execution altogether. This view is to some extent supported by the decision in the case of Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mungree Ram Chowdhry (2) in 1873, where an order was made staying execution of a decree unless security was given pending an appeal from the decree to the Privy Council. It was there held that the time which elapsed between the date of the conditional stay order and the date of the decision by the Privy Council should not be counted in computing the period of limitation for taking execution proceedings. In my opinion the effect of the order in question clearly brought about the state of circumstances contemplated by section 15 of the Limitation Act, and I hold accordingly that the time which elapsed between the 27th January 1914 and the 18th October 1916 should not be reckoned in computing the period of limitation for filing the execution petition. If that period of time be deducted, the application of the 12th April 1918 is not time-barred. A further point was taken by the appellant that the second application for execution should be regarded as a continuation of the previous proceedings, but the view already expressed makes it unnecessary to consider this question. In the result the appeal is allowed with costs here and in the lower Court. The order appealed from is set aside and the Subordinate Judge is directed to proceed with the execution proceedings according to law.

FOSTER, J.—I agree with the view taken by the learned Chief Justice that section 15 of the Limitation Act is applicable to this particular case and that the appeal should be allowed. At first I was impressed by the argument advanced on the side of the respondent that the High Court order, passed undeniably under Order XLV, rule 13 (2) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, was in its express terms not an order of stay or injunction in the technical legal sense, but an order permitting the execution pending the judgment debtor's appeal to His Majesty in Council, the permission being qualified only by an order that the executing Court should fix and require security. On the other side the appellant argues that (as is recognised in the first part of rule 13) he had the right then existing to proceed with his execution, and the judgment-debtor moved the High Court to restrict that right, giving as his reason the fact that the decree-holder had no property. So, he urges, the parties and the Court were in agreement that the decree-holder, who was directed to furnish security, could not do so, and the order for security would in effect be a stay of execution.

These being the arguments, the question is whether section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act is confined to cases of direct stay or injunction or can be extended to orders which indirectly but very proximately and effectually cause a stay. I do not think an acceptance of the latter proposition will unduly strain the interpretation of the section. Looking at rule 14 of Order XLV, I see that the High Court is empowered to increase the security to be required from the decree holder-respondent in the Privy Council appeal; the object manifestly being to ensure a full indemnification of the judgment-debtor appealing to His Majesty in Council. It is there provided that if the increased security be not furnished, the Court "shall as far as may be practicable, stay the further execution of the decree." It seems to me reasonable to gather from this that if the law requires a stay in default of part of the security, a stay must be the inevitable and necessary consequence of a default in respect of the whole security. In the present case the whole security was estimated and required, so the High Court's order necessarily implied a stay of execution in case of failure to furnish it.

So the order passed under Order XLV, rule 13 (2) (b), is in substance a restriction on an existing right to execute a decree; it is an inhibitory order suspending that right by an order nisi. The suspension was made absolute by the Subordinate Judge's order dismissing the execution on the 20th March 1915. In Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mungree Ram

(2) 19 W. R. 186.

Chowdhry (2) it was held that where a judgment-debtor, who has appealed to the Privy Council, obtains a Rule nisi from the High Court suspending execution until security is given, and this Rule is subsequently made absolute, it does not operate against the decree-holder in the matter of time; limitation not running against him until the result of the appeal is known, or the Rule otherwise falls to the ground; and the Court based its decision on the necessary effect of the High Court's order. No doubt that case was governed by Act XIV of 1859 (vide section 1, Act IX of 1871), but I find so highly esteemed a work as Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Commentary on the Civil Procedure Code quoting it as still an authority bearing upon Order XLV, rule 13, of the Code. It may be argued that the Subordinate Judge's order was of no effect, and that the decree-holder could, if he had the will and the means, have come into Court immediately after the order of dismissal of his execution and offered the security and demanded re-opening of the execution. I do not accede to this proposition. In my opinion the High Court's order of the 27th January 1914 left the terms of the order for security to the Subordinate Judge, and the terms of such an order in usual practice include a provision as to the time within which security is to be furnished. As examples of this practice, I would take the provisions for security in Order XLV, rule 1, and in Order XLI, rule 10, of the Code; in both cases the time fixed by the Court is an essential part of the order. A contrary opinion would involve great hardship and expense to a judgment-debtor; for he would have to remain in uncertainty and on the defensive in the execution case for an indefinite period. So I take it that the Subordinate Judge's dismissal of the execution was a final order passed in due course of law; and that that order constituted in itself an absolute dismissal of the pending execution. My conclusion is that in the circumstances of this particular case the order of the High Court, and what I may call the ancillary orders of the Subordinate Judge, did in fact stay the execution proceedings within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellants quoted and laid stress upon the rule in the Privy Council ruling Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (3). The rule appears to me to be that when in an execution case certain proceedings have intervened to interrupt the course of the execution and that execution has not been finally dismissed and there has subsequently been an application to renew the execution proceedings so interrupted, the second application should be taken to effect a revival of the first application; provided that the interruption has not been caused by any act or default of the decree-holder. But here there was, as I have held, a definite final order dismissing the first application, and there was no application for revival; in fact the second application was a new application for execution in the form prescribed in Order XXI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code. I am, therefore, doubtful as to the applicability of this particular rule.

On the other hand I have, as the result of a full consideration of the facts of this particular case, arrived at the conclusion that limitation is, and in fact can only be, saved by the terms of section 15 of the Limitation Act.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 18th April 1918, affirming that of the Officiating Munsif, 2nd Court at Maldah, dated the 19th March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Phanindra Lal Maitra, for the Appellant.—In the lease which the plaintiff's father executed in favour of the superior landlord, it is stated that he originally held 74 bighas of land and he took 50 bighas more and consolidated them into one. There is no evidence as to what was the character of the tenancy which he originally held, and the terms embodied in the kabuliyat are consistent with the right of either a tenure-holder or a raiyat. Therefore as the area held was more than 100 bighas at the time when the defendant took the lease, the presumption under section 5, clause (5), of the Bengal Tenancy Act shall arise.

Subsequent conduct also supports the view that the plaintiff was a tenure-holder. He let out all the lands to tenants at a money rent. He was silent in his plaint as to whether he was an occupancy raiyat or not. In the kabuliyat which the defendant executed and was accepted by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's title was not specifically described. Everywhere we find the term which may mean a tenure-holder or a raiyat. Therefore, if it be so, the defendant is either a non-occupancy raiyat or an occupancy raiyat.

If he is a non-occupancy raiyat for a term, as the term expired in Kartik 1320 and as the suit was brought in Magh 1322, i. e., more than six months after the suit is barred by limitation under the special provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

If he is an occupancy raiyat, no cause has been shown for the ejectment.

Now if the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat and the defendant an under-raiyat, there is evidence on the record showing that he was allowed to hold over.

In the written statement the defendant pleaded that even if he was an under-raiyat, by local custom or usage he had acquired a right of occupancy and there was an issue to that effect. The first Court held that he was an under-raiyat. The Appellate Court did not consider the point.

As the Court proceeded wrongly in not deciding the point it must have gone into, the defendant is entitled to a specific finding on that point.

As to the construction of the kabuliyat where it is stated that the defendant held the land as ichhadhin uchhed joggya korfa praja swarup, the meaning is ambiguous.

If he is a tenant-at-will liable to eviction, how can he be a tenant for a term?

The defendant was holding land long since and after the execution of the kabuliyat, defendant continued to possess the same land for the same rent. Therefore, there was no necessity for a fresh kabuliyat and there was no consideration for that contract. Hence the kabuliyat is void for want of consideration and inadmissible in evidence.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chakraburty (with him Babu Nishit Nath Ghatak), for the Respondent.—The plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat, as can be gathered from the kabuliyat. Manmatha Nath v. Anath Bandhu Pal (1) refered to.

The Court below has come to a finding of fact as to the occupancy right for the term of the lease.

The term of nine years is only restricted to under-raiyats.

Holding over does not give him any right without the consent of the landlord.

Other points were not taken in the lower Court.

Babu Phanindra Lal Maitra briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the lands in dispute, on the allegation that the defendants were under-raiyats holding under a lease which had expired. The main defence was that the defendants were not under-raiyats but raiyats and that the plaintiff himself was a tenure-holder.

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 222; 23 C. W. N. 201 at p. 206.

GURUSWAMI PANTULU v. BUDHKARAN LALL.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the plaintiff was an occupancy raiyat and that the defendant, therefore, was an under-raiyat.

The principal contention of the appellant before us is that the lower Appellate Court ought to have held that the interest of the plaintiff was that of a tenure-holder. It is pointed out that the area of the land exceeds 100 bighas and, therefore, the presumption arises that he was a tenure holder, that the kabuliyat itself states that the plaintiff had been holding 75 bighas of land from before and that by the kabuliyat another 50 bighas of land were taken settlement of, the two jamas being consolidated into one of 125 bighas.

Now in the kabuliyat under which the plaintiff holds the land it is stated:—"If a tenant settles on any portion of the land mentioned in this kabuliyat, I shall surrender to the Sircar that portion according to the local custom. I shall get in exchange for the same lands of similar description from other places....." This indicates that there were no tenants settled on the land at the time the kabuliyat was executed: and not only so but it also shows that the land was not settled with the plaintiff for the purpose of settling tenants on the land. The other terms of the lease rather go to support the view that the lessee was not a tenure-holder. For instance, the lessee was not allowed the right to cut down any tree, nor had he any right to sell, to make a gift of, or transfer any portion of the land in any way. Of course, a tenure-holder also may enter into such a contract; but having regard to all the terms, we think that the Court below has rightly construed the document as showing that the interest created was that of a raiyat. Then again, the kabuliyat executed by the defendant on the 4th Assin 1311 states that he had been holding the land from 1304 as an ichhadhin uchhed joggya korfa praja. These words mean that he has been holding the land as an under-raiyat, liable to be ejected at the will of the landlord, and it is to be observed that this kabuliyat was for a term of nine years.

Having regard to all these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the finding of the Court below, namely, that the interest of the plaintiff was that of a raiyat, is incorrect.

It is next contended that the Court below ought to have considered the question, whether the defendant, even if he was an under-raiyat, had acquired a right of occupancy according to local custom. This question was not urged before the lower Appellate Court. It is necessary to go into questions of fact in order to decide this question. The lower Appellate Court was not asked to consider this question and we cannot allow such a question to be raised here.

The last contention is that the lower Appellate Court has not considered the question whether the defendant has been holding over, in which case he was entitled to a notice to quit.

The Court of first instance found that the defendant had failed to show that the plaintiff realised any rent from him after the expiration of the term of the lease, and the question does not appear to have been urged before the lower Appellate Court.

In these circumstances, we think that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 11, 65—Mortgage by minor, validity of—Minor, whether bound to refund money.

Where a mortgage turns out to be invalid because the mortgagee, at the date of the mortgage, was a minor, he cannot be held liable to refund the mortgage-money even if he misrepresented his age. [p. 16, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Bakewell passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 457 of 1916.

GURUSWAMY PANTULU v. BUDHKARAN LALL.

FACTS will appear from the following judgment of BAKAWELL, J.—Defendants Nos. 3 to 8 represent purchasers at a sale under a mortgage decree obtained by the first mortgagee. Plaintiff is the holder of a registered mortgage who should have been, but was not, made a party to the suit. Plaintiff now sues on his mortgage and is in the same position as if this were a suit against the prior mortgagee and the mortgagor, and defendants Nos. 3 to 8 represent both these parties.

The defendants have pleaded that the plaintiff's mortgage is invalid as having been executed by the 2nd defendant, the mortgagor, during his minority. The 2nd defendant's mother Chellammal was appointed guardian of his person and property by an order, dated the 20th of February 1900, which also empowered her to raise a loan by a mortgage of his property. The petition Exhibit IV, which is verified by the 2nd defendant's mother, recites the members of his family and states that at the date of his father's death, 16th October 1892, he was of the age of seven years or thereabouts and that he was born in or about the beginning of the year 1885. The first witness for the defendants has married a sister of the 2nd defendant, and he states that the 2nd defendant is the last born child of his father and was born in Madras about 1886, and he produces a copy from the Register of Births which he says relates to the 2nd defendant and gives the date of birth of the child therein mentioned as the 13th of January 1886. Persons in the position of the 2nd defendant's mother are generally very inaccurate as to dates; and the first witness for the defendants is also somewhat inaccurate, because he says that the 2nd defendant's father died when he was about five years old, but I see no reason to doubt that that witness was a truthful witness, and having special regard to the fact that he states that the 2nd defendant was the last born child of his father, I accept the Birth Register as giving the date of his birth. The 2nd defendant was, therefore, aged about 18 years and 9 months at the date of the mortgage.

The plaintiff's case has been that he was deceived by the fraudulent representation of the 2nd defendant into the belief that he was of full age at the time of the mortgage. It is evident from the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses that the plaintiff had at the date of the mortgage suspicions as to the true age of the 2nd defendant; he asked the 2nd defendant to produce his horoscope and he produced a copy; one of his witnesses says that the document was pinned on to the mortgage deed; he took a letter from him referring to this horoscope and stating that it shows that he was born in 1883 and he says that he made enquiries of the neighbours. He obtained certificates of encumbrances relating to the property which disclosed a mortgage executed by the 2nd defendant's mother. He says that he made enquiries of the mortgagee and was told that the mortgage had been executed by the 2nd defendant and Chellammal, his mother. According to the plaintiff he was on the verge of discovering that the mortgage had been executed by the guardian of the minor, but he never actually made the discovery. I decline to believe him. If the plaintiff took all these precautions to investigate the title of the 2nd defendant, it is impossible to believe that he did not take the further step of either inspecting the mortgage deed which would probably have shown that it was executed under a title conferred by the Court, or of obtaining further information as to the 2nd defendant's age. The mortgage was executed for various sums advanced in the year 1904. The 2nd defendant was a dissolute young man. The plaintiff seems to have slept upon his rights, professes ignorance even of the sale of the property and made no attempt to obtain any interest on his money, and I think that the circumstances in the case show that he was aware that the 2nd defendant was a minor and took the documents which accompanied the mortgage for the purpose of throwing a favourable colour on the transaction.

The plaintiff's mortgage will, therefore, be declared to be invalid and his suit must be dismissed with costs of two sets of defendants, Nos. 2, 3 and 6 to 8, and of the 5th defendant.

NATHUNI PRASAD v. ANWAR KARIM.

Mr. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the learned Judge that the 2nd defendant was a minor at the date of the mortgage. It was, therefore, invalid and even if he misrepresented his age, he cannot be held liable on principles of equity to refund the money. R. Leslie Limited v. Sheill (1) approved in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yoh Joi Gark (2), both of which have been referred to by this Court in Raghavayya v. Subbayya (3). The appeal is dismissed with costs, one set.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya.

Messrs. Khurshed Husnain, Rai Guru Saran Prasad and Nawal Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs to enforce a mortgage-bond executed by one Tabarak Hussain on the 2nd November 1904. Tabarak Hussain is now represented in this litigation by defendants Nos. 1 to 5. Defendants Nos. 6 to 9 are the subsequent purchasers of two annas of the proprietary interest of Tabarak Hussain in the eight annas of Mouzah Pardhana; defendant No. 11 is the mortgagee in respect of a two-annas mokarari interest in the same property.

The lower Appellate Court has given a modified decree to the plaintiffs, that is to say, it has given them a decree for sale, declaring that the property mentioned in the mortgage-bond is to be sold in case of failure to pay, but that the two-annas share of defendants Nos. 6 to 9 is not to be deemed to be sold in execution of the decree.

The appellants contend that they are entitled, in execution of their mortgage decree, to sell two annas out of the eight-annas share belonging to the mortgagor in village Pardhana free from incumbrance, and that to this extent the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be reversed.

The mortgage bond is perfectly clear on this point. The mortgagor mortgaged his two-annas share out of his eight-annas proprietary interest free from mortgage. The defendants Nos. 6 to 9 have purchased two annas out of the eight-annas share subsequently to the execution of the mortgage, but Mr. Khurshed Hussain, on behalf of the subsequent purchasers, argues before this Court that the mortgagees ought not to throw any portion of the burden on them, and that the equities between the parties can be properly adjusted by allowing the plaintiffs to sell two annas out of the six annas of the proprietary interest of the mortgagor, leaving him two annas free from any incumbrance at all. In this connection, we are unable to agree. It seems to us that the right of the mortgagee is to proceed against any two annas he likes out of the eight-annas proprietary share which was of the mortgagor. That is his right under the mortgage and that right has not been taken away by anything that has happened subsequently.

ABDUL MAJID v. HARI CHARN HALDER.

Defendants Nos. 6 to 9 have purchased the property subsequently to the execution of the mortgage, and they cannot compel the mortgagees to confine themselves to any particular portion of the property. We think, therefore, that this portion of the decree ought to be reversed.

Another question that has been argued before us by Mr. Rajendra Prasad on behalf of the appellants is, that, on a proper construction of the mortgage bond, he has got a mortgage security not only on the two annas share of the proprietary interest of the mortgagor but also on the two annas of the mokarari share which the mortgagor inherited just before the mortgage. The point arises in this way. The mortgagor, as the proprietor of the eight annas share of the village, granted a mokarari in 1851 of the entire eight annas in favour of his wife Musammat Kabiran. Now Musammat Kabiran died in 1904, and after her death the mortgagor as the husband of Kabiran inherited two annas out of the eight annas mokarari interest which was carved out of the proprietary interest in favour of Kabiran. The mortgage in favour of Mr. Rajendra Prasad's clients was executed subsequently to the date when the mortgagor inherited his two-annas share of the mokarari interest.

The first argument advanced by Mr. Rajendra Prasad is that there was a merger of the mokarari interest in the proprietary interest and, therefore, there is no mokarari now subsisting and that by his purchase he is entitled to get direct possession of the property. It seems to us that there cannot be a merger, because the mortgagor was the proprietor in respect of the eight annas share in the village, whereas he inherited merely a two annas share in the mokarari Section 111, clause (d), of the Transfer of Property Act provides that a lease of immoveable property determines, in case the interests of the lessee and the lessor in the whole of the property become vested at the same time in one person in the same right. It is obvious that the entire interest of the lessee and the entire interest of the lessor must vest in the same person in the same right before it can be said that a lease of immoveable property has determined.

Now, it is not denied by Mr. Rajendra Prasad that the six-annas interest in the mokarari still vests in persons other than the proprietor. Therefore, it seems to us, there cannot be a merger in this case. The case of Amatoo v. Sheik Muksud Ali (1) is an authority for this proposition.

In the next place, it is argued by Mr. Rajendra Prasad that, whether there has been a merger or not, the mortgagor undoubtedly, intended to give a mortgage in respect not only of his proprietary interest but also in respect of his mokarari interest, and he relies upon the passage in the mortgage bond, where the mortgagor covenants that his interest is free from incumbrance. Mr. Rajendra Prasad says that a mokarari is an incumbrance and, therefore, he has got a mortgage free from the mokarari interest which was in the mortgagor. It seems to us that a mokarari is not an incumbrance at all except for the purposes of Act X of 1859 (B. C.) and the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, therefore, this contention on behalf of the appellants must be overruled. The result, therefore, is that this appeal succeeds in so far as the plaintiffs will be entitled to a mortgage decree for the amount claimed by them and will be entitled in execution of that mortgage decree to sell two annas out of the eight-annas proprietary share of the mortgagor in village Pardhana free from incumbrance.

We make no order as to costs in this Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 111 (e)—Landlord and tenant—Surrender of tenancy for consideration, validity of—Registration, whether necessary.

ABDUL MAJID v. HARI CHARN HALDER.

Where in execution of a rent decree the tenant judgment-debtor surrendered the tenancy to the landlord decree-holder, the latter agreeing to forego his claim for rents due:

Held, that the surrender, though for consideration, was operative, and that the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act did not require a registered instrument to evidence the surrender.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 10th January 1917, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Alipur, dated the 10th July 1915.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following extracts from the lower Appellate Court's judgment:—

"The appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession after declaration of title thereto. Ketabdi Mondal held the disputed land under defendant No. 1. After him, his widow defendant No. 2 also held it. Defendant No. 3 in execution of a money decree against defendant No. 2 purported to have purchased the disputed land in March 1911. In January 1914 defendant No. 3 sold the land to plaintiff by a registered Kobala. The defence of defendant No. 1 who has appeared was that Ketabdi as well as defendant No. 2 held the land as tenants at-will. In execution of a rent decree against defendant No. 2, defendant No. 1 put up the tenancy to sale, on which defendant No. 2 filed a petition of compromise in which she agreed to surrender the land in consideration of the defendant No. 1's foregoing the rents due. Defendant No. 1 agreeing to such compromise, the execution case was dismissed. The petition of compromise was dated 26th September 1910. Thereafter defendant No. 1 let out the land to a tenant for 3 years and the land is at present in the khas possession of defendant No. 1." The suit was dismissed by both the Courts below.

Babu Samatul Chandra Dutt (with him Babu Satish Chandra Mukerjee), for the Appellant.—My submission is that the deed of surrender, as they call it, ought to have been registered, because it was not a surrender but sale with consideration therefor. It comes under section 54, Transfer of Property Act. Refers to Rangayya Appa Rau v. Kameswara Rau (1). My next point is that the tenancy if not permanent is transferable. Refers to Huromohun Mookerjee v. Ranee Lalun Monee (2), Banee Madhul Banerjee v. Joy Kishen Mookerjee (3), Doorga Pershad Misser v. Brindabun Sookul (4), Nil Madhab Sikdar v. Norttam Sikdar (5). The Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the tenancy is not transferable.

Babu Gobinda Chandra De Roy (with him Babu Mon Mohan Banerji), for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—In this case the first question that arises is whether the surrender made by the widow in September 1910 was operative, because, if it was, there was nothing for the plaintiff's vendor to sell when the sale took place in the following March.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff appellant that the surrender was not really a surrender, but a sale, because there was consideration, the consideration being the rent for which a decree had been obtained and accrued since the date of the suit. It appears to me that there is no reason for saying that it was not a surrender to the landlord; no authority has been shown to us for holding that the surrender must be by an instrument registered. For these reasons this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree. Under section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, a lease of immoveable property determines, by express surrender, that is to say, by the lessee yielding up his interest under the lease to the lessor, by mutual agreement between them. It is found that in this case the lessee did surrender her interest by mutual agreement, and it seems to me that it makes no difference that the mutual agreement was by reason of a consideration that was received from the tenant by the landlord. The Transfer of Property Act does not require a registered document in such cases and no authority has been shown to us in support of this contention.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Under section 44 of the Bengal Estates Partition Act the Partition Deputy Collector has authority to assess rent. [p. 20, col. 1.]

In a suit for rent the entries in batwara papers prepared under the Bengal Estates Partition Act are some evidence of the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and also some evidence as to the rents payable by the defendant. [p. 20, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Jessore, dated the 10th May 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at that place, dated the 17th May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondent in No. 1360 of 1917, raised a preliminary objection that as the appeal arose out of a suit for rent in which the amount claimed was less than Rs. 50, the second appeal was barred by the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal for Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Naran Chandra Kar), for the Appellant.—The preliminary objection to the competency of this appeal has got no substance in it. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen is not for recovery of rent only. In the suit, as will appear from the prayer portion of the plaint, there is also a prayer for assessment of fair and equitable rent, and so section 153 is not bar to the competency of this second appeal. I rely on Lala Dhanukdhari Lal v. Baburam Ahir (1).

On the merits, my submission is that the Court below did not accept as evidence certain entries in the batwara papers prepared under the Estates Partition Act showing the amount of rents payable by the tenants, because it considered that the Partition Deputy Collector could not assess rent. I submit that under section 44 of Act V. B. C. of 1897 the Partition Deputy Collector had authority to assess rent, and the entries in the batwara papers are admissible in evidence. Refers to Janki Dobey v. Kirtarath Roy (2). Unless and until the defendants rebut the presumption arising in favour of the plaintiff, a fair and equitable rent should be assessed and no local enquiry for that purpose is necessary.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondent.—The learned Subordinate Judge has held in effect that the entries in the batwara papers should not be relied upon in assessing the fair and equitable rent and, therefore, he is right in holding that the rent cannot be assessed without a local enquiry for the purpose. The lower Courts did take into consideration the entries in the batwara papers and have rightly held that they cannot be regarded as very valuable evidence. If your Lordship thinks that the lower Court did not consider whether the presumption arising from the entries has been rebutted or not, the cases may be sent back for a finding on that point.

Babu Debendra Nath Mandal briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for recovery of rent, with a prayer in the alternative for assessment of fair and equitable rents and for recovery of rents thus assessed for the period in suit.

A preliminary objection has been taken that under section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act no appeal lies. It appears to me that that section is not applicable, as this is not merely a suit instituted for recovery of rent, as the plaintiff seeks in the alternative other relief, that is, for assessment of fair and equitable rent. An authority for this view will be found in the case of Lala Dhanukdhari Lal v. Baburam Ahir (1),

(1) 4 Ind. Cas. 745; 10 C. L. J. 629.
(2) 4 Ind. Cas. 316; 13 C. W. N. 93.

As regards the merits of the case it is contended, and the contention appears to me to be sound, that the lower Courts have erred in law as regards the evidentiary value of certain partition papers under the Estates Partition Act (V of 1897 B. C.). In the case of Janki Dobey v. Kirtarath Roy (2) it was held that entries in batwara papers prepared under this Act as to the amounts of rents payable by tenants are evidence in the same way as entries in the Record of Rights prepared under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act are evidence under section 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though they may not be very valuable evidence.

As regards the entries, the learned Subordinate Judge says: "The Partition Deputy Collector has no authority to assess any rent." This is incorrect, as section 44 gives him the power of an officer empowered to prepare the Record of Rights under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The entries in these batwara papers are some evidence of the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and also some evidence as to the rents payable by the defendants if that relationship exists. Whether the presumption arising from these entries has been rebutted or not is a question which a Court of fact must decide. But the Subordinate Judge was not justified in saying that the rents could not be assessed without a local enquiry if the presumption in the plaintiff's favour had not been rebutted by other evidence.

For the respondent in Appeal No. 1360, it is contended that the plaintiff's own evidence, Exhibit No. 1, shows that there was a tenure between the defendants and the plaintiffs. Whether this is so or not I express no opinion, as that is a question which will have to be decided by the lower Appellate Court.

These two appeals are decreed, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and the cases remanded to that Court for a re-hearing and disposal in accordance with the observations I have made.

Costs of these appeals abide the result of the re hearing.

Appeals allowed;
Cases remanded.

Messrs. P. C. Manuk and A. B. Mukerjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Heramba Nath Bandopadhya, the defendant No. 1 in the suit, from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, dated the 5th December 1917, in which he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

The suit was instituted before the Subordinate Judge on the 12th September 1916 by the plaintiffs as heirs and representatives of Charu Chandra Mittra, claiming certain declarations the effect of which was, put shortly, to confirm their title to a colliery, known as the Ranidih Colliery, free from all encumbrances and to prevent the defend ant No. 1 from selling the property under an attachment which he had obtained in the Calcutta High Court before judgment in a previous suit (No. 300 of 1911) brought by him against the then owners of the colliery, who are the remaining defendants in the present suit.

The site of the colliery was originally acquired by one Sashi Bhusan Chattopadhya, the father of the defendants Nos. 4 to 6 and husband of the defendant No. 7, under a lease for a term of 999 years granted by Gopi Nath Chattopadhya on the 8th October 1907. By a registered deed, dated the 8th October 1908, the lessee transferred a 4 annas share in the lease to Naba Chandra Chattopadhya, the defendant No. 2, and a 2-annas share to Kunja Behari Dutta, the defendant No. 3, retaining the remaining 10-annas share himself. On the 24th August 1908 Sashi Bhusan and his transferees, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, executed a mortgage of the entire 16 annas share in the lease of the colliery to Heramba Nath Bandopadhya, the appellant, to secure a cash advance of Rs. 30,000 at 15 per cent. interest per annum and a commission of 5 annas per ton on the amount of coal raised. On the 5th September 1908 Sashi Bhusan died and his 10-annas share in the colliery passed to his four sons. One of the sons has since died. His three surviving sons and his widow who, between them, now hold his 10 annas share are respectively the defendants Nos. 4 to 7. On the 17th April 1909 Heramba Nath Bandopadhya, the mortgagee, under a deed of management executed by the defendants Nos. 2 to 7, was placed in charge of the colliery as managing agent under the name of Achard & Company of which firm he was the sole partner, and on the same day the defendants Nos. 4 to 7 as heirs of Sashi Bhusan agreed to sell him their 10-annas share in the colliery in the benami name of his wife Anilabala Debi, receiving from him the sum of Rs. 5,000 as earnest money. On the 10th September 1910 the defendant Heramba ceased to be the managing agent of the colliery and Charu Chandra Mittra, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, was put in possession by the heirs of Sashi Bhusan who were then the 10-annas share-holders. It is the plaintiffs' case that on the same day an agreement in writing was entered into between the heirs of Sashi Bhusan (the defendants Nos. 4 to 7) and Charu Chandra Mittra for the sale of the 10-annas share to the latter. This document was not produced in evidence, but sometime later, viz., on the 27th August 1913, these defendants in fact transferred their interest to Charu Chandra by a registered deed of that date, which recites that the assignment of the colliery to Charu Chandra was in accordance with a letter dated the 10th September 1910 and acknowledges payment of part of the consideration money at various dates between the 10th October 1910 and the date of the assignment.

On the 23rd March 1911 the defendant Heramba instituted the suit numbered 300 of 1911 in the High Court of Calcutta against all the 16-annas share-holders of the colliery (the present defendants Nos. 2 to 7) to recover a sum of Rs. 32,000 odd for advances made and expenses incurred in connection with the management of the colliery during the time of his agency, and, two days later, on the 25th March, applied to the Court in that suit under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, for an attachment before judgment of the colliery, on the allegation that the defendants were about to dispose of it by sale to Charu Chandra Mittra and had no other means out of which the claim could be satisfied. On the 27th March 1911 the High Court granted an order nisi under Order XXXVIII, rule 5, calling upon the defendants in that suit to show cause why they should not furnish security to satisfy any decree that might be passed against them and in default thereof, why the colliery should not be attached and, at the same time, the Court ordered an interim attachment to issue until such cause had been shown. On the 19th May the defendants in that suit appeared to show cause. The defendants Naba Chandra Chattopadhya and Kunja Behari Dutta, the owners respectively of 4-annas and 2-annas shares in the colliery, gave an undertaking on that occasion not to alienate or in any way deal with their respective shares in the colliery during the pendency of the authority in favour of their respective Pleaders to consent to these terms.

(e). In case the said defendants fail to proceed and file such authority as in sub-clause (d) of clause (2) hereof within three weeks from the date hereof, the terms contained in sub clauses (a) to (e) of clause (2) hereof will not come into operation".

On the 12th September 1913 the sum of Rs. 1,22,000, the decretal amount with interest and costs then due under the compromise mortgage decree, was deposited in Court by Charu Chandra Mitra in favour of the appellant Heramba, the plaintiff in that suit, and on the 26th September 1913 this sum was withdrawn on behalf of the appellant.

It will be observed on referring to clause 2 of the compromise agreement above set out that in arriving at a settlement of that suit the parties endeavoured to settle also the several other actions which were then pending between them. The appellant, however, contends that the terms contained in clause 2 of the compromise agreement never became operative because sub clause (d) of clause 2 was not complied with, and by sub-clause (e) it was provided that unless the express authority mentioned in sub clause (d) should be filed in Court within three weeks the terms of clause 2 of the agreement should not come into operation. In these circumstances, the appellant contends that he is entitled to proceed to execute his decree in Suit No. 300 of 1911 and to sell the attached property in satisfaction of his decree. Hence, the respondents have brought the present suit claiming the declaration already referred to. The respondents further contend that the writ of attachment issued on behalf of the appellant in that suit was not properly served and if process was served, it was not in fact a writ of attachment at all binding on the property but merely an order of the Court upon the owners of the property enjoining them from parting with their interest, and the appellant's right, if any, lies in damages against the persons enjoined and gives him no lien upon the property.

It appears that an application was made on behalf of the judgment debtors in Suit No. 300 of 1911 to have satisfaction entered in that suit on the ground of the agreement contained in clause 2 of the compromise in the mortgage suit. This application was made in August 1914 before the High Court at Calcutta and was refused, the Court being of opinion that the terms contained in sub-clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2 had not been complied with and further that the application was time-barred. In our opinion, that decision does not bar the present suit.

The main issues raised before the Subordinate Judge in the present suit were whether the appellant was bound to enter satisfaction in the High Court Suit No 300 of 1911 in pursuance of the terms of the compromise in Suit No. 105 of 1912 and whether the terms of the compromise had been complied with by the defendants in that suit so as to bind the parties by the terms of clause 2 and secondly, whether the attachment of the property in suit was properly effected in Suit No. 300 of 1911.

The learned Subordinate Judge, as far as we are able to follow his reasoning, came to the conclusion that the compromise agreement was not expressed in clear and unambiguous terms and that, therefore, it was permissible under the second proviso of section 92 of the Evidence Act to admit oral evidence as to the real meaning and intention of the parties expressed in the written agreement. He accordingly relied upon a statement of Charu Chandra's Manager, Ram Prasad Mittra, who was at Purulia when the compromise was come to. This witness said that he did not know the details of the compromise but he knew that on payment being made of the decretal amount all disputes between the parties would be settled. The Judge accordingly found that all that was necessary to bring into operation the terms of clause 2 of the agreement was that the decretal amount should be paid and that the conditions in clause 2 (e) ceased to be binding on payment of the decretal amount. It seems clear that the learned Subordinate Judge entirely misapprehended the scope and effect of section 92 of the Evidence Act. Oral evidence for the purpose of contradicting written documents or ascertaining the intention of the parties is not admissible. [See Balkishen Das v. W. F Legge (1).] It is true that by the sixth proviso of the section evidence is admissible of facts which show in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts, but the evidence relied on by the learned Subordinate Judge was not given with the object contemplated in the sixth proviso. Its object clearly was to vary the terms of the written contract by showing an intention, not expressed therein, to treat the condition contained in sub-clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2 as inoperative as soon as the decretal amount mentioned in clause 1 should have been paid. Although it is true that an ambiguous agreement affords no protection to the person seeking to rely upon it in order to avoid an obligation, he would otherwise be under, it would appear that the learned Subordinate Judge did not consider the element of ambiguity from this point of view. Had he done so it is not easy to see, when one considers the nature of the ambiguity which he conceived to exist, how this would have assisted the present plaintiffs. It is unnecessary, however, in our opinion, to pursue this matter as the document does not appear to us upon a true construction to contain any ambiguity at all. It consists of two clauses, the first of which provides that there shall be a consent decree upon certain terms enumerated in sub clauses (a) to (e). These sub-clauses clearly provide that there shall be a mortgage-decree for a named sum including interest, commission and costs, for which all the defendants except the minor were to be personally liable. Interest from the date of the decree is to run at 15 per cent. per annum, the decree is not to be executed for six weeks. During that period Charu Chandra Mittra had the option, if the claim was not in the meantime satisfied (presumably by the other defendants in the suit), of paying off the decretal amount and receiving an assignment of the decree from the decree-holder. The second clause related to matters outside the scope of the suit and could not properly form a part of the decree in that suit, but might be regarded as part of the terms of compromise and as such would be binding upon the parties when recorded. It related to claims in the various other suits pending at that time between the parties or some of them and provided that each should forego their respective claims against the others, and as presumably the Pleaders representing the parties in the mortgage suit would not necessarily be authorised in that suit to compromise claims between the respective parties in other suits, it provided that the defendants should file in Court express authority in favour of their respective Pleaders to consent to these terms. This was no doubt stipulated in order to put an end once and for all to the chance of any dispute arising thereafter as to the authority of the respective Pleaders to bind their clients, and by sub-clause (e) it was expressly provided that unless the authority should be filed within 3 weeks from the date of the compromise, the terms of clause 2 should not come into operation. It is difficult to see in what respect the agreement can be said to be ambiguous. The mortgage suit was to be compromised on the terms mentioned in clause 1, whether or not those mentioned in clause 2 should come into operation, and those mentioned in clause 2 were only intended to come into operation, if and when the defendants should expressly authorise them in the manner therein indicated. If the conditions imposed by sub-clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2 were not performed, then the mutual obligations imposed by the earlier part of the clause ceased to be operative. In our opinion it is difficult to read this document in any other manner. The learned Judge was impressed by the fact that the decretal amount of Rs. 1,20,000 was more than the total amount claimed in the mortgage suit which was Rs. 85,588 and that, therefore, the decretal amount was probably arrived at by including a portion of the appellant's claim in Suit No. 300 of 1911. We have great doubts whether he was entitled to consider this question at all but, in any event, it leaves out of consideration the fact that the sum due at the date of the decree for principal, interest and commission under the mortgage of the 24th August 1908 amounted to about Rs. 1,24,000. This calculation, it is true, is based upon an increased rate of interest after the first year as provided by the mortgage bond, and it is contended that the increased rate was not legally recoverable. It does not appear, however, that any objection upon this score was raised in the mortgage suit and it is, in our opinion, not legitimate to speculate as to how the decretal amount was arrived at. It is further contended that as the Court recorded the compromise on the 30th August 1913, that is, more than 3 weeks after the date of the compromise itself, it was not competent to the appellant to contend that the provisions of sub clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2 had not been complied with. It was argued that before recording such a compromise the Court was bound to ascertain for itself that it was valid and binding and if in fact the condition had not been at that time fulfilled, clause 2 of the compromise would not have been recorded and, therefore, any failure to comply with that condition must be taken to have been waived by the parties. The learned Judge considered that as the compromise had been recorded by the Court under the provisions of Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be regarded as a lawful agreement and that if the appellant's contention were accepted as to the effect of clause 2, there was no agreement at all so far as that clause was concerned and that the Court would not record mere negotiations not binding upon the parties. We are unable to accede to this argument. The agreement was in fact filed on the 29th July and when the decree was passed on the 30th August, there was nothing to show that the Court made any enquiry as to whether the conditions had been fulfilled or that this matter was even mentioned. The Court might well have assumed in the absence of any mention of the matter that the condition had been fulfilled and, in any event, it was no part of the Court's duty to ascertain whether the parties had complied with the condition. It might involve a long and intricate enquiry which the Court was, in our opinion, not bound to enter into. The agreement, on the face of it, was lawful and what the ultimate effect of it might be was not a matter which it was the duty of the Court at that time to enquire into.

It further remains to consider whether the condition imposed by clause 2 (d) was in fact complied with. This question depends mainly upon the effect of certain vakalatnamas which have been produced in evidence and on the oral testimony of Ananga Mohan Bhattacharji, a Pleader engaged on behalf of Kalitara Debi and her minor son Bidhu Bhusan in the mortgage suit at Purulia in which the compromise was come to. He was called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiffs in the present suit. From his evidence it appears that the draft compromise was written out in the Bar Library at Purulia on the afternoon of the 29th July after discussion between the Pleaders and others representing the parties. They then looked into the record to ascertain from the vakalatnama filed how far each of the parties had given authority to their Pleaders to compromise the suit. It appeared that no vakalatnama had been filed by Srimati Kalitara Debi the defendant No. 4 in that suit, on her own behalf, although she did sign one on behalf of her minor son Bidhu Bhusan who was also a defendant. The petition asking for the compromise decree (Exhibit 6), therefore, prayed that she might be allowed 7 days to file a vakalatnama. This was, in fact, not filed until the 30th August, the time for doing so having been extended by order of the Judge. It was urged on behalf of the respondents that as this petition only asks for 7 days for filing the vakalatnama and as the compromise in clause 2 allowed 3 weeks for filing express authority, it ought to be assumed that all the parties were agreed that the express authority required had in fact been filed by all the parties except by Kalitara Debi and as they were all anxious to get the matter through, the time was reduced to 7 days. We are quite unable to draw any such inference from the terms of this petition. As Kalitara Debi had filed no vakalatnama at all, it was quite obvious that there was nobody who could compromise the suit on her behalf much less agree to terms relating to matters outside the suit and, therefore, it was necessary in any event that some authority on her behalf should be provided, and this was undoubtedly the object of asking that the decree should only be passed after her authority had been obtained. The 7 days would expire on the 5th August but the time was subsequently extended by order, as appears from the order sheet (Exhibit 11), to the 30th August. On that day Kalitara Devi's vakalatnama was in fact filed. It also purports to be executed on behalf of Abani Bhusan, Indu Bhusan and Bidhu Bhusan, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in the mortgage suit. It is marked Exhibit 5 in this case. It authorises the Pleaders named therein to file any petition whatever or solenama or deed of settlement, and it is probably wide enough to cover the special terms mentioned in clause 2 of the compromise. It further appears that on the 29th July a vakalatnama (Exhibit 4) had been executed on behalf of the same defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and Naba Chandra, the defendant No. 5, and was filed the same day. The latter had also previously filed a vakalatnama jointly with Kunja Behari on the 20th April 1912 (Exhibit 1). If, in fact, the existing vakalatnama executed by the parties in favour of their Pleaders were regarded as a sufficient compliance with clause 2 (d) of the compromise, it remains to be explained why any of them should subsequently have filed others. Exhibit 4 authorises the Pleaders to file a compromise-deed in connection with the suit and "to do any other act in connection with this suit on our behalf". Assuming that Exhibits 4 and 5 may be interpreted as giving the authority required by clause 2 (d), there was, nevertheless, no such express authority executed as required on behalf of either Kunja Behari or Charu Chandra, the other two defendants in the suit, after the compromise was entered into, nor was Exhibit 5 filed within the 3 weeks stipulated. It is true that a vakalatnama on behalf of Kunja Behari had been filed in the suit on the 20th April 1912, and a similar document was filed on behalf of Charu Chandra on the 26th June 1913. These are in the usual form authorising their Pleaders to act for them and to compromise the suit and can in no sense be regarded as express authority to consent to the terms of clause 2 of the compromise agreement, which are matters outside the scope of the mortgage suit altogether. Counsel no doubt has a general authority to compromise a suit on behalf of the client engaging him, but this does not extend to collateral matters outside the scope of the action, see Nundo Lal Bose v Nistarini Dassi (2). The authority of a Pleader is certainly no greater, and it has been held that he has not even authority to compromise the matters in dispute in the suit itself unless specially empowered to do so. [See Musammat Sirdar Begum v. Izzut ool nissa (3)]. This appears to us obviously to have been the reason why clause 2 of the compromise contained the stipulations as to filing the express authority therein mentioned and as there was an express condition that if such authority were not filed within 3 weeks the terms of clause 2 should not come into operation, there was in our opinion no compliance with this provision. Even if the time be extended up to the date of the decree, viz, the 30th August there is not even then any express authority filed by Charu Chandra or Kunja Behari nor have they since complied with the stipulation. It was urged by the appellant as significant that the assignment executed by Abani Bhusan and others, the 10 annas share-holders, to Charu Chandra on the 27th August 1913 transferred to the purchaser the vendors' claim which they had put forward by way of set off or counter claim against Heramba in Suit No. 300 of 1911, which is one of those mentioned in the compromise. This, they contended, points to the conclusion that the parties to that instrument regarded the suit as still subsisting at that date. We do not think much importance can be attached to this. It is, however, much more significant that none of the parties made any attempt to enter satisfaction in Suit No. 300 of 1911 until long after the time stipulated, and no attempt was made by Naba Chandra and Kunja Behari to withdraw their suit for malicious attachment until the 10th July 1917, which was 10 months after the present suit was instituted. In our opinion there was no compliance with the provisions of sub clause (d) of clause 2 and under clause (e), the earlier terms of that clause never became operative.

The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the decree having once been passed in accordance with the terms of the compromise so far as it related to the suit and the compromise having been recorded there was an end of the matter, and a failure to comply with the special stipulations was of no consequence. It is not easy to follow him through this part of his argument. Assuming that the terms of clause 2 had the same binding force as a decree, it is clear that they were subject to a condition and if the condition was not complied with, those terms cannot become operative. The learned Judge also found that the parties varied the terms of the agreement by excluding sub clauses (d) and (e) of clause 2. We are unable to find any evidence of such an agreement to vary the terms. Had such an agreement been come to before the decree was passed, it may safely be assumed that those clauses would have been deleted from the compromise and would not have been recorded.

(2) 27 C. 428, 4 C. W. N. 169; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 282.

(3) 2 N. W. P. H. C. R. 149.

It was next urged that Heramba by taking the money out of Court waived his right to object that the conditions imposed by clause 2 had not been fulfilled. This argument has, in our opinion, no force. Clause 2 was in its operation independent of clause 1. The first clause was to operate in any event, the second only in the event of the express authority being filed. By the first clause Charu Chandra Mittra had the option of paying the decretal amount into Court, in which event he would be entitled to an assignment of the decree in his favour. There was no compulsion upon him to do so but by so doing he gained certain advantages. He avoided a sale of the property in which he was interested and stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee. In our opinion, the first clause operated in any event, and was in no way dependent upon the second clause becoming operative. Heramba, therefore, by taking out the money cannot be taken to have waived his right to the performance of the conditions attached to the second clause.

It remains to consider whether the attachment was properly effected and if so, what the effect of such attachment was as against the claims of the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge found that it had not been proved that the writ of attachment had been served on the colliery. He arrived at this conclusion by refusing to accept the evidence of Ashutosh Munshi, a servant of the appellant who accompanied the serving peon when the service was alleged to have taken place. The peon himself at the date of the trial was away on leave and although a summons was issued for his attendance as a witness, he could not be found and hence he was not called at the trial. The peon's return of the service of process of attachment with his affidavit attached testifying to the service and signed by him was put in evidence subject to objection. His signature was proved by the Naib Nazir of the Court of the District Judge of Purulia. A certified copy of the writ of attachment, with an endorsement by the Nazir that it appeared from the peon's return that it had been duly served, was also put in and proved. A copy of the plaint in Suit No. 638 of 1911 brought by Naba Chandra and Kunja Behari against the appellant claiming damages for wrongful attachment was also put in evidence and not objected to. Paragraph 9 of that document states in terms that an agent of the appellant appeared at the colliery on the 14th June 1911 with peons of the Purulia Civil Court and others and caused the attachment to be made, and that it was conducted by the peons by beat of drum and that notices were passed at the colliery and also delivered to the agent there. The writ of attachment was one of the notices therein referred to. It seems to us that evidence of the service of the writ of attachment is overwhelming. The reasons given by the learned Judge for not accepting the evidence of the witness Ashutosh Munshi, whose name appears as one of the identifiers in the peon's report, do not commend themselves to us and we accept his evidence as that of a witness of truth. Apart from his evidence there is also the admission in the plaint in Suit No 638 of 1911 just referred to. This is an admission by two of the plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title to the property, the subject-matter of the suit, made at a time when they had an interest in that property. Under section 18 of the Evidence Act such statements are admissions from which an inference adverse to the plaintiffs in the suit may be drawn,

This document corroborates absolutely the other evidence in the case. In our opinion, it makes no difference that the attachment was withdrawn by the order of the High Court of Calcutta, so far as the shares of the plaintiffs in that suit are concerned. It is an admission that their share was attached. That share as well as the rest is the subject-matter of the present suit and there was only one attachment of the whole property. We further think that the peon's return, being an official record made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, was clearly admissible in evidence, the peon's signature having been duly proved and the document produced from the proper custody. The form of return is that prescribed by the General Rules and Circular Orders, Vol. II, Civil, Appendix B, No. 5, and the affidavit is made under the provisions of Order V, rule 18, read with Order XLVIII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. There can be no reasonable doubt, in our opinion, that the attachment was duly served. The evidence of Ram Prasad Mittra, who was in Calcutta at the time and swears that he heard nothing about it, may or may not be true. We rather suspect the latter but in any case it is not of such a nature as to have any weight against the positive evidence of Ashutosh Munshi, corroborated as it is by the documentary evidence produced.

It was next urged on behalf of the respondents that the process served was not an attachment at all, but merely a personal order directing the defendants in that suit not to part with their shares in the property. The terms of that document have already been quoted in an earlier part of this judgment. The respondents in support of this contention relied upon the case of Mahendra Narain Saha v. Gurudas Bairagi (4). That was a case where an order was made by the Subordinate Judge upon the defendants to show cause why an attachment of their property should not issue before judgment, and pending the hearing of the Rule they were directed not to part with their property. The form of order was not that prescribed by Order XXXVIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code and no order attaching the property was in fact made. When the defendants appeared to show cause, the Court was satisfied that no reason for attaching the property had been made out and dismissed the application. From this there was an appeal to the High Court. A preliminary point was taken that no appeal lay from such an order. The question was whether the last order dismissing the application was one made under Order XXXVIII, rule 6. If so, an appeal lay but not otherwise. The High Court decided that it was not an order made under rule 6. In fact no attachment had been ordered under rule 5 and the procedure laid down in rule 6 had not come into operation. What was done was in effect a dismissal of an application under rule 5 from which there was no appeal, and the Court dismissed the appeal on the preliminary objection. In the case now under consideration an order under rule 5 was clearly passed on the 27th March 1911 (Exhibit H) calling upon the defendants to show cause why security should not be given and ordering attachment to issue until such cause should be shown. The writ, which was eventually served (Exhibit E), recites that an order of attachment had been made and prohibits the defendants from parting with the property until further order of the Court. The further order of the Court on the 19th May 1911 ordered the attachment to be removed, so far as the interest of the three defendants who gave an undertaking was concerned, and to continue so far as the interest of the other defendants was concerned until the final disposal of the suit. The latter order would appear to have been properly made under rule 6 or Order XXXVIII and kept the attachment in so far as it was not withdrawn. In the case relied upon no order of attachment was ever made and it affords no authority for the respondents' present contention.

It was further contended, however, that the attachment ceased when the decree was passed, the suit being then finally disposed of within the terms of the Order. It would be a strange result if the benefit of this procedure should cease to operate at the moment when the plaintiff obtained a decree in his favour so as to deprive him of the fruits of victory, and it seems clear from the terms of rules 9 and 11 of

(4) 33 Ind. Cas. 689; 23 C. L. J. 392.

Order XXXVIII that such was not the intention of the Legislature. The former relates to the circumstances under which the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn, viz., when security is provided or the suit dismissed. The latter provides that where the property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of that Order and decree is subsequently passed in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary upon an application for execution to apply for re attachment of the property. In our opinion the attachment continued in full force after the decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff in Suit No. 300 1911. See Ganu Singh v Jangi Lal (5).

It was next contended that the writ of attachment was bad because it was not in the form prescribed in Appendix F, No. 5, of the Civil Procedure Code. The form there set out is a composite form addressed to the bailiff commanding him to call upon the defendants to give security or show cause and to attach and keep in safe custody the property until further order. These forms are subject to variation (See Order XLVIII, rule 3). Form No. 5 of Appendix F would appear to be adapted to the case of moveable property as the bailiff is directed to keep the property under safe and secure custody. There is no special form adapted to the case of immoveable property, but in Appendix E which is applicable to attachments in execution, a special form No. 24 is provided to meet the case of immoveable property and is more like the form employed in the present case. It appears from the affidavit of Nilmony Roy and from the evidence of that witness given at the trial that the order of the 27th March 1911 calling upon the defendants in Suit No. 300 of 1911 to show cause was duly served and the defendants in fact appeared to show cause before the writ of attachment was served. There was, therefore, no necessity to serve again a similar notice with the writ of attachment, and the form prescribed in Appendix F was not in the circumstances applicable. Moreover, it must be remembered that that suit was brought in the Calcutta High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction and the forms prescribed under its own rules of procedure under the powers saved by section 129 of the Civil Procedure Code differ in many respects from those in the appendices to the Code. We think that until the contrary is shown, we must presume that the writ which bears the seal of the Calcutta High Court was a valid writ authorised by its own procedure.

A further point was taken on behalf of the respondents that, as by the compromise the appellant agreed to transfer his rights under the mortgage decree to Charu Chandra on payment of the decretal amount, he surrendered his right of sale under the attachment to the latter. The attachment was no doubt subject to existing liens including Heramba's own rights as mortgagee, but subject to this the equity of redemption could be attached and the transfer of the mortgage, decree, although it may have given the transferee a prior claim on the proceeds to the extent of the amount of the mortgagee decree, cannot affect the right of sale under the attachment. What the respective rights of the parties may be once the property is sold we are not concerned with in the present suit, which merely prays for a declaration that the property belongs to the plaintiffs free of all incumbrances and that the appellant is not entitled to sell it in execution of his decree in Suit No. 300 of 1911.

The next point urged by the respondents was that by a letter of the 10th September 1910, that is, before the attachment was effected, the defendants Nos. 4 to 7 had already entered into a contract with Charu Chandra for the sale to him of their share in the colliery and that of the consideration money Rs. 51 was paid on the 10th October 1910 and Rs. 200 on the 18th May 1911, although the assignment was not actually executed until the 27th August 1913, the attachment having taken place on the 14th June 1911. It is contended that the respondents had on the latter date an interest in the property which could be enforced against the owners and that they were entitled to priority over the rights of the attaching creditor. It is clear by the terms of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act that a contract for the sale of immoveable property creates no interest in or charge upon the property in this country. It was pointed out, however, that no interest in or charge on the property is created even by an attachment and that Charu Chandra could have enforced a suit for specific performance of the contract contained in the letter of the 10th September 1910. He, therefore, had a right existing prior to the attachment within the meaning of Order XXXVIII, rule 10. The case of Madan Mohan v. Rebati Mohan (6) was relied upon in support of this contention. There is no doubt much force in this argument, but there is no evidence to show what the terms of the letter of the 10th September 1910 were or how far it gave any right to Charu Chandra which could have been enforced by a suit for specific performance. The point was not taken before the trial Judge and had it been taken strict proof of the contract, if any, contained in the letter of the 10th September would have been required. This letter was not produced and it is impossible to say how far it gave any right to Charu Chandra to insist upon an assignment of the property. A mere reference to such a letter in the deed of assignment of the 27th August 1913 is no evidence against the appellant, nor does the deed of assignment itself show what its terms were. No reason is given for its non-production and its contents must remain a matter of pure surmise. We cannot assume from evidence of this nature, especially as the question was not raised or discussed in the trial Court, that Charu Chandra acquired any enforceable rights under this latter at all. In these circumstances we are bound to hold that the attachment was not affected in any way by this matter.

A further question was raised on behalf of the appellant, namely that section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code was a bar to the present suit. This point was not taken in the written statement. The learned Judge considered that as Order VIII, rule 2, had not been complied with, the appellant was not entitled to raise the point. He further considered that as there had been no valid attachment of the property at all in Suit No. 300 of 1911, the plaintiffs in the present suit were not the representatives in interest of the judgment-debtors in that suit and that the section did not apply. This part of his judgment would appear to be open to several objections. The question is purely one of law and the facts upon which it has been raised are on the record. It is, therefore, open to the plaintiff to raise it at any stage of the suit. We do not think, however, that section 47 is a bar to the present suit. The suit was brought before the decree was put in execution and there were no proceedings then pending in which an application under section 47 could be made. The facts relied upon by the plaintiffs in their suit affect not the execution of the decree so much as the decree itself, which was passed on the 22nd November 1915 and which it is claimed should not have been passed at all in the face of the compromise of the 29th July 1913. Moreover, as the attachment of the shares of the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was set aside by the order of the 19th March 1921, that property is not now the subject of any attachment and the plaintiffs are not the representatives of those judgment-debtors by reason of having acquired their share in the colliery which no longer forms a part of the attached property. Had the appellant admitted this possibly, there would have been no necessity to claim a declaration so far as this portion of the property is concerned, but no such admission was made and it was contended that the whole property had been attached. In the result we think that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be varied and that a decree should be entered in lieu thereof declaring that the plaintiffs are entitled to the $8\frac{1}{2}$-annas share in the Ranidih Colliery, which they purchased from the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, free from the attachment. The appellant has succeeded in part and is entitled to proportionate costs of this appeal.

The respondents will recover their proportionate part of costs of the lower Court.

Decree varied.

(6) 34 Ind. Cas. 953; 23 C. L. J. 115; 21 C. W. N. 188.

On both these points, there have in the past been a number of suits between some of the same parties,—one batch of suits in the Manamadura Munsif's Court, a second batch before the Special Deputy Collector of Ramnad and the third before the Deputy Collector of Devakottah It is contended for the appellants that the decisions in all these suits constitute res judicata so far as the parties and property concerned are the same. In the Manamadura suits, there was no appeal beyond the District Court except in two cases which came to the High Court and in those two cases, the High Court reversed the decision of the lower Courts. Mr. Moore accordingly holds that the question is not res judicata as regards the defendants in the Manamadura suits who did not appeal, because to hold otherwise would lead to certain startling results, and Mr. Venkataramayya also appears not to consider the decisions as res judicata and regards them as of small evidentiary value in view of the contrary opinion of the High Court. It is difficult to see why questions that have once been settled between the parties should not be deemed to be res judicata merely on the ground that similar questions between the same parties have been decided otherwise in other litigation, and the learned Vakil for the respondent does not support the finding of the District Judges on the grounds given by them, but so far as the case decided by the Manamadura Munsif is concerned, he relies on the language of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code for holding that they are not res judicata. His contention is that under section 11, the Court which decided the first suit must have become competent at the time of such decision to try the subsequent suit and relies on a ruling in Kunji Amma v. Raman Menon (1). We do not think that this case really supports his plea. No doubt the Judges said that they were of opinion that the only reasonable construction to be put upon the words "Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" must be held to refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the suit was heard and determined, but that the Judges did not really mean to decide that the Court must be competent on the date of judgment and not on the date of the institution of the suits appears to be clear from the fact that they approved the view of the Calcutta High Court in Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad (2) and Rughunath Panjah v. Issur Chunder Chowdhry (3). In the former of these cases it was clearly held at page 707 as follows: 'The reasonable construction of the words 'in a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit' seems to us to be that it must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought, that is to say, if the Court which tried the first suit was competent to try the subsequent suit if then brought, the decision of such Court would be conclusive under section 13, although on a subsequent date, by a rise in the value of such property or from any other cause, the said Court ceased to be the proper Court, so far as pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that property." This view is followed in Rughunath Punjah v. Issur Chunder Chowdhry (3) and also Rai Charan Ghose v. Kumud Mohun Dutt Chowdhry (4). At the date of institution of the first suit in the Manamadura Court, that Court had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit and the fact that that jurisdiction was taken away by the passing of the Estates Land Act shortly before the judgment was pronounced, would not make it a Court not competent to try the subsequent suit within the meaning of section 11. We, therefore, think that the decision of the Manamadura Munsif which was not appealed against constituted res judicata as well as the two decisions of this Court. So far as the cases decided by the Special Deputy Collector are concerned, there was no appeal and his decision is undoubtedly res judicata. In the third class of cases before the Deputy Collector of Devakottah, no appeal was preferred in some of the suits and his decision would, therefore, be final in those cases. So far, therefore, as the previous litigations related to the same land or between the same parties, we think that the questions therein raised and decided must be held to be res judicata. There are, however, other cases before us to which the principle of res judicata will not apply and these will have to be decided on the merits. The contention of the respondent on the first of the two questions before us which was upheld by the District Judge is that the charge of Sarasari is illegal because it is an enhancement of rent. Rent was originally charged for dry crops on the suit dry lands, and the right to levy Sarasari now claimed is claimed on the ground that these lands have been irrigated by water taken from the landlord's tank and for this water, he is entitled to a reasonable compensation. It has been held in Thayammal v. Muttia (5). Venkata Rao v. Vaithilinga Udayan (6) and Battina Appanna v. Yarlagadda Venkatoramalinganna (7) that a charge for water taken by the tenant is not enhancement of rent. No doubt, under section 3 (11) of the Estates Land Act, such charge, even if not consolidated with the rent, will come within the definition of rent. But for that reason alone, it is not necessary to hold that the charge for water in excess of the prior dry rent is an enhancement of rent.

It is suggested that the landlord's remedy would be to sue for compensation for the use of water taken, but that, within the meaning of the Estates Land Act, would be in effect a suit for rent and would be governed by the provisions of that Act. Nor can he sue for damages for loss of water when, as a matter of fact, he has consented to the tenant taking that water. It is not disputed that any water taken was taken with the permission of the landlord, and we think it is only reasonable to infer from such taking by consent a contract between the parties that the landlord shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation for the water. The question, therefore, would be whether the charge of Sarasari, which is the average Varam collected on paddy lands in the village, is a reasonable charge. It is very difficult to fix exactly the proper charge for the water, for the quantity of water, taken must vary according to the season of the year and also the nature of the crop raised on the land. So far as the landlord is concerned, the most profitable use of the water would be to facilitate the cultivation of a paddy crop as it would result in his obtaining his share of the produce in paddy, and the landlord might well say that all the water taken from his tank should be utilised for such purpose. If the tenant utilised it for less remunerative crops, such as chillies and cotton, as in the present case, can he be heard to say that he should pay less? It is a somewhat difficult question, but we find that Sarasari has been levied in the past. Sarasari being a curious method of levying compensation, which would hardly suggest itself to a landlord in modern days, it is evident that it must be levied according to old existing custom, and this would also appear from the technical meaning which is attached to the word itself. By its levy the landlord gets no more for his water than he would get by supplying water to wet lands, and there seems to be no ground for depriving him of what he can ordinarily expect to get for his water. The tenant is not bound to take water to dry lands, and consequently he suffers no hardship by being asked to pay the full price for water taken by him. He has his remedy in his own hands, i.e., he can cease to take water. The landlord on the other hand has not a similar remedy, for the application of the water to paddy crops or to Vanpayier crops lies in the tenant's hands. In these circumstances it seems to us that the levy of Sarasari by the landlord is only a reasonable and equitable compensation for water supplied by him, and must be allowed. As there is no finding as to whether water was taken for the suit years, appellant's Vakil says he will be satisfied with a mere declaration. The decree will, therefore, be modified accordingly.

As regards the cesses claimed, Mr. Moore allowed all the cesses of Varapattu and Varisaipattu lands. Mr. Venkatarmiah disallowed the cesses in the case of Varisaipattu lands and as regards Varapattu lands disallowed Amanji, Pakkilai and Tayermutti. The appellant's Vakil stated that he does not press Pakkilai and Tayermutti Varapattu lands are the ordinary wet lands in respect of which the landlord and tenant divide the actual produce, while Varisaipattu lands are lands paying a fixed paddy rent.

The Special Deputy Collector disallowed Pakkilai, Tayermutti and Amanji and allowed the other cesses claimed, on the ground that "these cesses have been customarily paid by the landlords in kind as part of their rent." There can be little doubt that the cesses have been paid for a long series of years by the tenants without objection

The Karnam (P. W. No. 1) deposes that on Varapattu lands Kanganam, Eswaran Koil Mahamai, Kulavettu, Kadiraruppu (cooly), Karnam Swatantram, Kudivaram, Kaipichai are deducted as common charges and the balance divided between the landlord and tenant. Out of these common charges some go to the landlord and some to the ryot. He states that out of the Kadiraruppu 3 measures are taken out of every 14 Marakkals and added to the landlord's share as Amanji. As regards Varisaipattu lands he states that Kanganam, Kulavetu, Tayermutti, Amanji, Eswaran Koil Mahimai, Pakkilai Swatantram, Vamadai, Vaikalkattu are the cesses levied.

The plaintiff appeals against the decision of Mr. Venkataramiah disallowing the cesses claimed and the defendants have filed a memorandum of objections against the decision of Mr. Moore as regards the cesses allowed.

In our judgment in Vadamali Thiruvanatha Sevuga Pandia Thevar Avergal v. Sankara Moorthi Naidu (8) we have given what in our opinion are the tests to be applied and the considerations which should weigh with the Court in allowing or disallowing cesses which have been paid for a long time without dispute and to the difference between cesses which are deducted out of the gross produce and those deducted out of the tenant's share. We observed as follows: "In considering whether any particular cess claimed and which has been paid for a series of years is enforceable or not, the first thing to be considered is whether the cess claimed has any direct or proximate bearing on the purpose for which the land is let. If the cess is payable in respect of such purpose, it will prima facie be one which is binding on the parties and the onus will be on the tenant to show that owing to some special circumstances it is not binding on him. When the cesses are in their nature unconnected with the object for which the land is let, they can only be claimed by the landlord under contract between him and the ryot, supported by consideration or usage for which a legal origin is either proved or presumed from the nature of the cess and long course of payment." While on the one hand mere length of payment will not, as pointed out in Sunaaram Iyer v. Theetharappa (9), give to a cess, which is purely voluntary or which is on its face illegal, a binding character, payment during a long course of years will be presumptive evidence that the payment of a cess had a legal origin, if the cess is of such a nature that a contract to pay it may be reasonably inferred.

As regards cesses deducted out of the gross produce before division of the Varam, there is nothing to prevent the parties from agreeing that certain expenses, which they consider to be beneficial to both of them, should be met by them in common, and in such cases so long as the levying of the cess is not a device by the landlord to give himself a purely personal benefit, the purpose for which the cess is levied is immaterial. It will, of course, be open to the tenant to show that the purpose for which the cess is levied has failed or that the landlord has not been appropriating the cess to the purpose for which it is claimed and levied.

So far as cesses in connection with temples are concerned, they have been held to be purely voluntary in Siriprapu Ramanna v. Mallikarjuna Prasada Nayudu (10), Rimalingam Chettiar v. Ramasami Aiyar (11) and Devanai v. Raghunatha Row (12). Eswaran Koil Mahamai will, therefore, be disallowed.

As regards Varisaipattu land, there is obviously no necessity for Kanganam which is a cess for superintending harvest, as the landlord gets a fixed paddy rent irrespective of the produce and no supervision is necessary. Tayermutti and Pakkilai have been given up. Eswaran Koil Mahamai is for the reasons above given not enforceable. The Deputy Collector has disallowed Amanji, and it has not been shown that the cess is one that can be enforced.

We do not see sufficient grounds to disallow the other cesses. They have been paid for several years without objection and have been found by the Deputy Collector to have been paid for a long series of years as part of the rent. The decrees of the lower Courts as regards cesses will be modified accordingly.

Appellants will get costs in Second Appeals Nos. 1327—1353 and 1356—1361, will pay costs in 1956—1973, and on the memoranda of objections, each party will bear his own costs as also in Second Appeals Nos. 1354-1355.

These second appeals and the memoranda of objections having been set down to be spoken to this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The statement submitted by the parties will be forwarded to the District Judge for report as to the correct amount to be awarded in each decree after hearing the parties. The report will be submitted within two months from the date of receipt of records in his Court and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

These second appeals and the memoranda of objections coming on for hearing after the return of the report submitted by the District Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in compliance with the order of this Court, dated 18th December 1918, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We have already held that the decision in certain previous suits constitutes res judicata between the parties, but the District Judge thinks that the question of cesses must be treated on a different footing. The right to levy cesses could and should have been raised in the prior litigation and the question must now be deemed to be res judicata In other respects the District Judge's report is accepted, but it must be noted that Vamadai Vaikalkattu is not claimed for Varapathu lands and it is admitted that Vasi was given up at the last hearing. No argument was addressed to us as regards fishing rent, and in this respect we express no opinion but confirm the findings of the District Judge. Decree will be drawn up in accordance with the above.

A Revenue Court is competent, under section 69 (1) (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to decide a dispute between a landlord and a tenant as to the proper shares of the produce to which each is entitled. [p. 38, col. 2.]

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction to a party to a proceeding under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act restraining him from further proceeding with an application made by him under that section to a Revenue Court. [p. 38, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

ADAMI, J.—The petitioner moves this Court to set aside an order passed by the third Munsif at Arrah, in Title Suit No. 33 of 1 19, restraining the petitioner from further proceeding with an application made by him under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act before the Deputy Collector at Arrah.

BHAJAN AHIR v. GANGESHWAR KUAR.

The petitioner is an occupancy raiyat and holds land on a bhaoli rent under the opposite party, his landlord. It appears that on the 16th November 1918 he applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer for the appraisement of the produce of that land under section 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, claiming that he should receive 60 per cent. of the produce while his landlord's share was 40 per cent. thereof. The landlord, opposite party, objected that she was entitled to get 50 per cent of the entire produce less 5 seers in each maund. The Sub-Divisional Officer held that a Revenue Court in proceedings under section 69 was not competent to decide what were the respective shares of the parties, and that the question could only be determined by a Civil Court.

On the 23rd December 1918 he ordered appraisement to be made on the share basis alleged by the petitioner, since the Amin reported it to be correct On the 27th February 1919, the petitioner and other tenants made an application, under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to the Deputy Collector, for the commutation of the produce rent payable by them into a cash rent. Then on the 4th April 1919 the landlord, opposite party, on the strength of the decision of the Sub-Divisional Officer in the proceedings under section 69 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, instituted a suit in the Court of the Munsif for a declaration that he was entitled to receive a rent in kind from the petitioner at the rate of 50 per cent. of the produce, less 5 seers per maund, and for the recovery of arrears due. On the same date the opposite party prayed for the issue of an injunction staying the proceedings under section 40 in the Revenue Court on the ground that the question in issue there would be the same as that to be decided by the Civil Court.

The Munsif rightly refused to issue an order on the Revenue Court to stay the proceedings under section 40, but he did issue an order against the petitioner, restraining him from proceeding with the section 40, Bengal Tenancy Act, case until the disposal of the civil suit and sent a copy of the order to the Revenue Court. He held that such an order was justified under clauses (c) and (e) of section 94 of the Civil Procedure Code in the ends of justice, in that the Revenue Officer might again consider that he was incompetent to decide the question of shares and might be guided by the decision in the case under section 69 to the detriment of the opposite party, plaintiff in the suit.

It is clear to us that, in the first place, the Revenue Court in the proceedings under section 69 was wrong in holding that the dispute as to the proper shares of the produce could not be decided in that Court, and in the second place, that the Munsif acted improperly in the circumstances of this case in ordering the petitioner to refrain from prosecuting his application under section 40.

Section 69 (1) (b) allows the Collector, if there is a dispute as to the division of the produce, to appoint an officer to divide it. A dispute as to the division of the produce apparently includes a dispute as to the shares into which it is to be divided. It would seem that the Sub Divisional Officer in the proceedings under section 69 and the Munsif as also the learned Vakil for the opposite party have relied on the decisions in the cases of Mir Tapurah Hossein v. Gopi Narayan (1) and Nukheda Singh v. Ripu Mardan Singh (2) in support of the contention that a Revenue Court cannot decide a dispute as to the shares in the produce, but neither of those rulings is in any way applicable. They merely determine that in proceedings under section 69 a Revenue Court has not jurisdiction to decide a bona fide dispute as to the character of the holding or as to the nature of the rent No such dispute existed in this case.

If the Sub Divisional Officer was not prepared to decide the issue as to the proper shares, he should have referred the dispute to the Civil Court under section 70 (5), but he was competent to decide it under section 69 (1) (b).

To come next to the order of injunction complained of in this application. It is clear to me that it was made in an improper exercise of the Court's discretion. The petitioner had under the law a right to apply for a commutation of the rent in kind into a cash rent, the relief sought for had nothing to do with the relief sought for by the opposite party in her suit, the commutation case was filed before the suit and in no sense was it a fraudulent or mala fide exercise of the petitioner's statutory rights; and the fact that the Munsif sent to the Revenue Court a copy of his order restraining the petitioner from prosecuting his application was virtually an intimation to the Revenue Court that an injunction had issued against further proceedings. It is true that the letter addressed to the Deputy Collector was called a letter of request and the Deputy Collector was asked to adjourn the commutation application, but it virtually amounted to an injunction and the effect of the actual order issued against the petitioner was to forbid him further to take part in commutation cases, and the natural result of compliance with the order would have been the dismissal of his application for default of prosecution.

(1) 7 C. L. J. 251.
(2) 4 C. W. N. 230.

We find that the order restraining the petitioner from proceeding in the matter of his application under section 40 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was improper and we must, therefore, set it aside with costs in favour of the petitioner measured at three gold mohurs.

ATKINSON, J.—I agree.

Order set aside.

Proceedings before the Revenue Authorities under sub-section (2) of section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1898, as it stood before its amendment, were in the nature of a suit and an order made therein was in the nature of a decree. Consequently, such order is reviewable on the ground of error by the Settlement Authorities. [p. 40, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for rent. The plaintiff claimed to realise rent at the annual rate of Rs. 26-8-9. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground that rent was payable by him only at the rate of Rs 22 13 3. Each side produced a settlement Khatian in support of his claim which bore the same date, namely, the 9th June 1897. The Court was, therefore, called upon to inquire under what circumstances the two Khatians, apparently contradictory, had been made. It transpired that under sub-section (2) of section 104, as it stood before its amendment in 1898, the Record of Rights was finally published on the 9th January 1897, and that so far as the present tenant was concerned, the rent was stated to have been settled at Rs. 22-13 3. Immediately after the final publication, an application appears to have been made on behalf of the landlord to the Assistant Settlement Officer to correct the entry. The Assistant Settlement Officer suggested a reference to the Settlement Officer and consequently on the 23rd July 1897 an application was made for alteration of the record to the latter officer. The Settlement Officer called for a report, as a result of which the record was amended, so that the rent payable by the defendant was entered as Rs. 26 : 0 instead of Rs 22 13-3. The proceedings before the Revenue Authorities further make it clear that the tenant appeared and agreed to this alteration. The plaintiff now seeks to recover rent at the altered rate. The defendant contends that the alteration in the Record of Rights was ultra vires because the Settlement Authorities had no jurisdiction to revise the order previously made. The Court of first instance gave effect to the contention of the landlord and made a decree in this favour. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision.

On behalf of the landlord, appellant, it has been argued that the Revenue Authorities had inherent jurisdiction to recall the erroneous order previously made and to modify the entry in the Record of Rights as published. On behalf of the respondent,

Library,

this contention has been sought to be negatived by a reference to the case of Shambhu Chandra v. Purna Chandra (1). It has further been argued that the decisions of this Court in the cases of Brahmanunda Mahapatra v. Arjun Kaut (2) and Durga Churn Law v. Haleen Mandal (3) indicate that the decision of the Settlement Officer was in the nature of a decree and consequently could be revised only by way of appeal.

In our opinion the contention of the appellant is well founded and must prevail. The two cases upon which reliance is placed by the respondent, namely, Brahmanunda Mahapatra v. Arjun Raut (2) and Durga Churn Law v. Hateen Mandal (3), show conclusively that a decision under sub-section (2) of section 104 operates as a decree. It follows consequently that the Settlement Authorities have jurisdiction to review the decree on the ground that it is erroneous. This view is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Achha Mian Chowdhry v. Durga Churn Law (4). It becomes unnecessary, therefore, to consider the wider question whether every Court has inherent power to review an erroneous decision. It may be pointed, however, that this view does receive support from the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Syud Tufuzzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (5) as also from the decision of this Court in Haradhun Mookerjee v. Chunder Mohun Roy (6). We are not unmindful, however, that the contrary view has sometimes been maintained: Babaji v. Babaji (7) and Ramsing v. Babu Kisansing (8). The decision of the Court of appeal in Drew v. Lewis or Willis (9) may also possibly support the view that it is competent to a Court to review its decision only where there is statutory authority in that behalf. As we have stated, however, it is not necessary for us to found our decision on that ground. We hold here that the proceeding before the Revenue Authorities was in the nature of a suit, that the order made by the Settlement Officer was in the nature of a decree and that the decree was consequently reviewable on the ground of error by the Settlement Authorities. In this view, it becomes unnecessary for us to consider in detail whether even, if we had been obliged to hold that the Settlement Authorities had no jurisdiction to review their order, it would have been open to the tenant, who had consented to the order, to challenge it on the ground that it was ultra vires. But we may observe that the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ledgard v. Bull (10) might possibly present an insuperable bar in the way of the respondent. In that case their Lordships held that when the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter and be bound by his decision on the merits when those are submitted to him. In the case before us it has been found that the alteration in the record was made by the Settlement Authorities upon the joint application of the landlord and the tenant, and it is clearly not open to the tenant to turn round and contend that the order was made without jurisdiction and is not binding upon him.

The result, therefore, is that the decree made by the Court of appeal below must be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O IX, r. 2, 8—Plaintiff, failure of, to pay process-fee—Defendant, application by, for time to file written statement, whether amounts to appearance—Suit, dismissal of, for default—Conditions of order, non-compliance with—Revision - High Court, power of interference of.

Where a plaintiff has made default in paying the fee for service of a summons on the defendant, but notwithstanding this defendant applies to the Court for time to file written statements, the filing of such application amounts to an appearance by the defendant under rule 8 of Order IX of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court would not be justified in dismissing the suit under rule 2 of that Order.

As rules 2 and 8 of Order IX of the Code require certain conditions to be satisfied in order to vest jurisdiction in a Court to pass an order thereunder, an order made by a Court, where these conditions are not fulfilled, is open to revision by the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Civil revision from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Mozafferpore.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad for Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Fakhuruddin for Mr. Tahir, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application is directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge, dated the 9th May 1919, as being without jurisdiction. The order purports to dismiss Suit No. 31 of 1919 under Order IX, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code, on account of the failure of the plaintiff to pay talbana for service of summons on the defendants and to file copies of the plaint. The applicant contends that they, being defendants, had already entered appearance on the said date and the proviso to the said rule 2 bars the passing of the order under rule 2 and that the only order that the Court could pass was one under rule 8 of Order IX. The plaint was registered on the 12th March 1919 fixing the 9th May for settlement of issues. On 9th May, although the talbana was not paid for service of summons upon the defendants, and although no summons was issued, yet two of the defendants, the petitioners in this case, filed an application asking for time to file written statements. The plaintiff did not at all appear or take any steps to prosecute the suit.

It is contended on behalf of the opposite party that the mere filing of the application for time does not amount to an appearance by the defendant under rule 8. This contention cannot find favour with us, inasmuch as the appearance for the defendant is sufficient whether it be by the filing of written statements or by a petition to take time to file written statements. The Court could, therefore, pass an order only under rule 8 and had no jurisdiction to pass an order under rule 2 as against the applicants. No doubt the defendant No. 3, the husband of the plaintiff, did not enter any appearance on the 9th of May and it was open to the Court to make an order under rule 2 if any relief was claimed against that defendant.

It is next contended that this Court cannot interfere with the aforesaid order, however illegal or irregular, under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, as no question of jurisdiction is involved. Both rules 2 and 8 require certain conditions to be satisfied in order to vest jurisdiction in a Court to pass an order under those rules and if those conditions are not fulfilled, the Court has no jurisdiction to make an order under rule 2 or rule 8, as the case may be.

The first condition in order to give jurisdiction to make an order under rule 2 is that contained in the proviso that the defendant should never have appeared at all. Thus if the defendant does appear in spite of non-service of summons, the Court's jurisdiction to pass an order under rule 2 ceases. If, on the other hand, the defendant does appear and the Court does not make an order under rule 8, the Court then refuses to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by Order IX, rule 8 It was held in some of the cases cited in Mullah's Civil Procedure Code that to pass a decree ex parte against a defendant, treating the delivery of summons by post to a person who was not shown to have been a defendant as a good service, is a material irregularity which affects the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Court and as such is fit to be revised under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The contention of the opposite party is, therefore, overruled and the order of the 9th of May of the Court below is set aside, and the suit will be dismissed as against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under Order IX, rule 8.

The order of this Court dated the 6th August 1919 staying Title Suit No. 79 of 1919 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, first Court, Patna, is hereby withdrawn.

Application accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by reversioners. It relates to two sets of properties which originally belonged to one Krishnahari Roy. He died leaving a widow named Jadumoni. The plaintiffs are the representatives of the reversioners. Jadumoni died in 1319 B. S. Schedule (kha) related to five plots of land. The plaintiffs' claim as regards plots Nos. 3 and 4 was given up by them and plots Nos. 1, 2 and 5 are to be dealt with.

These plots Nos. 1, 2 and 5 were sold at Court sale. It appears from the written statement that plots Nos. 1 and 2 were purchased by Rameswar in the name of his brother-in-law Nityananda and plot No. 5 was purchased by the Burdwan Raj at an auction sale on the 21st Baisak 1264. The Maharaja sold that plot to Rameswar on the 18th Chait 1282. Rameswar made a gift of it to his daughter defendant No. 1 on 10th Kartick 1284 and she is in present possession thereof. Both the Courts below have treated the plaintiffs' claim in respect of these plots as barred by limitation. They held that the present law of limitation is not applicable, but the sale having taken place before 1871, the plaintiffs are barred as 12 years had elapsed from the date of sale.

The appellants contend that their cause of action was not upon the sale, but upon the death of the widow and they refer to Exhibit D, which relates to plot No. 5 as showing that what was sold was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, namely of Jadumoni. The learned District Judge has held that there is nothing to show that it was the widow's estate that was sold, and inasmuch as the sale took place 60 years ago, the plaintiffs are barred. The only document of title which has been produced is Exhibit D, which shows that the widow's right, title and interest only was sold and nothing more No doubt it was held in Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (1) that it was necessary to look into the decree and the nature of the suit to ascertain what was really sold in execution of the decree. These documents are not forthcoming now. But it is clearly upon the person asserting an absolute estate having purchased the right, title and interest of a Hindu widow as shown by the sale certificate to show that something more has passed to him.

In the absence of other materials, therefore, we do not think that the learned Judge was right in throwing upon the plaintiffs the Burden of proving that an absolute estate had not passed. It was laid down as early as the case of Nobin Chunder Chuckerbutty v. Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty (2) that only when the estate of the husband was sold or where possession was taken from the widow adversely that a suit not instituted within 12 years would be considered as barred even as against the reversioners. But this particular case is excepted. We have also referred to the sale-proclamation Exhibit F2, which contains nothing more than the name of the Maharaja as decree-holder and the name Jadumoni as the judgment debtor.

(1) 10 C. 945 11 I. A. 83; 9 Ind. Jur. 155, 4 Sar. P. C. J. 553, 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 657 (P. C.).

We think, therefore, that the plaintiffs were in time in instituting the suit so far as plot No. 5 is concerned. It is admitted that the same sale upon the same decree governs the other two plots, namely, Nos. 1 and 2, although no documents are forthcoming which relate to them. The fact of the purchase at that time from the Hindu widow who held the estate as such, shows that nothing more than a widow's estate passed.

We are asked, having regard to the way in which the learned Judge treated this matter in the Appellate Court, to remand this case for further evidence. There is no indication whatever that any further evidence is or can be forthcoming. The whole of the case of defendant No. 1 is set out in paragraph 15 of her written statement. We do not think that this is a fit case for remand on this point.

The appeal, therefore, so far as plots Nos. 1, 2 and 5 of Schedule (kha) are concerned is allowed.

After the sale of these properties what remained to the widow were the properties mentioned in Schedule (ka). She purported to deal with them in 1891. It was an alienation in which the then reversioner Rameswar joined, the alienation being in favour of Rameswar's daughter. It purports to be a conveyance by which the widow was selling her widow's estate and the reversioner his reversionary interest, that is to say, both of them joined in the conveyance in favour of the reversioner's daughter. It has been held in Nobokishore Sarma v. Hari Nath Sarma (3) that such a sale is good and operative. This case has been dealt with in Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (4). Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., held that the decision of that case was not assailable and the validity of the sale depended upon the whole of the estate having been alienated with the consent of the reversioner. The learned District Judge has found that Jadumoni parted with all her properties by that document and that the next reversioner joined with her at that time. We think he was quite right in applying the principle laid down in the case of Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (4), and we uphold his decision so far as the properties in Schedule (ka) are concerned.

Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit for a declaration that certain lands, which were specified in schedules ka and kha of the plaint, were the plaintiff's raiyati lands and that they were held by the defendant No. 1 as an under-raiyat. The plaintiff's case was that the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur gave his grandfather Churan Ram a ticca of Mouzah Jamira in which the lands given in schedules ka and kha are situated and that he also gave the plaintiff's father Madho Ram the lands specified in these schedules as his raiyati holding and that Madho settled these lands with the defendant No. 1 as an under raiyat. The defendants, on the other hand, contend that no raiyati interest was created in Madho Ram and that the settlement with them was a raiyati settlement from the tenure holder. The Court of first instance has found that there was no raiyati interest created and that the status of the plaintiff is that of a tenure-holder and that the defendants are raiyats. The suit was accordingly dismissed and this decision has been upheld on appeal by the Judicial Commissioner. The plaintiff has now appealed to this Court.

The first point which is urged before us is that the learned Judicial Commissioner has approached the case from a wrong point of view, inasmuch as he has stated that the plaintiff asserts that previously the lands had been held by Churan Ram as a raiyati holding, whereas in fact the plaintiff's case was not that the lands had been held by Churan Ram as his raiyati holding, but that they had been held by Madho Ram. There is no doubt that the plaintiff's case originally was, that the land was held by Madho Ram as a raiyati holding and that the Court of first instance found that this was not so, but apparently the case which was placed before the learned Judicial Commissioner was that it was Churan Ram who held these lands as a raiyati holding. In any case, however, there is a distinct finding of fact by both the Courts that there was no raiyati holding at all and that the whole interest that the plaintiff or his predecessor had was that of a tenure-holder. It is, however, urged that even if this be so, the defendants are estopped from denying the plaintiff's raiyati interest inasmuch as they executed kabuliyats in the year 1895, 1900 and 1906, in which the lands in suit are described as the raiyati lands of plaintiff. The section of the Evidence Act which refers to estoppel of a tenant is section 116, which runs as follows:—

"No tenant of immoveable property, or person claiming through such tenant, shall, during the continuance of the tenancy, be permitted to deny that the landlord of such tenant had, at the beginning of such tenancy, a title to such immoveable property; and no person who came upon any immoveable property by the license of the person in possession thereof shall be permitted to deny that such person had a title to such possession at the time when such license was given."

Now the defendants have never denied the plaintiff's title, but it has been strenuously urged by Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick on behalf of the appellant that not only does the section include denial of title but denial of status. He admits, however, that he can find no authority in support of his contention and, in my opinion, it is untenable. All that the section refers to is the title of the landlord and not his status, and it is impossible in my opinion to read more into the section. If then there is no estoppel, the whole case is concluded by the finding of fact which has been arrived at by both the Courts below, that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor had any raiyati interest. Under these circumstances I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

DAS, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

The simple fact that fresh evidence will alter or is expected to alter a decision already arrived at is ordinarily not a sufficient cause for granting a review. [p 46, col. 1.]

Although Order XLVII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, is not applicable to Small Cause Courts, its provisions do not limit the discretion which the High Court possesses under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and should not be used except for substantial reasons [p. 45, col. 2; p. 46, col. 1]

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order and revised decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tuticorin, in Miscellaneous Petition No 69 of 1917 and Small Cause Suit No. 961 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Petitioner — There were no good grounds for granting the review. The lower Court finds by implication that the defendant was not diligent in securing new evidence and his costs have not been allowed. The fact that the original decision was in fact altered by the new evidence will not justify the granting of the review.

The order can be revised by the High Court, as it is evident that the Court did not apply its mind to the facts stated in the defendant's affidavit.

Mr. T. V. Venkatrama Ayyar, for the Respondent – It is not necessary that the Court should have acted on the circumstances disclosed in the defendant's affidavit. It must be presumed that it had independent reasons for granting the review. Such a presumption is obligatory. See Meduru Brahmayya v. Vedulu Yellamma (1).

The lower Court has stated that the granting of the review did in fact alter its decision. That is 'sufficient cause.' See Bhagela Kuer v. Abdul Rahman (2).

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case were of an ordinary character. Defendant's defence was not established, because his evidence on certain points was deficient. On this account the lower Court at the first trial found against him. He afterwards applied for a review on the ground of discovery of fresh documentary evidence. The present petition is against the order granting it and the decision passed on that evidence in his favour.

The only ground on which the review was asked for, was that the fresh evidence could not be discovered earlier in spite of the use of due diligence. The lower Court did not find directly whether this was so. But, as in dealing with costs it said that defendant had not used due diligence, it presumably intended to find against him; and, as he adduced nothing on the point except a general assertion in his affidavit, there is no reason for rejecting this finding. It has mentioned no other reason for allowing the review.

I am asked, however, with reference to Meduru Brahmayya v. Vedulu Yellamma (1), to assume that the lower Court had sufficient reason independently of anything on which defendant relied before it; and it is argued that, as such assumption is obligatory with reference to the authority cited, there can be no question of revision in connection with this or any other case, in which the review has not been granted in consequence of a discovery of fresh evidence or contravention of rule 2. It may be conceded that with reference to a review granted for sufficient cause, the control to be exercised by an Appellate or Revisional Court need not be strict and, when the lower Court has evidently applied its mind to the circumstances, may be exercised with reference to every presumption in favour of its having done so correctly. But I do not think that the learned Judges meant more in the case cited for, if their decision is to justify defendant's contention here, it must mean that any Court is at liberty arbitrarily to hold a new trial of a case, which it has decided, or that its action cannot be scrutinized by superior authority, whether it has or has not considered whether such sufficient cause is available, since it is a presumption of law that it has done so. I cannot think that the learned Judges contemplated any such result. It may be observed that in any case their decision was given on Order XLVII, rule 7, Civil Procedure Code, which is not applicable to Small Cause Courts and, though I should be inclined to follow the principles of that rule generally in deal.

(1) 36 Ind. Cas. 437; 31 M. L. J. 509; (1916) 2 M. W. N. 278; 4 L. W. 408.

(2) 40 Ind. Cas. 79.

ing with Small Cause Court revision work, I do not think that they can be relied on as limiting the discretion, which the High Court possesses under section 25, Act IX of 1887, and which should not, in my opinion, be used except for substantial reason. Lastly, it is urged that the lower Court did in fact allege sufficient cause, when it observed that its decision was altered by the evidence newly admitted; and Bhagela Kuer v. Abdul Rahman (2) is relied on. I am not prepared to dissent from that decision. But the principle involved must, in my opinion, be applied with reference to the circumstances of the case, the gravity of the consequence of not applying it and the character of the party's default. For otherwise it would mean that review could be claimed in every case, since ex hypothesi the new evidence will alter or is expected to alter the result; and there would be no sort of finality in litigation. The present case presents, as I have said, no special features; and, in their absence, the lower Court, in my opinion, committed a material irregularity in allowing a review in the present case, simply because the fresh evidence would result in altering its decision, if that in fact was its reason.

The lower Court rejected the reason, for which the defendant asked for a review, and granted one either without any sufficient reason or, if it had one, without exercising any judicial discretion in respect of it. Its order, in these circumstances, cannot be sustained and must be set aside, its decree, dated 15th December 19 6, being restored with costs throughout, including those in the revision petition.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12, Sch. I Art. 158—Award, filing of, what amounts to—"Court," meaning of—Application to set aside award—Limitation—Time spent in obtaining copy of award, exclusion of.

The word "Court" in Article 158 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act means the Court, and not the chief ministerial officer of the Court, such as, in the case of a High Court, the Registrar. And "submission" in that article means submission to the Court and not to such officer. [p 47, col 1.]

In computing the period prescribed for an application to set aside an award the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award should be excluded. [p. 47, col. 2.]

Mr. N. Sirkar (with him Mr. S. C. Bose), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Das (with him Mr. H. D. Bose), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—The facts are fully set forth in the judgment of Greaves, J., which I need not repeat. It is sufficient to say that there was an award in an arbitration made in a suit and that this award was set aside by the Court. When it was set aside, Counsel for the party now appellant stated at the Bar that having considered the materials before him, he could not resist the order which the plaintiff sought and which was in fact made. A review of this order was then asked for by the appellant on the ground that the application to set aside the award was barred by limitation under Article 158 of the Indian Limitation Act (1908), more than 10 days having elapsed since the date when the award was submitted to the Court. This involves a consideration of the question of the meaning of the words "submission" and "Court".

In the appeal it is contended on the authority of the decision of Harington, J., in the case reported as Nobin Kally Dabee v. Ambica Churn Banerjee (1) that the time from which limitation runs is the date on which the award is received by the Registrar (in this case the 10th October 1917), and not the date on which the award is filed (in this case the 22nd November). Assuming that this decision is correct, it is not established that the application to set aside the award was barred, for the respondent is entitled to exclude the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award. An application for copy was made on 3rd September. This application was premature in that no award had then been received. When, however, it was received on the 10th of October, the application still subsisting took effect and in fact it is found that it was on the strength of this application that a copy was subsequently given. The question then is what was the time "requisite." From the 10th October to the 17th November the Court was closed and on the 22nd November the award was filed.

A copy could not under the rules be given of the award until it was filed and from 22nd to 27th November was taken up in supplying a copy of the award previously filed. There is no difficulty here, unless it is shown that it was the duty of the respondent to file the award and that he could and should have done so between the 17th and 22nd November. But the duty of the respondent in this respect is not, I think, made out. No provision to that effect has been shown us and on the contrary rule 10, Schedule II, of the Civil Procedure Code provides that the arbitrator should cause the award to be filed and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties. It cannot be said, therefore, there was any laches and the time during the period 10th October and 27th November should be excluded. It is not, as the learned Judge holds, that time commenced to run from the 27th November, but it commenced to run (on this hypothesis) from the 10th October but the time requisite for obtaining a copy must be excluded.

I am not, however, at present satisfied that the decision of Harington, J, is correct.

Having regard to the aforegoing facts it is not necessary finally to decide the matter, but it seems to me that the word "Court" in Article 158 of the Limitation Act means "Court" and not its Registrar, and "submission" means submission to the Court, which again according to Schedule II, section 10, of the Civil Procedure Code is to be done by filing the award in Court. I feel a difficulty in holding with Harington, J., in Nobin Kally Dabee v. Ambica Churn Banerjee (1) that time runs not from the time the award is filed in Court but from the time it arrives at the Registrar's Office. If time ran from the 22nd November, five days must be excluded for the obtaining of a copy. Copy was not obtainable on the application of the 3rd September till the 27th November so that these five days must be excluded and, therefore, the application of the 6th December was in time. Though the result at which I have arrived is the same, I do not agree with the opinion expressed in the judgment under appeal that time commenced to run from the 27th November when a copy of the award was first obtainable. Time on this hypothesis commenced to run on the 22nd November when the award was filed, but under section 12 of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application to set aside an award the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award shall be excluded.

Rule 1, Chapter XXIII, appears to have been passed after Harington, J.'s judgment and from its wording seems to have been based on that decision. Rule 10 of Schedule II of the Code was section 516 of the earlier Code in force prior to the judgment of Harington, J. This rule 1 does not appear to be in conformity with the provisions of rule 10, Schedule II of the Code, which provides for the arbitrator causing the award to be filed and for notice being given to the parties. It does not say anything about submission to the Registrar for the purpose of being filed, notice by the Registrar and so forth. If then time commenced to run either on the 10th October or 22nd November, it does not appear that the application was barred. As regards the contention that if the argument as to limitation fails the Court should have allowed the evidence of the arbitrator to be given when the application to set aside the award was made, Counsel for the defendant said that having considered the materials before him he could not resist the order which the plaintiff sought. This case, therefore, is not one upon which the appellant should be allowed at this stage further enquiry on the facts as to the merits of the case. The allegations as to the alleged misconduct on the part of the arbitrator are not satisfactorily answered in the affidavits filed on behalf of the appellant and in my opinion the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I agree.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11 (a)—"Lease for a term of not less than seven years," meaning of—Lease reserving right of re-entry, whether covered by section - Occupancy rights, accrual of.

The intention and meaning of "lease for a term of not less than 7 years" in section 11 (a) of the Agra Tenancy Act is that from the commencement of the period the tenant shall have a certainty of freedom of disturbance for 7 years with a quid pro quo to the landlord in the provision that the tenant shall not count the period towards accrual of occupancy rights. A condition in the lease giving a power of re-entry to the landlord within the 7 years cuts at the very root of the principle which the law is intended to cover. [p 48, col. 2]

Where under a lease purporting to be for seven years, the landlord retains the power of re-entry on the whole or any unspecified part of a holding within the seven years, the lease cannot be regarded as one "for a term of not less than seven years" under proviso (a) to section 11 of the Agra Tenancy Act so as to preclude the tenant from counting the seven years towards accrual of occupancy rights. [p. 48, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Meerut Division, dated the 9th January 1919, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—There is only one point in dispute in this appeal. Shib Singh, respondent, held for the years 1315 to 1321 under a lease. It, or rather the counterpart, is on record. It purports at the outset to be a 7 years' lease, but it contains a condition, among others, which have not been and need not be discussed, that if the landlord specially requires part of the land (kisi qadr juz) for "planting a grove or building a house or well, etc.," the tenant shall give it up on a proportionate reduction from the rent. He is also under clause 7 of the lease to be liable for ejectment for breach of any of its conditions, which covers this condition. The Commissioner holds that the effect of this condition is that the lease is not one "for a term of not less than 7 years" within the meaning of section 11 (a), Tenancy Act, and the tenant can, therefore, count the 7 years towards accrual of occupancy right. This view is, I consider, correct. It is quite immaterial that the landlord did not try to exercise his right of re entry on any part of the holding during the seven years. The intention and meaning of "lease for a term of not less than 7 years" in section 11 (a) is that from the commencement of the period the tenant shall have a certainty of freedom of disturbance for the 7 years, with a quid pro quo to the landlord in the provision that the tenant shall not count the period towards accrual of occupancy rights. The condition in the lease giving a power of re-entry to the landlord within the seven years cuts at the very root of the principle which the law is intended to cover, for the tenant cannot know whether in one year the landlord may not require him to vacate some part of the holding—it may be worst or it may be the best—he has not complete stability of tenure for 7 years over any part of his holding, and is proportionately discouraged from putting money into improving his land. I must agree, therefore, with the Commissioner that when the landlord retains under a lease the power of re-entry on the whole or any unspecified part of a holding within the seven years, the lease cannot be regarded as one "for a term of not less than seven years" under section 11 (a). The appellant urges that in petition No. 45 of 1917-18 my predecessor took a different view. I have read this decision, it was not a considered decision on this point—the appellant not having based his case upon it originally. The Board's decision in Petition No. 37 of 1917-18, Nanpat v. Asghar Ali, deals with the same point and adopts the view which I hold in the present case. The appellant further suggests in his third ground of appeal that the re-entry condition should be disregarded altogether, because it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Act and the landlord could not have enforced it if he had tried; that he could not have brought a suit to eject under section 57 (c) successfully if the tenant had refused to vacate any required portion. He cannot, however, indicate precisely with what provision of the Act the condition is inconsistent. He alludes vaguely to section 3. Now section 3 (c) certainly says a land-holder shall not eject otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act, but he does not point out nor do I see myself any provision of the Act which bars a condition in a lease that the landlord shall have power of partial re-entry within the seven years' term, and when the tenant has accepted the condition there seems no reason why a suit under section 57 (c) should not lie for breach of the condition by the tenant. But the condition takes the whole lease out of the category of leases "for a term of not less than seven years" in the complete sense in which that term is intended in section 11 (a), and I would dismiss the appeal with costs. This governs cognate Appeals Nos. 34, 35, 36, 37 and 38.

As the point involved is of some importance, the judgment will go to my colleague for concurrence.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I concur. A land holder is entitled under section 11 (a) of the Tenancy Act to prevent the acquisition of a right of occupancy in any land by granting the tenant of it a registered lease for a term of not less than seven years The object of the lease is that the tenant should have security of tenure. If the tenant is liable to be called upon to surrender some unspecified portion of the land at the pleasure of the land-holder, he has no security as regards any part of it. If he is liable to surrender the whole, he is clearly in no better position than a tenant at-will.

Moulvi Muhammad Mustafa Khan, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside a decree of dismissal in a suit for rent, in which the value of the claim was under Rs. 100. On the 2nd July 1903 the plaintiff purchased the interest of the landlord as well as the back rent due. On the 5th February 1909 he instituted this suit for recovery of arrears for 1905, 1907, 1908 and two instalments of 1909. The claim in respect of the years 1905, 1907, 1908 was for back rent to which he had acquired title by purchase. The remainder of the claim has accrued due since his purchase. The defendant resisted the claim on the ground, among others, that the plaintiff had not registered his name under the Land Registration Act of 1876, and was consequently not competent to sue in view of the provisions of section 78. It is stated on behalf of the plaintiff in this Court, and not denied on the part of the defendant, that this objection was abandoned by the Pleader for the defendant, in the Court of first instance. The plaintiff, however, applied to the Revenue Authorities for a copy of the land registration decree. When the case came on for trial, a new Pleader appeared for the defendant and was allowed to press this point, although it had been abandoned by the Pleader who originally appeared for the defendant. The plaintiff was taken by surprise, and as he was not ready with the copy of the land registration decree, the suit was dismissed. He subsequently applied for review of judgment. Notice was thereupon issued to the defendant and although the copy of the land registration decree was produced, the application for review of judgment was ultimately dismissed. An appeal against the original decree was then lodged before the District Judge, and was sought to be supported on the ground that it was not obligatory upon the plaintiff to have his name registered under section 78 of the Land Registration Act in respect of the back rent. It does not appear, however, whether the copy of the land registration decree, which had been filed in the Court of first instance along with the application for review of judgment, was produced before the District Judge. With regard to the back rent, the District Judge held that the plaintiff was bound to have his name registered precisely in the same way as for rent which had accrued due in his time. We are now invited to set aside the order of the Court of first instance which has thus been affirmed by the District Judge. In our opinion the Court of first instance acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

After the objection, which was of an entirely technical and, as is plain on the facts of the present case, an unsubstantial character, had been abandoned, it should not have been allowed to be revived at the hearing to the detriment of the plaintiff. The provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act were framed for the protection of the tenant, and the tenant is free to waive that benefit. It is also indispensable that if he does waive them, he cannot be permitted at his choice to resile from the position deliberately adopted by him. If this view were not taken, the gravest injury might be done to the plaintiff, as is illustrated by the very case now before us. The copy of the land registration decree has been produced before this Court, and there is no room for dispute that the plaintiff has complied with the requirements of the law. But with regard to the back rent the District Judge has taken an obviously erroneous view. The case of Syed Serapat Hossein v. Tarini Prosad Dobey (1) shows that the provisions of section 78 of the Land Registration Act have no application to the case of a person to whom rent has been assigned by a proprietor whose name has not been registered under the Statute. In the case before us, the name of the vendor of the plaintiff was registered under the Land Registration Act. The plaintiff could not very well have been invited to do what was impossible, namely, to have his name registered in respect of the period during which he had no title and for which the name of his predecessor in-interest was registered in accordance with law. We must consequently hold that the suit should not have been dismissed for the reasons stated by the Court below. We may further point out, as has been repeatedly laid down [Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lall Sen (2), Belchambers v. Nawab Sir Syed Hussain Ali Mirza Bahadur (3) and Abul Khair v. Meher Ali (4)], that it would have been sufficient for the plaintiff to prove during the trial that his name was registered subsequent to the institution of the suit. In the present case, his name was registered before the institution of the suit.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the decree of the Court below set aside and the case remanded to the Court of first instance for re trial in the presence of both the parties. As the Rule has not been opposed, we make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—On the 1st August 1916 Mrs. Hill took a sewing machine on hire from the Singer Sewing Machine Company. The agreement was that she was to pay Rs. 5 per mensem as hire and to keep the machine in her custody but not to sell or dispose of it, and that if the rent was not regularly paid the Company would have the right to take back the machine. There was a further covenant that the hirer might at any time during the hire become the purchaser of the machine on payment of Rs. 95 in cash, provided the payments of hire were regularly made. Mrs. Hill did not pay the hire regularly. She owed some money to Mrs. Albert for board and messing charges. In lieu of the money so due she delivered the sewing machine to Mrs. Albert. The Singer Sewing Machine Company sued Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Albert for the recovery of the machine or the value thereof and for the balance of the hire. The Court below decreed the claim for the recovery of the arrears of hire against Mrs. Hill and directed Mrs. Albert to return the machine with its accessories within a week or to pay Rs. 95, its value.

On behalf of Mrs. Albert it is urged that she had purchased the machine in good faith and was protected by section 103, Exception 1, of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), from being required to return the machine or pay its value. The Court below finds that Mrs. Albert acted in good faith in purchasing the machine in lieu of money due to her. The possession referred to in that exception is, however, distinguishable from mere custody or possession held for a specific or limited purpose. It must be juridical or held under some right analogous to that of the owner or involving, expressly or impliedly, a power to sell, though the owner may have restricted the exercise of that right in a particular manner. A hirer of goods holds the goods hired in his custody so long as he pays the hire. The person who gives the goods on hire remains in juridical possession thereof through the hirer. His consent is limited to their use. A person who gives his rifle to another for cleaning it does not consent to his keeping it in his possession. He only consents to his cleaning it. Similarly a person who gives his horse to another for the purpose of training it does not consent to the latter keeping the horse in his possession. He merely consents to his training it. The possession of a hirer is in no sense better. In Greenwood v. Holquette (1) it was held that where a person holds a certain article on hire with an option to purchase, the nature of the possession and the powers of the person having it are determined by the contract of hire. When in such a case the hirer sells the article hired to another person, the owner is entitled to recover the same from the purchaser though the latter may have acted in good faith. In Shankar Murlidhar v Mohanlal Jaduram (2), where the plaintiff left a buffalo and a calf with a third person to be taken care of by him during his absence from home and the latter sold the animals to the defendants, it was held that the plaintiff could recover them from the defendant. There West, J., pointed out that Exception 1 to section 108 had a particular relation to cases of persons allowed by owners to have the indicia of the property or possession under such circumstances as might naturally induce others to regard them as owners and constitute some degree of negligence or defect of precaution imputable to the true owners. Where, however, the detention of the chattel was allowed for a particular limited purpose, there was not such possession as was contemplated by that exception. In J. W. Seager v. Hukma Kessa (3) a distinction was drawn between juridical possession and mere custody, and a wife who held charge of a jewel case containing the ornaments belonging to her husband subject to his directions and control was held to have acquired no such possession as would validate a pledge thereof made by her without his knowledge or consent. In Biddomoye Dabee v. Sittaram (4) the custody of a servant was similarly held to be insufficient to validate a pledge made by him of articles left in his charge as such servant. As pointed out in Balasundaram v. Krishna Aiyar (5), a person who obtains an article under the hire purchase system does not become the owner thereof till a payment is made in full in pursuance of the agreement. Till such payment is made, he is only entitled to the use of the article in terms of the agreement and subject to the control of the owner. In Nandlal v. Bank of Bombay (6) the view taken by Beaman, J., was that where possession was held by the consent of the owner, whether the consent was conditional or otherwise, the person who was allowed the possession might give a good title, but on appeal [Nandlal v. Bank of Bombay (7)] it was held that the possession referred to in section 178 was lawful juridical possession unconnected with and independent of any interest in the property possessed or such possession as a factor had, in other words, such possession as was had by an agent entrusted as such and ordinarily having as such agent the power of sale or pledge. In Seshappier v Subramania Chettiar (8) a similar view was taken. In Naganada Davay v. Bappu Chettiar (9) the pledge of a jewel by the hirer was held to be unenforceable against the owner. The possession of Mrs. Hill was, therefore, not such possession as is contemplated by section 108, Exception 1, of the Indian Contract Act. She had no power of sale. The application is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Application dismissed.

Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (VIII B. C. of 1869), ss. 14, 29—Notice of enhancement of rent, period of operation of—Suit to recover rent at enhanced rate when maintainable.

What section 14 of the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1869 requires is that not less than three months' notice should be given if the landlord intends to enhance the rent of an under-tenant or a raiyat. It cannot be held that a notice which gives over nine months is a notice which fails to comply with the provisions of that section. [p. 53, col 2.]

The object of section 14 of the Bengal Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1869 is that a suit for enhancement should not be brought without previous due notice But it does not follow that when a notice under that section is once given, the suit for enhancement of rent cannot be brought two or three years afterwards. [p. 53, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 26th November 1917, modifying that of the Munsif, Goalpara, dated the 22nd September, 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babus Purno Chandra Roy and Brojolal Chakravarty), for the Appellant —The Court of Appeal below has erred in law in dismissing the suit for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate on the ground that the notice under section 14 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 was not duly served. The notice served in Chaitra 1320 was rightly treated by the plaintiff as a notice for enhancement of rent from the year 1322 B S., and, therefore, the present suit for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate was maintainable. Refers to sections 14 and 29 of Act VIII (B C.) of 1869. See also Shahzada Mahomed Rohimmooddeen v. Radha Mohun Mondul (1).

Babu Probodh Chandra Roy, for the Respondent, contended that under Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 a suit for enhancement of rent was not competent without a due notice under section 14 of the Act. In this case the notice contemplated enhancement of rent from 1321, but as the notice had not been served until 6th Chaitra 1320, the plaintiff treated the notice as one for enhancement of rent from the year 1322. But he could not do so because the notice had no legal effect after 1321. The case in Shahzada Mahomed Rohimmooddeen v. Radha Mohun Mondul (1) is distinguishable from this case.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit sought to recover arrears of rent for the year 1321 B. S. at the rate on which the defendant had been paying for the previous years and for the year 1322 B. S. at an enhanced rate. There was also a prayer for ejectment, but it is not now pressed. The claim for enhanced rent was based on section 14 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869, which is the rent law in force in the district of Goalpara. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal dismissed the claim for enhancement of rent on the ground that the notice had not been duly served under that section. It appears from the notice that the plaintiff originally intended to give notice of enhancement which would take effect from 1321 B. S. The notice was filed in the Collector's Office on the 27th Pous 1320. If it could have been served before the end of that month, it would have been effective to enable the plaintiff to sue for enhancement of rent for the year 1321. But, as a matter of fact, the notice was not served until 6th Chaitra 1320, that is, more than two months later. Accordingly the plaintiff treated it as a notice for enhancement commencing with the year 1322 and has brought this suit within three months of the termination of that year in compliance with the provisions of section 29 of the Act. The lower Appellate Court held that this notice was not in accordance with section 14 of the Act. It held that when the notice for enhancement of rent was for the year 1321 only and not being served so as to give effect during that year, the notice was spent and had no legal effect thereafter. I am unable to agree with this decision. What section 14 requires is that not less than three months' notice should be given if the landlord intends to enhance the rent of the under tenant or the raiyat. I cannot say that the notice which gives over nine months is a notice which fails to comply with the provisions of that section. The view I take is also confirmed by the decision of this Court in the case of Shahzada Mahamed Rohimmooddeen v. Radha Mohun Mondul (1). That was a decision under section 13 of Act X of 1859, corresponding to section 14 of Act VIII of 1869, and their Lordships remarked that the object of section 13 was that a suit for enhancement should not be brought without previous due notice. "But it does not follow that when a notice under that section is once given, the suit for enhancement of rent for the next year should be brought within the same year and that the suit for enhancement of rent cannot be brought 2 or 3 years afterwards." In that case the notice was served at the end of the year 1267 and the enhancement of rent was claimed for the year 1270. In the lower Appellate Court, the appeal was decreed on this preliminary ground only. As I differ from the learned Subordinate Judge, his judgment and decree are reversed and the case is remanded for re-hearing of the appeal on the other points that arose in the appeal before him.

Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Benami transaction—Burden of proof—Court, duty of.

In matters of benami transactions, it is essential for Courts of law to take care that their decisions rest not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. At the same time, the Courts ought not to approach such transactions with that scrupulous rigour which in other systems of jurisprudence may demand the existence of the clearest possible evidence that the ex facie owner of property is a trustee for or holds the same for the interest of another. Even a silght quantity of evidence will suffice for the purpose of showing that the transaction was a sham. The person who impugns the apparent character of a transfer must, however, show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction. [p. 56, col. 1.]

W. hypothecated among other properties, a share in a certain mauza. The mortgagee obtained a decree on the bond against W. and some of the mortgaged properties were sold, including the share in the mauza, which was purchased by B., the wife of W. who obtained possession and continued to receive the rents and the profits up to the time of her death. Shortly before her death she bequeathed this property to M., the appellant, and he obtained possession of it. After the deaths of B. and the mortgagee, the present suit was brought for a declaration that the share in the mauza never belonged to B., but remained W.'s, B.'s purchase being a simulate transaction, and that the property was held in her name benami for W. The High Court decreed the claim and M, the devisee of B., appealed to the Privy Council:

Held, that plaintiff had entirely failed to prove that B's. ownership was benami for W and that the fact of the action having been brought after years of possession and when the principal parties to the transaction challenged and also the mortgagee were dead was a circumstance not without weight in such cases and involved a certain addition to that duty or onus of proof which in benami cases undoubtedly rested upon the assertor. JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bareilly.

The principal object of the suit is to obtain a declaration that the defendant No. 1 has no right or share in a 15-biswa and 8-biswansi Zemindari share in Mouza Tigra Khanpur, and that that share is saleable in satisfaction of a balance of debt, still unpaid, by Wilayat Ali Khan.

Wilayat was the husband of Musammat Bigga Begam. He was indebted to Durga Parshad in a considerable sum of money, which he had borrowed under a bond, dated the 5th February 1878, hypothecating, among other properties, the share in Mouza Tigra Khanpur just mentioned. The mortgagee obtained a decree on the bond against the mortgagor on the 26th March 1886 and that decree was made absolute in the following December. Some of the mortgaged properties were then sold. Among others the share in Mauza Tigra Khanpur was sold in execution of the mortgage decree, and, on the 20th July 1898, was purchased by Musammat Bigga Begam, Wilayat's wife, and Hakim Ahsan Ali Khan for 10,000 rupees. There is nothing surprising in the transaction. Wilayat and his wife seem to have been persons in good position, and the purchase by her and the co-purchaser named Hakim Ahsan appears to have been considered by the family and all concerned as quite natural. This was in the year 1898. On the 20th December 1899 Hakim Ahsan Ali Khan executed a deed relinquishing all his rights to the property. Bigga Begam obtained possession. Her name was duly recorded in the revenue papers, and a great quantity of receipts and documents of that kind has been produced showing that she duly received the rents and produce of the property up to the time of her death. This event occurred on the 21st October 1908.

About a fortnight before, namely, on the 9th October, she executed a Will in favour of the appellant. Her husband, Willayat, and her nephews Iqbal Husain alias Kalan, Aulad Husain and Hamid Husain, consented to the testamentary disposition of her entire estate. It cannot be denied that they did so both during her life and after her death. The Will bears the husband's attestation, and it is proved that husband and nephews were informed by her of her testamentary intentions and consented thereto. On the 4th December 1908 the husband and the nephews executed deeds of relinquishment of the shares, ratifying their consent, and on the 20th January 1909 two applications were made by the husband and the nephews respectively for mutation of names in favour of the appellant.

The appellant, having thus inherited the property in dispute, obtained possession thereof, his name was duly recorded in the revenue papers, and he has been in actual possession ever since.

It will be observed accordingly that for about ten years the share in this mauza had passed out of the possession of Wilayat and into the possession of his wife and thereafter of her devisee. This unquestionably must have been to the knowledge of Durga Prashad.

When, however, in October 1908, Bigga Begam died, it appears then to have occurred to Durga Prashad that he might attach and realise under his judgment decree the interest which Wilayat would have under the Muhammadan Law in the property of Bigga Begam, his wife, notwithstanding her Will. By the Muhammadan Law, explained in the Hedaya, Hamilton's Edition, IV, 469, and founded upon a declaration of the Prophet, the power of a testator to leave his property by Will is limited to a one-third share. By the same law the husband would have been entitled to another third and the nephews to the remaining third. Durga Parshad was advised at this period by one Ramji Mal, who was his general attorney and is now the general attorney of his sons, and who is the principal witness in the present case for them as plaintiffs. His evidence is not believed by either of the Courts below, but this much is corroborated by the recorded proceedings, namely: "On the death of Bigga Begam I informed my master and told him that half of her estate in the Tigra Khanpur property devolved on Wilayat Ali Khan and I made an application to the Court for the attachment of the same." The proceedings were grounded on the acknowledgment by Durga Parshad, advised by Ramji Mal, of the fundamental fact that Bigga Begam when she died was the owner of the shares in this mauza, and that by reason of her death Wilayat succeeded by force of law to a certain portion thereof.

These proceedings ended in failure. Possibly it was then demonstrated that Wilayat and the nephews had consented, and did consent, to the Will and that accordingly nothing passed to them but that the Will should have effect in its entirety. This is in complete accord with the Muhammadan Law [see, for instance, Cherachom Vittil Ayisha Kutti Umah v. Valia Pudiakel Biathu Umah (1) and Daulat Ram v. Abdul Kayum (2) and section 270 of Sir R. K. Wilson's "Digest of Muhammadan Law."]

So matters stood until the 28th September 1910, when the present suit was instituted. Its foundation in law is section 90 of Act IV of 1882, which provides for the event of the proceeds of anterior sales or realisations having failed to satisfy the full decretal amount due by the judgment-debtor. Its foundation in fact is that the share in the mauza never belonged to Bigga Begam at all but remained Wilayat's and that, in short, the purchase by Bigga Begam was a simulate transaction, and that the property was held in her name benami for Wilayat. This allegation is made, and this totally new attitude is assumed, after the lady is dead, and after Durga Parshad is dead. It is of course inconsistent with Durga Parshad's prior allegation, in which the property was admitted to be that of Bigga Begam and Wilayat was alleged to have succeeded to her as one of her heirs. Their Lordships do not enter into a consideration of the evidence. Having perused it, they are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has come to a correct conclusion as set forth in his careful judgment. He does not credit the story.

The learned Judges of the High Court do not differ from the Subordinate Judge in disbelieving the plaintiff's witnesses. In the opinion of the Board they have not attached due significance to, indeed they have ignored, an important and crucial element in the case, viz, the position taken up during the life of Durga Parshad, the mortgagee in the litigation already alluded to. They have thus failed to reach a correct conclusion upon any balancing of evidence that might be required. They proceed apparently on the view of the improbability of Bigga Begam having 10,000 rupees to spare for the purchase of the share in this village. In their Lordships' opinion, whether the conjectures which they make upon that topic be or be not correct, they are mere conjectures. Lord Westbury observed in the benami case of Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopaulchunder Chuckerbutty (3), "Undoubtedly there are, in the evidence, circumstances which may create suspicion, and doubt may be entertained with regard to the truth of the case made by the appellant; but in matters of this description, it is essential to take care that the decision of the Court rests not upon suspicion, but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony." Their Lordships are far from agreeing that any circumstances of suspicion have been established in the present case; and the observations of Lord Westbury are accordingly a fortiori.

On the other hand, in regard to benami transactions, Courts of law should not approach them with that scrupulous rigour which in other systems of jurisprudence may demand the existence of the clearest positive evidence that the ex facie owner of a property is a trustee for or holds the same for the interest of another. Benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, and as Lod Hobhouse said in Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (4), "Even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose." The learned Judge, however, added, "still, such a transfer cannot be considered as nothing; the person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction" This brings the legal situation into line with the general doctrine already cited from Lord Westbury.

It is, however, in the present case their Lordships' opinion that proof that Bigga Begam's ownership was benami for Wilayat has entirely failed. The action is brought after years of possession, and when the principal parties to the transaction challenged and also the mortgagee himself are dead. This is a circumstance not without weight in such cases, and it involves a certain addition to that duty or onus of proof which, in benami cases, does undoubtedly rest upon the asserter.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge should be reverted to, and that the appellant be found entitled to costs from the date thereof, namely, the 16th September 1912, and to the costs of this appeal.

Appeal allowed.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION No. 1102 OF 1918.

APPU HEGADE—RESPONDENT.

Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863), s. 10, order under Review, whether permissible—Inherent power of Court - Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 141, 151.

Inasmuch as there is no explicit provision in the Religious Endowments Act for a review, a District Judge has no power, under that Act, to review an order passed by him under section 10 of the Act, nor has he any such power under section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 57, col 2; p. 58, cols. 1 & 2.]

The power to review is not inherent in a Court, and can only be exercised if it is permitted by Statute. [p. 58, cols 1 & 2.]

Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, South Canara, dated the 29th July 918, in I. A. No. 32 of 1918, in Original Petition No. 8 of 918.

FACTS appear from the judgment

Mr. A Narayanaswami Aiyar for Mr. K N. Aiya Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—An order under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act is a judicial order passed by a Civil Court. Kalarishna Uliyar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (1). Hence the Court that passed such an order can review it under section 114, Civil Procedure Code, or under section 151, Civil Procedure Code (inherent power). See also section 141. The provisions of the Code should be applied to all proceedings in Civil Courts.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondent.—The right of review must be specially conferred by Statute and section 114, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to this case. Section 141 applies only to procedure but review is a substantive right. Damodara Menon v. Kittappa Menon (2). Right of review is not inherent. Brij Nath Ram Goenka v. Kumar Singh (3). Statute alone can confer it. Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (4), Damodara Nadar v Manicka Vachaka Dasika Pandara Sannadhi (5), Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6), Vulcan Iron Works Co. Ltd. v. Biswambar Pershad (7), Drew v. Willis (8), Lala Pryag Lal v. Jai Narayan Singh (9).

The provisions of the Code do not apply to Revenue Courts. See also Baijnath Ram Goenka v. Nand Kumar Singh (10); The Bolivar (11).

Further, section 9 of the Religious Endowments Act makes a special provision for similar cases and so the Civil Procedure Code cannot apply.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The only question we have to decide is whether a District Judge can, at the instance of a party, review an order passed by him under section 10 of Act XX of 863.

The Act contains no explicit provision for a review and petitioner has accordingly supported his claim to one with reference to (1) the Code of Civil Procedure, (2) the inherent power of the Court.

As regards the Code there is nothing in the Act to apply its provisions and they can be applicable, if at all, only with reference to section 141 of the Code itself. That section, however, does no more than provide for the procedure to be adopted by Courts of civil jurisdiction in dealing with matters before them. It does not authorize an appeal, since that would not be a mere matter of procedure, but the recognition of a substantive right, which must be conferred in explicit terms. Damodara Menon v. Kittappa Menon (2). And similarly it confers no right to a review. For we have not been shown how the one right stands on a different footing from the other.

To turn to the alternative ground for petitioner's claim, that the power or duty to review an erroneous decision is inherent in the Court, he has supported it mainly with reference to Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v Rughoonath Pershad (12). I referred to the material dicta in that case in my judgment in Muthiah Chettiar v. Bawa Sahib (4) and I am still of opinion that the Court's action, which the Judicial Committee then approved, consisted merely in the recognition that previous proceedings authorised by it were void. I may now add that the case can be regarded on the widest construction only as authorising the Court to repudiate its previous proceedings on the ground that they were without jurisdiction, Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6) being similarly decided in very similar circumstances, or alternatively on the ground referred to in the judgment that a mistake had been made through inadvertence. Again in Mahomad Kala Mea v. Harperink (13) the right to review was recognised, because the proceedings were vitiated by the fraud or misrepresentation of an officer of the Court.

These cases, however, merely constitute exceptions to a rule which is otherwise well established, and the facts in none of them in any degree resemble those alleged before us. For the rule that a Court cannot review its own decision except so far as it is permitted to do so by Statute, is of general authority, since it is recognised alike in England, for instance in Drew v. Wilis (8) and in India in Damodara Nadar v. Manicka Vachaka Dasika Pandara Sannadhi (5), Lala Fryag Lal v. Jai Narayan Singh (9) and Baij Nath Ram Goenka v. Nand Kumar Singh (3). And here the petitioner has alleged only that, if he had had a better opportunity of laying his case before the lower Court, he would have been able to adduce evidence, which would have resulted in a different decision.

In these circumstances there was no ground on which the lower Court could be asked to review its order. The civil revision petition must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I am of the same opinion.

The question raised in the order of the learned District Judge is a very important one and I shall, therefore, say a few words. The ground has been cleared considerably after hearing the very able arguments of Mr. Sitarama Rao who appeared for the counter-petitioner.

It was argued by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that, as under the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Balakrishna Udayar v Vasudeva Aiyar (1) the District Judge in filling up a vacancy under section 10 of Act XX of 1863 is acting judicially, his orders are clothed with all the rights and are subject to all the disabilities which attach to his judgments in an ordinary civil action. I do not think this result follows from the judgment of the Privy Council. District Judges in this Presidency have jurisdiction to hear and determine cases under special acts. In some of them, the procedure to be followed is prescribed. In others, the Civil Procedure Code is referred to as regulating procedure. Where neither of these provisions exist, the District Judge if he is asked to deal with the subject judicially, should act on the principle of audi alteram partem, take such evidence as may be tendered and decide the matter according to well-recognised principles of jurisprudence. Such a disposal does not necessitate the application of all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure to his procedure and conclusions.

It was next argued that section 141 of the Code of Civil Procedure is indicative of a general enunciation of principle by the Legislature that to all the judicial proceedings, the Civil Procedure Code is applicable. The section only empowers the Judge to regulate judicial trials by rules as to summoning of witnesses, etc., which are to be found in the Code and not that the Code is to be applied in its entirety to such proceedings, including power of appeal and of review.

The last argument related to the inherent power of a judicial officer to review his own judgment. It is settled law that a case is not open to appeal unless the Statute gives such a right. The power to review must also be given by the Statute. Prima facie a party who has obtained a decision is entitled to keep it unassailed, unless the Legislature has indicated the mode by which it can be set aside. A review is practically the hearing of an appeal by the same officer who decided the case. There is at least as good reason for saying that such power should not be exercised unless the Statute gives it, as for saying that another tribunal should not hear an appeal from the trial Court unless such a power is given to it by Statute. This was the view taken by Lord Esher in Drew v. Willis (8) In Charles Bright & Co. Ltd. v. Sellar (14) and in Hession v. Jones (15) the same principle was enunciated. The decision in The Bolivar (11) as pointed out by Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, proceeds on the ground that no party should be condemned unheard and when such a procedure has been adopted, the Court has inherent power to reconsider its decision.

The course of decisions in this country has followed the same line. In Damodara Nadar v. Manicka Vachaka Desika

(15) (1914) 2 K. B. 421; 83 L. J. K. B. 810; 110 L. T. 773; 30 T. L. R. 229.

Pandara Sannadhi (5) in which the question was whether a Collector can review his order under the Revenue Recovery Act, this Court following, Drew v. Willis (8), held that the right to review is not an inherent power. Lala Fryog Lal v. Jai Narayan Singh (9) is to the same effect. In Baijnath Ram Goenka v. Nand Kumar Singh (10) a similar view was taken. When that case was taken before the Privy Council, Lord Atkinson, in the course of the argument and in the short judgment that he delivered on behalf of the Board, declared in explicit terms that the power to review is not inherent in a Court. Mr. Sitarama Rao with characteristic frankness drew our attention to Syud Tuffuzzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoenath Pershad (12) as sounding the other way. After reading that judgment I am convinced the Judicial Committee did not intend to lay down that a Court has power to review its own judgment even though there is no law empowering it to do so. It was pointed out in that case that the order was an invalid one; that is to say, it was an order which the Court had no jurisdiction to pass. That decision is of the same class to which The Bolivar (11) belongs. Another Privy Council case in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Habib Shah (6) proceeds on the ground that a Court has power to correct mistakes into which it has been led by inadvertence. In Mahomed Kala Mea v. Harperink (13) the auction purchaser was misled by the misrepresentation of the Court officers. The Judicial Committee held that a Court should be careful to see that it does not contribute to the inflicting of injuries on persons who come before it, believing that the Court and its officers would act honestly. These cases do not affect the present question.

In a review, in short, a party generally claims a re-consideration of the decision on the ground either there is some fresh evidence or a new pronouncement of law or some new matter which, if taken into account, would have affected the attitude of the Court regarding the matter in dispute. Such a consideration is analogous to what happens on the hearing of an appeal and is not analogous to proceedings in which for fraud or inadvertence, the Court is permitted to set aside its order. I am, therefore, of opinion that a District Judge has no power to review his own decision passed under section 10 of the Religious Endowments Act. It is unnecessary to consider the further argument of Mr. Sitarama Rao whether section 9 of Act XX of 1863 is applicable to orders passed by the District Judge under section 10 of the same Act.

I agree that the petition should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.— On the 24th March 1901 the plaintiff executed a usufructuary mortgage of land in favour of the first defendant for the benefit of the latter and his father, the second defendant. The defendants went into possession but defaulted to pay rent to the superior landlord, who had the property sold under Regulation VIII of 1819. The third defendant became the purchaser at this sale. The Courts below have concurrently found, contrary to the allegation of the defendants, that the sale was brought about by the fraud of the first two defendants, that the purchase was made by them in the name of their relation, the third defendant, and, that their possession of the property has been in no way affected by the proceedings in Court. On the 10th September 1912 the plaintiff commenced this suit for redemption of the mortgage and obtained a decree in the trial Court. Three appeals were thereupon preferred, one by the first two defendants, a second by the third defendant, and the third by the plaintiff. The District Judge dismissed the appeal of the third defendant, and modified the decree of the Court of first instance on the appeals of the plaintiff and the first two defendants. This decree has been assailed before us in two separate appeals, one by the first two defendants, the other by the third defendant. On the elaborate arguments advanced by both sides in this Court, two substantial points emerge for consideration, namely, first, should the trial Court have framed an issue to determine whether the plaintiff was the real owner of the property as alleged by him or a benamidar for his father and other members of the joint family, as asserted by the defendants; and, secondly, whether the mortgage accounts have been taken on an erroneous principle.

As regards the first point, the Courts below have found that at the date of the mortgage the plaintiff was in possession and that the deed was executed in his name. The District Judge, in concurrence with the Subordinate Judge, has held that as the mortgagees took the mortgage from the plaintiff and obtained possession from him, they could not be permitted to question his title, in view of the rule of estoppel enunciated in section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. This view is clearly well-founded. As explained in the case of Bhuiganti Bewa v. Himmat Bidyakar (1) enjoyment by permission is the foundation of this doctrine. Two conditions are essential to the existence of the estoppel, namely, first, possession, secondly, permission; when these conditions are present, the estoppel arises, and the estoppel prevails so long as such possession continues. Apart from this, the contention of the appellant that a redemption suit cannot be maintained except by the real owner, is too broadly formulated and is against the balance of judicial authority. The better opinion seems to be that a suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption can be maintained by the person named in the deed as mortgagee or mortgagor, as the case may be: Sachitananda Mohapatra v. Balram Gorain (2), Dagdu v. Balvant Ramchandra Natu (3), Ravji Appaji Kulkarni v Mahadev Bapuji Kulkarni (4), Yad Ram v. Umrao Singh (5), Ramanujachariar v. Srinivasachariar (6), Alikjan Bibi v. Rambaran Shah (7), Sreenath Nag v. Chundernath Ghose (8), Bhoobunessur Roy v. Juggessuree Chowdhrain (9), Hara Gobinda Saha v. Purna Chandra Saha (10), Kirtibash Das v. Gopal Jeo (11). A similar principle has been applied to leases: Bipeen Beharee Chowdhry v. Ram Chunder Roy (12), Donzelle v. Kedarnath (13). Kedarnath Chucker-butty v. Ben amin Donzelle (14), Inderbuttee Kooer v. Shaikh Muhboob Ali (15), Jainarayan Bose v. Kadimbini Dasi (16), Purnia v. Torab (17), which are mentioned in the case of Atrabannessa v. Safatullah (18). We are of opinion that the first question must be answered against the defendants; they accepted the mortgage from the plaintiff and cannot now question his title to redeem the property upon payment of such sum as may be found due by the Court This view is in harmony with the observations of the Judicial Committee in Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (19) on the nature of benami transactions.

As regards the second point, the Courts below have held that the first two defendants are bound to render an account as mortgagees in possession. They do not repudiate their liability to account, but contend that the accounts should be taken on the basis of the sums mentioned in the mortgage bond irrespective of the actual profits of the property. The controversy has thus centered round the question, whether the rights and obligations of the parties in this respect are governed by section 76, clauses (g) and (h), or by section 77, of the Transfer of Property Act. Under the former section, the mortgagee in possession is liable to keep and give accounts. This is the general rule, subject to the exception formulated in section 77, which provides that nothing in section 76, clauses (b), (d), (g) and (h) applies to cases, where there is a contract between the mortgagee and the mortgagor that the receipts from the mortgaged property shall, so long as the mortgagee is in possession of the property, be taken in lieu of such interest and defined portions of the principal. Now, under section 58, clause (d), a mortgage is usufructuary where the mortgagee receives the rents and profits either (i) in lieu of interest only, or (ii) in payment of the mortgage money, or (iii) partly in lieu of interest and partly in payment of the mortgage money. Section 77 consequently protects usufructuary mortgages of the first category as also such usufructuary mortgages of the third category as are entitled to take the profits in lieu of interest and defined portions of the principal. The Courts below have concurrently held that the mortgage before us falls within the general rule; in other words, that it is not of either of the two types just mentioned. The bond states that the mortgagor took a loan of Rs. 1,600, which carried interest at 5 per cent. per annum, and then proceeds to describe the scheme for repayment of the debt. It sets out the annual profit according to the rent-roll, allows a remission for establishment charges and makes a deduction for the rent and cesses. This, it is stated, shall leave a net profit of Rs. 110, out of which Rs. 80 would be set off against interest and the balance against the principal. It is plain that if the actual income from the property were assumed to be that mentioned in the rent roll, the amounts stated as payable on account of interest and in reduction of the principal could hold good only during the first year. During the second year, the interest would run on a reduced principal, and, at the end of that year, a larger sum than that available in the first year would be set off against the principal. This process would continue from year, to year—each successive year a decreasing amount would be due for interest and an increasing amount set off against the principal. This militates against the theory that the parties intended to have their rights and liabilities adjusted on the basis of the actual figures mentioned in the document. This view is supported by a significant circumstance. The hastabud or rent roll would presumably show only the rent payable by the tenants, but there were, as the Courts below have concurrently found, other sources of income, for instance that derived from the Mana of the river Damodar and the Jalkar. Finally, the mortgagees were placed in possession of the alluviated and diluviated lands, whereof the area and income would vary from time to time; it is improbable that the mortgagor should have intended to make a present to the mortgagees of the income which might accrue from accreted lands, or that the mortgagees

The result is that the decree of the District Judge is affirmed and these appeals dismissed with costs.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 313-B OF 1917.

July 31, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Mitra, A J. C.

RAMCHANDRA KANIRAM MARWADI—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

LAXMAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS.

Berar Land Revenue Code, s. 79—Landlord and tenant—Notice to quit—Mode of service—Refusal of post card, whether sufficient service—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114, Ill. (f)—Presumption of fact—Appeal, second—Interference, whether permissible.

Section 79 of the Berar Land Revenue Code does not lay down any specific mode for the service upon a tenant of a notice to quit. A notice, therefore, sent to a tenant by means of a registered post card the acceptance of which, upon being tendered by the Postal authorities, is refused by him, constitutes a proper service. [p. 62, col. 2; p. 63, col. 1.]

Where, upon the evidence, a presumption of fact under section 114, illustration (f), of the Evidence Act is drawn by an Appellate Court, such presumption is binding upon a Court of Second Appeal. [p. 63, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 38 of 1916, decided on the 30th April 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 217 of 1915, in the Court of the Munsif, Bassim, decided on 24th July 1916.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-appellant claims to be a permanent tenant on the basis of a contract. The Courts below have found the contract not proved. The finding is attacked on the ground that after the learned Additional District Judge recorded it, he proceeded to discuss the law as to whether an izaradar holding a lease from the Government for thirty years could grant a permanent sub-lease. In this he may be right or he may be wrong, but this does not affect his appreciation of the oral and documentary evidence regarding the alleged contract. I must, therefore, accept the finding that the appellant has failed to prove that he is not a tenant from year to year.

The next question that arises is whether the tenancy has been determined by a notice to quit as required by section 79 of the Berar Land Revenue Code. This section, unlike section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, does not lay down the mode in which the notice to quit has to be served upon the tenant.

In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that he sent a registered post card to the defendant, that the defendant refused to accept it and that the registered post card came back to the plaintiff through the Post Office with an endorsement that the addressee refused to accept it, and hence it was returned to the sender. The defendant denied that he refused to accept the post card or that it was tendered to him. There was a further allegation in the plaint to the effect that after the post card was returned to the plaintiff, he affixed similar notices, one on the house and another on the field of the defendant. The latter allegation was not denied in the pleadings. It is unnecessary to say if this was good service of the notice under the Berar Land Revenue Code. There is a witness on behalf of the plaintiff who proves that the post card was posted and registered and the post card has now been produced in Court by the plaintiff. It clearly is a proper notice to quit. The only question is whether it was tendered to the defendant or not. The defendant has not gone into the witness-box to deny that it was tendered to him. The lower Appellate Court points out that it is not possible in a small village where the defendant resides that a person in his position could not be found. I may note that the address given in the post card was a correct. Having regard to the usual course of business in the Post Office, there are two reasonable presumptions to be drawn when a registered post card is returned to the sender; one is that the addressee could not be found and the other is that the addressee has refused to accept it. The first of the presumptions has been held inapplicable in the present case, and the lower Appellate Court was, therefore, justified in resorting to the second presumption. This obviates the necessity of relying upon the endorsement on the post card purporting to be made by some officer of the Post Office. The lower Courts were also justified in rejecting the further possibility that the postman did not go at all to deliver the registered postcard and in assuming that the usual course of business was followed. There is thus legally sufficient evidence to warrant the finding that the post card was tendered to the defendant and refused by him. The presumptions referred to above are presumptions of fact under section 114, illustration (f), of the Evidence Act and it was for the Courts below to say whether the presumption is to be drawn in this case or not.

On behalf of the appellant reliance is placed on Gobinda Chandra Saha v. Dwarka Nath Patita (1). That was a first appeal in which the learned Judges declined, in view of the sworn testimony of the defendant, to draw the presumption that the registered notice was tendered and refused by him on a particular date, which happened to be the last day when the notice could be legally served. The date of the tender was sought to be proved by the endorsement purporting to be made by the postman. The postman was not called as witness and it was held that sufficient foundation had not been laid for letting in the statement as relevant under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act. The learned Judges at page 497* cite illustration (b) to section 16, which is to the following effect: "The question is, whether a particular letter reached A. The facts that it was posted in due course and was not returned through the Dead Letter Office are relevant." They then proceed: "This is very different from the assertion that if the letter is returned with a note thereon by the peon that it had been tendered to and refused by the addressee, the inference follows that it was so actually tendered and refused." As I have already said, unless the endorsement is proved, two reasonable inferences are possible from the return of the registered article. At page 498* the judgment says: "Proof of the fact that a letter correctly addressed has been posted and has not been received back though the Dead Letter Office may justify the presumption that it had been delivered in due course of mail to the addressee, but proof of the fact that a letter has been duly posted and has been returned by the Postal authorities does not justify the presumption that it has been so returned because it has been refused by the addressee, for it may well be that it has been returned because the addressee has not been found; much less is there a presumption that the cover has been tendered to the addressee on a particular date." I do not find anything in the judgment opposed to the view taken by me.

The recent Privy Council case relied on by the respondent Harihar Banerji v. Ramsashi Roy (2) is not directly in point.

I am bound to accept the finding of the lower Courts in second appeal, I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 153—Rent suit valued at less than Rs 100—Appeal, second, whether lies.

No second appeal lies against a decree passed in a suit for rent in which the amount claimed does not exceed a hundred rupees, and in which no question of title has been decided Dhanukdhari Lal v Baburam Ahir, 4 Ind. Cas. 745, 10 C. L. J. 629, distinguished.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Jessore, dated the 9th of May 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at that place, dated the 18th of May 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Respondent.—I take a preliminary objection to the hearing of this appeal, which arises out of a suit for rent which has been dismissed by the Court of Appeal below. The appeal is valued at Rs. 3-0-0. My submission is that section 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, operates as a bar. My second point is that the appeal has abated as one of the respondents is dead. The substitution petition did not mention the date of his death. Hence the order was made subject to objection.

Babu Narendra Chandra Bose (with him Babu Nalin Chandra Paul), for the Appellants.—As regards the maintainability of the appeal, I would submit that the appeal is competent. Refers to Dhanukdhari Lal v. Baburam Ahir (1). As regards the substitution proceedings, the application was in order. We came to know of the respondent's death when the notice was returned unserved. Under Order XXII, rules 3 and 4, I am entitled to have six months from the date of my knowledge. There is nothing on the record to show that he died more than six months before the date of my knowledge.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Respondent.—I would draw your Lordship's attention to section 153. This is a case for rent pure and simple. There was no prayer for assessment or settlement of rent The Appellate Court did not consider the question of title. It did not enter into the merits at all. Under Order XXII, rule 6, an application for substitution must be made within the period allowed by Article 177 of the Limitation Act. The appeal will abate ipso facto on the expiration of six months. Time could not be extended under Order XXII, rule 9

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against a decree dismissing a suit for rent in which the amount claimed is only Rs. 3-10-0.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies.

For the appellant reliance is placed on the case of Dhanukdhari Lal v. Baburam Ahir (1), in which it was held that a suit for arrears of rent or, in the alternative, for assessment of fair rent on the basis of a partition proceeding was outside the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. But it appears that that decision does not apply to this case, as there is no prayer except one for recovery of arrears of rent.

It appears to me doubtful whether the case is not to be taken out of the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act owing to there having been a decision and a decree on a question relating to title to land. But, as the respondent in whose favour the decree was passed has now pleaded that no question has been decided, it must be held, if there is any future litigation, that the question of the plaintiffs' title is not effected by the decision in this suit. I, therefore, hold that no question of title has been decided between the parties and the suit being one instituted by the landlord for recovery of rent for a sum not exceeding Rs. 100, no appeal lies to this Court.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 11—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877) s. 38—Contract with minor, validity of—Minor, whether can be required to make compensation.

A contract entered into with a minor is not a voidable contract, but is simply a nudum pactum ab initio void, and completely outside the scope of Chapter IV and section 38 of the Specific Relief Act. [p. 67, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 9 of 1918, dated the 10th May 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 164 of 1917, in the Court of the First Munsif, Raipur, decided on the 30th January 1918.

Dr. Gour (with him Mr. Ravishankar Shukla), for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mohiuddin and J. C. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs-respondents Garud, Anandram, Dular Singh and Balchand sued the present appellant defendant Muliyabai in the Court of the 1st Munsif, Raipur, for a decree for Rs. 1,800 under the following circumstances :—

They alleged that the deceased son Bhagwat Prashad of Muliyabai had obtained two decrees against the plaintiffs on the 27th July 1914 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Raipur. At that time all the plaintiffs were joint and one Mangsai, nephew of the first plaintiff, the elder brother of the second and third plaintiffs and the father of the fourth plaintiff, was the manager of the family. The deceased Bhagwat Prashad was the absolute owner of his village and used to manage it himself ; and it was alleged that, having represented himself as manager to Nangsai, he received Rs. 1,800, being the amount of the said decrees, less Rs. 200 remitted, and passed a receipt therefor on the 26th February 1915. Shortly after the said payment both Bhagwat Prashad and Nangsai died. Thereafter the defendant Muliyabai took out execution of the two decrees but the objections filed in the execution proceedings by the plaintiffs were dismissed, the Subordinate Judge concerned holding that, Bhagwat Prashad having been a minor, the payment of Rs. 1,800 made to him could not be appropriated towards the said decrees. It was further alleged that Bhagwat Prashad had fraudulently represented himself to be a major and in the circumstances repayment of the amount of Rs. 1,800 was claimed from his estate which is now in possession of the defendant Muliyabai.

The first Court held that Nangsai did not make the payment of Rs. 1,800 in question and that the receipt (Exhibit P-1) had not been proved. On these and connected findings plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. On appeal to the Court of the District Judge, Raipur, the lower Court's decree was reversed and instead a decree was passed ordering the present appellant to pay Rs. 1,800 from the assets of Bhagwat Prashad in her hand in satisfaction of the claim referred to. In this connection the learned District Judge held that the receipt (Exhibit P-1), as well as the payment specified in it, had been proved. Bhagwat Prashad, however, having been a minor at the time, had no power to compromise the two decrees referred to and the adjustment effected by him was, therefore, void. The learned District Judge further found that there was no proof that Bhagwat Prashad had falsely represented himself to be of age when he took the payment from Nangsai. The allegation of fraud, therefore, even on the finding of the District Judge, failed. The lower Appellate Court, however, held that section 38 of the Specific Relief Act applied to the case and that the present respondents were entitled to its benefit. The District Judge accordingly passed a decree as already mentioned.

The defendant Muliyabai has appealed to this Court and reliance has been mainly placed on an important question of law which arises in connection with the case. It has up to the present been held by the Indian Courts that on the authority of section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act no one can be allowed to profit by his own fraud. It would appear, however, that the position in this connection in the law of India would require some reconsideration in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (1). It is true that the decision in question related to a case from the Straits Settlements, but the law in force there corresponds closely to that with which we are concerned in the present case, the Straits Settlements Evidence Ordinance being closely modelled on the terms of the Indian Evidence Act. In the case in question their Lordships wrote as follows :—

"A case of fraud by the appellant on the subject of his age was set up, but it cannot be doubted that the principle recently given effect to in the case of Leslie Limited v. Shiell (2) would apply, and such a case would fail."

Now, the decision in the King's Bench case just quoted concerned an infant who had fraudulently represented that he was of full age and had induced the plaintiffs to lend him two sums of £200 each. To an action by the plaintiffs to recover the amount of the advances on the ground that they had been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, or in the alternative for money had and received by the defendant to the use of the plaintiffs, the defendant pleaded infancy. The Court of Appeal held that the cause of action was in substance ex contractu, that the plea of infancy was a good answer to the action and that the defendant was under no equitable liability to the plaintiffs. In the case quoted the learned Justice remarked as follows :—

"In the present case there is clearly no accounting. There is no fiduciary relation : the money was paid over in order to be used as the defendant's own and he has so used it and, I suppose, spent it. There is no question of tracing it, no possibility of restoring the very thing got by the fraud, nothing but compulsion through a personal judgment to pay an equivalent sum out of his present or future resources, in a word nothing but a judgment in debt to repay the loan. I think this would be nothing but enforcing a void contract. So far as I can find, the Court of Chancery never would have enforced any liability under circumstances like the present, any more than a Court of law would have done so, and I think that no ground can be found for the present judgment, which would be an answer to the Infants' Relief Act."

It is true that there is no Infants' Relief Act as such in force in India, but the principles underlying this judgment appear to me to also apply to the present case. In the present case, moreover, there is on the finding of the learned District Judge no case of fraud, for the lower Appellate Court has in paragraph 7 of its judgment held that Bhagwat Prashad made no representation at all about his age.

A distinction must be drawn, of course, between a case like the present where cash passed and a case in which particular property, e.g., a horse or a motor car passes to a minor. In the latter class of cases, where restitution is possible, it can, of course, be decreed by the Court. But the position is entirely different when mere money passes. In the 2 King's Bench case [Leslie Limited v. Shiell (2)] just referred to Kennedy, L. J., remarked as follows :—

"In the first place, it appears to me that whilst Courts of Equity have interfered to make an infant restore property found in his possession which he had obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation, as, e. g., the promissory-note in the old case of Clarke v. Cobley (3); to compel the recognition, in regard to property in his possession, of rights and interests of persons whom he has misled into entering into transactions in regard to it [cf. Watts v. Cresswell (4)]; and to prevent the payment over again to the infant of moneys of which he has procured the payment already by a representation of full age, as in Cory v. Gertcken (5); there is no case in which I can find that a Court of Equity has given judgment against an infant in circumstances like the present, that is to say, in which it has interfered on the ground of the fraud of the infant, whereby he induced the making of the contract of loan, to order the infant to pay the plaintiff a sum equal to the sum borrowed under the void contract, and so, in effect, to the amount of the principal lent, to give validity as against the infant to a void contract."

It is obvious, therefore, that, a considerable gulf has to be bridged before relief can be given in a case like the present as compared with the case where restitution of the actual property received by the minor is possible.

The learned District Judge in the view he has taken of the case, vide paragraph 9 of his judgment, has relied on Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (6), Datta Ram v. Vinayak (7), and Kamta Prasad v. Sheo Gopal Lal (8). As was pointed out in Datta Ram v. Vinayak (7), the decision in Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodas Ghose (6) was to the effect that a contract by a minor, such as a mortgage, is void and that a money-lender who has advanced money to the minor on the security of the mortgage is not entitled to the payment of the money on decree being made declaring the mortgage invalid. The decision, however, is also an authority for the proposition that the circumstances of a particular case may be such that, having regard to section 41 of the Specific Relief Act, the Court may, in adjudging of the cancellation of an instrument, require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require. We are, however, here not concerned with section 41 of the Specific Relief Act but with section 38 under which the learned District Judge has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to the decree he has given them. Now, in my opinion, Chapter 4 of the Specific Relief Act has no application whatever in the present instance. That chapter relates to the rescission of contracts and the circumstances under which rescission may be adjudged are clear from section 35 of the same Act. The present contract having been made with a minor was not a voidable one but simply a nudum pactum ab initio void; while Chapter 4 of the Specific Relief Act really deals with the case of persons who are competent to contract. It, therefore, seems to me that section 38 of the Specific Relief Act has no application to the present case and that the lower Appellate Court has erred in giving the relief it did on the strength of this provision.

As I have already shown, the respondents can derive no benefit from the provisions of section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act in view of the decisions in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (1) and in Leslie Limited v. Shiell (2) and it follows, therefore, on the above findings that the present appeal must succeed. The judgment and decree appealed against are accordingly reversed and instead a decree will issue dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. As regards costs I think a fair order will be that the respondents should bear appellant's costs in this Court as well as their own and the costs in the two lower Courts should be borne by the parties incurring them.

Appeal decreed.

ABDUL RAHIM AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 47, O. XXI r. 2—Execution of decree—Satisfaction of decree, allegation of, whether can be investigated—Certification, absence of, effect of.

Where in execution of a decree the judgment-debtor alleges that the decree has been satisfied and that the decree-holder has failed fraudulently to certify the satisfaction to the Court, the Court has power under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code to investigate the allegation. [p. 68, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 21st December 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Fatickcheri, dated the 9th September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das), for the Appellant.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a mortgage-decree. The decree-holders are the appellants. In another execution case a petition was put in by the judgment-debtor for satisfaction of the mortgage decree. The present application was made on 5th March 1916. The case of the judgment-debtor was, not that he paid the money to my agent, but that he paid only Rs. 250 out of Rs. 500 due in respect of two decrees. The question, therefore, is whether an executing Court can take any notice of any uncertified payment in satisfaction of a decree. My submission is that it cannot. Refers to Bireswar Mookerjee v. Ambika Charan Bhattacharjee (1). Jogendra Nath Sarcar v. Probhat Nath Chatterjee (2). Certification was prayed for only in respect of the later decree and not in respect of the mortgage decree.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mazumdar, for the minor Respondent (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen, for other Respondents).—The cases cited are clearly distinguishable, as in fact there was no fraud on the part of the decree holder as in the present case. Refers to Gadadhar Panda v. Shyam Churn Naik (3).

Babu Sib Chandra Palit, in reply.—There is absolutely no evidence with regard to fraud. Under the authorities cited the Court cannot take cognisance of such payment.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application for execution of a decree. The judgment-debtor objected to the execution on the ground that the decree had been satisfied, and the Courts below have given effect to that objection.

The decree holder has appealed to this Court and it has been contended on his behalf that the satisfaction or adjustment of the decree had not been certified to the Court as aid down by law.

It appears that a petition was put in on behalf of the agent of the decree-holder in another execution case certifying satisfaction of the decree in that case, and it was recited in that petition that nothing further remained due to the decree holder on account of any other decree.

No application was put in in the execution case in which the decree now in question was being executed at that time. It appears that the agent of the decree holder promised to certify the satisfaction of this decree also.

Some evidence was taken in this case and the learned Munsif came to the finding that "the judgment-debtor has proved the payment in satisfaction of the decree and judgment debtor has been fraudulently kept out of all means of exercising his right to apply in Court." The learned District Judge, however, has not gone into this question, which can be investigated under section 47 of the Code [see Gadadhar Panda v. Shyam Churn Naik (3)].

We think, therefore, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the question may be inquired into and the case disposed of according to law. Both parties will be entitled to adduce evidence. The lower Appellate Court may direct the Court of first instance to take the evidence required and send it up to that Court.

Costs one gold mohur to abide the result.

KARAM ELAHI—JUDGMENT DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 104 (h), O. XXI, r. 40—Execution of decree—Order dismissing application for judgment-debtor's arrest, nature of—Appeal, whether lies.

An order under Order XXI, rule 40, of the Civil Procedure Code dismissing the application of a decree-holder for the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor relates to the execution of a decree and as such comes under section 47 of the Code and is appealable [p. 69, col 2.]

The concluding words of section 104, clause (h), of the Civil Procedure Code indicate that where an order directing the arrest or detention of the judgment-debtor is made in execution of a decree, it is to be treated as an order coming under section 47. [p. 69, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 8th October 1917, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 14th July 1917, dismissing the decree-holder's application for the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor for default of payment of instalment in execution of a decree.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this miscellaneous appeal has arisen are simple and the point for decision is a short one.

One Thandi Shah held two money decrees against Karam Ilahi. Execution proceedings were taken as to one of the decrees. A house was sold upon which the parties entered into a compromise. One of the terms of the compromise was that the amount of the decree would be payable by instalments and in case of default of any instalment the decree-holder would have the power to recover the whole amount by executing the decree against the person and property of the judgment-debtor. A default having taken place, the decree-holder applied for the arrest and imprisonment of Karam Ilahi. Therefore the judgment-debtor was called upon to show cause why he should not be arrested and imprisoned. Several objections were urged by him, which are given in detail in the judgment of the executing Court. That Court accepted the objections and dismissed the application of the decree-holder for the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. This order was made under rule 40, Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code. The decree-holder preferred an appeal to the District Judge of Jhelum. This appeal was dismissed by the learned District Judge, on the ground that an order made under the above-mentioned rule was not appealable. He was of opinion that the order was neither appealable as an order under Order XLIII, nor as a decree under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The decree-holder has come up in appeal to this Court, and it is argued on his behalf that the order appealed against related to the execution of a decree, and as such came under section 47 of the Code.

Reliance is placed on the provisions of clause (h) of section 104 in support of this contention. Under the said clause an appeal is allowed from "an order under any of the provisions of this Code imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention in civil prison of any person except where such arrest or detention is in execution of a decree."

It is contended that the concluding words of the clause indicate that where an order directing the arrest or detention is made in execution of a decree, it is to be treated as an order coming under section 47.

In our opinion there is force in this contention which is supported by authorities. In a decision of the Punjab Chief Court reported as Bishna v. Banta (1) it was decided that an order made under section 337 (a) was appealable as a decree as it came within the purview of section 244 (c) of the old Code. A similar view was taken by the Madras High Court in a case reported as Abdul Rahiman v. Mahomed Kassim (2). The cases reported as Nayana Naickan v. Gulam Ghowse (3) and Subbarama Ayyar v. Arunachellam Chettiar (4) also go to support the contention. In the face of these authorities the decision of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported.

We, therefore, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court on this preliminary point and remand the case to that Court under Order XLI, rule 23, to be re-admitted under its original number in the register of pending appeals and to be disposed of according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Case remanded.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 177, 185—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. IX r. 8—Order appealable to District Judge—Revision by Board of Revenue, whether competent—Suit dismissed for default—Restoration, order of, interference with.

KASIREDDI CHINNAREDDI v. PATCHIPULUSU VENKATASWAMI.

Where, under section 177 of the Agra Tenancy Act, an order in certain suits is appealable to the District Judge, such suits are, by the terms of section 185 of the Act, outside the revisional jurisdiction of the Board of Revenue, and it is not within the competence of the Board to interfere with an order under rule 9, Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, restoring such a suit dismissed for default.

Reference made by the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division.

ORDER.—This is a reference by the Collector of Moradabad through the Commissioner recommending that the order of Mr. Bealty, Assistant Collector, 1st class, dated 9th January 1919, by which he restored the profit suit of Sahu Makhanlal, plaintiff v. Salamatallah Khan, defendant, for Rs. 971, be set aside under section 185, Tenancy Act.

The order in point was: "Case may be restored and will be taken up on 4th February 1919." The suit had been originally once before Mr. Bealty's predecessor, who had dismissed it under rule 8, Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, for default of plaintiff at first hearing on 16th January 1918, and for the same reason had refused the applications for restoration on 26th February 1918 and 30th May 1918. Mr. Bealty's order of 4th February 1919 was on an application by plaintiff that he had not been able to appear because his Pleader had missed the train and he himself was ill. Now although Order IX, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, does not expressly say that Courts restoring cases must record their reasons for doing so, the omission cannot be taken to override the common principle of law that orders must be based on sufficient reason, and I consider that Mr. Bealty's restoration of the case after the plaintiff had absented himself on three occasions (the original hearing and when his two applications for restoration came on for hearing) was, in the absence of recorded reasons for this extreme indulgence, material irregularity. Judging from telegrams of 26th February 1918 and 30th May 1918 which I see on the record, the absence on two occasions was because plaintiff's mukhtar missed the train. Plaintiffs cannot expect indulgence if they do not come to Court themselves and employ mukhtars who repeatedly miss trains. Even if this be passed over, the non-appearance at the first hearing on 16th January 1918 remains unaccounted or, and the most favourable order to the plaintiff that the Board could pass on this record would, I think, be to accept the Collector's recommendation and set aside the Assistant Collector's order of 4th January 1919, and direct him to call on the plaintiff to justify his absence on all three occasions and restore the case only if he adequately justifies them all recording his reasons for doing so fully.

But a legal difficulty presents itself against this course. A profit suit for Rs. 971 is a suit appealable to the District Judge under section 177 and such suits are placed outside the Board's revisional jurisdiction by the terms of section 185, Tenancy Act, and it is in my opinion not within the Board's competence to interfere with an order under rule 9, Order IX, Civil Procedure Code, restoring a suit dismissed for default under rule 8 of that Order.

I notice that the Commissioner has passed the Collector's report on to the Board without comment, but rule 7 (2), Circular 9-11, does not impose any legal obligation on the Commissioner other than that of a post office.

The order, therefore, is that the record be returned.

Record returned.

KASIREDDI CHENNA REDDI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

PATCHIPULUSU VENKATASWAMI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Malicious prosecution, damages for, suit for—'Malice' 'reasonable and probable cause' proof of, requisites of—Finding as to want of reasonable and probable cause, nature of.

So far as the Courts in India are concerned, a finding as to want of reasonable and probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is a finding of fact and not of law. [p. 74, col. 1.]

Pestonji Muncherji Mody v. Queen Insurance Company, 25 B. 332; 2 Bom. L. R. 938; 4 C. W. N. 781 (P. C.), explained.

Shama Bibi v. Chairman of Baranagore Municipality, 6 Ind. Cas. 675; 12 C. L. J. 410, not approved.

KASIREDDI CHINNAREDDI v. PATCHIPULUSU VENKATASWAMI.

The expressions 'reasonable cause' and 'probable cause' are synonymous. Any distinction that is sought to be made, that in any particular case there might be probable cause but not reasonable cause and that there should be an absence both of probable and reasonable cause to sustain an action for malicious prosecution as if the two could be distinguished, is opposed to the rules laid down on this branch of the Law of Torts. [p. 72, col. 1]

Whether it is called 'reasonable and probable cause' or 'reasonable or probable' cause, the meaning is reasonably probable cause, i.e., a cause which an ordinarily reasonable man, having knowledge of facts and the belief (arrived at in a reasonable manner) as to facts which the defendant then had, would be justified in considering as affording a fair basis for the opinion that a criminal offence has been committed by the plaintiff and hence as being a probable cause for the institution of criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. [p. 72, col. 2.]

The fact that a civil suit for damages was a better or more appropriate remedy has little relevancy on the question of want of reasonable and probable cause. A man is entitled to pursue any of the legal remedies in any order he likes [p. 72, col. 2.]

There is no real distinction between legal malice and malice in fact If a man has been reckless, whether the charge be true or false, that might amount to malice, but not recklessness in coming to the conclusion that there is reasonable and probable cause. [p. 73, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 350 of 1916, (Appeal Suit No. 63 of 1915, on the file of the District Court, Cuddapah), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Nandalur, in Original Suit No. 35 of 1914.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 16th and 20th August 1918.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The defendant is the appellant. The suit was brought for damages for malicious prosecution claiming Rs. 400 as damages. The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the grounds (a) that the defendant bona fide believed himself to be the owner of the house in reference to which he launched the prosecution and had a probable and reasonable cause for prosecuting the plaintiffs; and (b) that even if the defendant had no reasonable and probable cause, the defendant had no personal spite against the plaintiffs and no malice was, therefore, made out.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal arrived at certain findings in a rather confused manner. He begins by saying that the District Munsif "complicated" the case by entering into the question as to who was the owner of the whole house which the defendant claimed by purchase and that in his (Subordinate Judge's) opinion, it was "a needless question to go into." Then he says, "For the purposes of the present enquiry we must assume that the defendant is the owner of the northern house marked Y in the plan given in the judgment." Then he says that the complaint of criminal trespass brought by the defendant against the plaintiff was not sustainable, because though it was found in another civil suit between the parties, which was instituted during the pendency of the criminal complaint by the defendant against the plaintiff, that the plaintiff did commit a civil trespass by building on a joint wall without the defendant's consent and though the plaintiff was directed to pay damages to the defendant, the defendant ought to have treated the matter as a pure civil trespass and ought not to have rushed to the criminal Court. Then the Subordinate Judge says (paragraph 4 of his judgment) that the truth or falsehood of the defendant's criminal complaint should not be mixed up with the want of reasonable and probable cause and that the defendant's belief in the truth of his complaint should not have led him to suppose that there was a criminal trespass. Then in the course of another confused paragraph (5), occur the following sentences: "I do not believe, therefore, that the defendant had a reasonable and probable cause to go to the Magistrate under these circumstances. But it is the plaintiffs' duty nevertheless to show want of reasonable and probable cause. Their acts as described by the District Munsif would have given to the defendant only the probable cause but not at all the reasonable cause. Reasonable and probable cause means ordinarily what a prudent and careful man might or even ought to do under particular circumstances. The fact that he had immediately filed a civil suit on the heels of the criminal case shows that he had only a probable cause but not a reasonable cause to go to a Magistrate." I must confess that I find myself unable to understand this finding.

Then in the 6th paragraph the learned Subordinate Judge says: "I should think legal malice is made not from the want of reasonable cause. The wrong motive with the defendant was to coerce the plaintiffs to recognise his title. That is legal malice." Finally the Subordinate Judge awarded Rs. 30 as damages.

In Quartz Hill Gold Mining Company v. Eyre (1) Brett, M. R., says at page 687: "Whenever.....the Judge holds that there is a want of reasonable and probable cause, there is evidence to go to the jury of malice. When there is no other evidence of malice except what the Judge has stated to be in his opinion a want of reasonable or probable cause, I incline to agree with Huddleston, B., and Hawkins, J., in Hicks v. Faulkner (2), that upon the question of malice the jury are not bound by the holding of the Judge as to the absence of reasonable cause, but they may consider whether in their own view there was a want of reasonable or probable cause" (The italics are mine.) Thus it is clear that the want of reasonable or probable cause is not conclusive on the question of malice, though it is one of the elements to be considered in arriving at a conclusion on the question of malice. In the same page 687 from which I have made the above quotation from Brett, M. R., the learned Judge first uses the expression 'want of reasonable and probable cause,' then he uses the expression 'want of reasonable or probable cause', then he uses the expression 'absence of reasonable cause' alone and lastly the expression 'want of reasonable or probable cause.' So also Bowen, L. J., at page 693 uses the expression 'want of reasonable or probable cause' and says that both 'want of reasonable or probable cause' and 'malice' must be proved by the plaintiff. At page 694, he uses the expression 'absence of reasonable and probable cause' in two places. The distinction made by the Subordinate Judge, therefore, that in any particular case, there might be probable cause but there may not be reasonable cause and that there should be both probable and reasonable cause as if the two could be distingnished is, in my opinion, opposed to the rules laid down by eminent Judges on this branch of the Law of Torts. Whether it is called 'probable and reasonable cause' or 'reasonable or probable cause,' I think the meaning is "reasonably probable" cause, that is, a cause which an ordinarily reasonable man, having knowledge of facts and the belief (arrived at in a reasonable manner) as to facts which the defendant then had, would be justified in considering as affording a fair basis for the opinion that a criminal offence had been committed by the plaintiff and hence as being a probable cause for the institution of criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. The fact that a civil suit for damages was a better or more appropriate remedy has very little relevancy on this question of want of reasonable and probable cause. A man is entitled to pursue any of the legal remedies which he considers to be in his own interest to adopt in any order he likes.

In Corea v. Peiris (3) the following passages are found in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council:— "It is clear upon the above evidence that the real charge which the prosecutor wished to have preferred against the appellant was that of criminal trespass, since he looked upon the trespass as an act directed against his title to and ownership of these and possibly other lands in the district" (I may add that the prosecution in that case was for theft of goods also along with criminal trespass). "In the result, therefore, the respondent proved that he believed the story his old and trusted servants had told him; that he consulted his legal advisers at every step; and that he took action in defence of his title to his property, in the bona fide belief that the appellant had trespassed on his land and forcibly removed his goods. The case made against him is that he could not have believed, or should not have believed, without much stronger proof, that Mr. Corea was capable of committing a theft, and that he acted recklessly in accusing him of having committed theft." At page 552, their Lordships use the expression 'reasonable and probable cause' and at page 555, merely 'absence of reasonable cause' (without adding the word 'probable' to "reasonable" separated by either 'and' or 'or'). Then they say: "The crucial questions for consideration are:—Did the prosecutor believe the story upon which he acted? Was his conduct in believing it, and acting on it, that of a reasonable man of ordinary prudence? Had he any indirect motive in making the charge?" Thus their Lordships use the words 'reasonable cause' as synonymous with "reasonable and probable cause" and "reasonable or probable cause." I am, therefore, clear that the Subordinate Judge misdirected himself on the question of law] in respect of what facts should be proved to justify a Court in finding want of reasonable and probable cause. His statement that there was probable cause but not reasonable cause is almost unmeaning.

As regards the question of malice also the use of the expression "legal malice" as distinguished from "malice in fact" is misleading in actions for malicious prosecution. In Vaidinadier v. Krishnasami Iyer (4) (decided by Sundara Aiyar, J., and Spencer, J.), the lower Appellate Court in its judgment said that "the degree of caution expected of a man who wants to set the criminal law in motion is that he should reflect like a man of ordinary prudence as to what chances there were of conviction against the person whom he accuses and how far his conduct would amount to an offence. Every man is supposed to know the law." Upon this the learned Judges of this Court remark: "This cannot be accepted as correct. All that the defendant had to be satisfied about was that there was reasonable and probable cause for the charge, that is reasonable grounds for believing that the plaintiff was guilty of abetment and not reasonable grounds for coming to the conclusion that the Court would convict him of it." Then the learned Judges say at the end: "Carelessness on the part of the defendant in deciding whether there was reasonable and probable cause would not amount to malice and both malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause had to be proved. It has no doubt been decided that if a man has been reckless, whether the charge be true or false, that might amount to malice, but no recklessness in coming to the conclusion that there was reasonable and probable cause." On the question of malice, therefore, also, the Subordinate Judge has misdirected himself in the case before us.

The appellant's learned Vakil (Mr. Chandrasekara Aiyar) argued that if we come to the conclusion that the Subordinate Judge's finding on the question of reasonable and probable cause could not be accepted, we should ourselves consider the evidence and the facts and come to our own finding on the question of reasonable and probable cause, or, at any rate, taking the preliminary facts as found by the lower Appellate Court, give a finding ourselves on the question of reasonable and probable cause. He argued that a finding on the question of reasonable and probable cause is a finding on a question of law and not of fact. He relied on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Shama Bibi v. Chairman of Baranagore Municipality (5). Mookerjee, J., says at page 418*: "In so far as the facts have been found by the Court of appeal below, they are binding upon this Court, but whether from the facts so found, absence of reasonable and probable cause or presence of malice can be inferred is a question of law for determination by the Court alone. Hailes v. Marks (6), Broughton v. Jackson (7), and Lister v. Perryman (8)." The learned Judge admits, however, that there are passages in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pestonji Muncherji Mody v. Queen Insurance Company (9) which lay down that in Indian Courts a finding as to reasonable and probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution is a question of fact, though according to English law, it is a question left for the Judge to determine. But Mr. Justice Mookerjee thinks that the sentence in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, "There is really nothing but a question of fact and a question of fact to be determined by one and the same person," is a mistake for "there is really nothing but a question of $\frac{\text{law}}{\text{fact}}$ and a question of $\frac{\text{fact}}{\text{or law}}$ to be determined by one and the same person." Having read the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council carefully, I am with the greatest respect unable to agree with Mr. Justice Mookerjee that there is any such clerical mistake in the report of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Their Lordships have, on the other hand, clearly laid down that a finding as to want of reasonable and probable cause is a finding of fact and not a finding of law so far as the Indian Courts are concerned. (I may add that Mr. Justice Mookerjee's statement that the finding as to existence of malice is also for the Court opposed to even the English decisions).

In my above view that the Subordinate Judge in arriving at his findings of fact has materially misdirected himself, I would remand the case for fresh findings from the lower Appellate Court on the two connected questions of want of reasonable and probable cause and of the existence of malice. Time four weeks from the receipt of records and ten days for objections. No fresh evidence.

NAPIER, J.—I entirely agree.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Cuddapah submitted the following

FINDING.—I am to submit findings on the two following issues:—

1. Whether defendant had no reasonable and probable cause for making the complaint?
2. Whether there was malice on the part of the defendant?

2. The ownership of the suit house still seems to be not settled finally. Meda Narsayya has been in possession and has been claiming to be the owner. But the defendant has got title-deeds and, moreover, has got a decree for rent against Meda Narsayya, and there is no proper evidence in this suit that the sale-deeds on which defendant relies are nominal transactions as alleged by Meda Narsayya. I think, therefore, it is quite clear that defendant has a bona fide claim to the house which justified him in taking steps to prevent encroachment on the property.

3. With regard to the alleged acts of mischief and trespass complained of by the defendant before the Magistrate, the encroachment on the backyard seems to be doubtful (vide Exhibit I); but it is easy for the defendant to be under a misapprehension in regard to that matter, for the space is small and he might have really considered that the wall had been shifted.

4. With regard, however, to the raising of the joint wall, this is admitted by P.W. No. 1 who is the first plaintiff; and it seems to me that this act would naturally cause annoyance to the defendant. The distinction between criminal trespass and civil trespass is sometimes rather fine and it is quite possible the defendant bona fide thought the best and quickest course would be to go to the Magistrate's Court. He does not seem to have acted in an unreasonable hurry, for the evidence of D. Ws. Nos. 4 and 5 shows that the defendant took respectable persons to the site, showed them the work that was going on and they advised 3rd plaintiff to stop the work till the dispute was settled. The defendant thought the best plan of stopping the annoyance was to go to a Magistrate's Court.

5. Then it is argued that the evidence of defendant only shows that 3rd plaintiff was engaged in constructing the wall. But the 1st plaintiff himself admits that he was also constructing the wall and the three plaintiffs are brothers and defendant might have thought they were acting jointly.

6. My finding on the 1st issue sent to me is that it is not proved that defendant had no reasonable and probable cause for making the complaint.

7. With regard to the second issue sent to me, the matter is quite clear. There was no enmity between plaintiffs and defendant; the only thing that sent defendant into Court was the trespass on the joint wall. The idea of plaintiffs that the defendant wanted to coerce Meda Narsayya and plaintiffs by filing the criminal case is pure speculation.

8. I find on the second issue that there was no malice on the part of the defendant.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding, and reversing the lower Appellate Court's decision restore the Munsif's decree with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Kunwar KHURRAM SINGH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Guardian and ward—Agreement by guardian to pay stipulated sum as profits of estate, effect of—Accounts, liability of guardian to render—Minor, whether can question accounts passed by Court—Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 34.

Where the guardian of a ward, to save himself the cost of appraising rents, agrees to pay a stipulated sum annually as the profits of the estate, he is bound to take good years with bad, and if, in any year, the collections are less, the loss is his, and not the ward's. [p. 75, col. 2.]

An agreement entered into by a guardian with the mother and uncle of his ward that, in consideration of the ward being allowed to manage the estate himself, the guardian would be indemnified against any suit for rendition of accounts which might be brought against him by the ward on attaining majority is not binding on the ward. [p. 75, col. 2.]

The filing of accounts by a guardian does not relieve him of responsibility for their correctness, nor does the passing of such accounts by the District Judge relieve him of the liability of accounting to his ward.[p. 76, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 24th July 1916.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Chand Narain Harkauli and Tinkori Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by Kunwar Khurram Singh, who has now attained majority, against his late guardian Kunwar Partab Singh for three items alleged to be due by the latter on account of profits of the estate during the period of his guardianship. The defendant was appointed guardian in July 1903 and the plaintiff came of age in 1916. The suit has been decreed in regard to two of the items and in respect of these the defendant appeals. The plaintiff files a cross-objection respecting the third item which has been disallowed.

Prior to the defendant being appointed guardian by the Court one Dalipat Singh was guardian, and during the last three years of the latter's guardianship the plaintiff's property was leased to the defendant at an annual rental of Rs. 6,000 per annum. On the defendant being appointed guardian he applied to the District Judge in order, as he said, to save the plaintiff the costs of appraisement of rents, to fix a round figure of Rs. 5,725 as the annual profits of the estate without regard to the actual figures of collections and income for each year. The District Judge raised the amount payable to Rs. 6,000 and with this modification sanctioned the proposal and the defendant thereafter filed his accounts on this basis.

In his accounts for fasli 1312 the defendant for the first time claimed a deduction of Rs 2,916-12-0 on account of alleged short collections in fasli 1315, which was a dry year, and this is the first of the items in dispute in the appeal. Having agreed to pay a round sum of Rs. 6,000 every year, the defendant was clearly bound to take the good years with the bad and if he collected less in any particular year, the loss was his and not that of his ward. If the good years and the bad are reckoned together, there is, as the learned Judge has shown, every reason to believe that he has made a considerable profit by the arrangement. The other item in dispute is a sum of Rs. 2,348-7-0 said to have been given as advances to tenants. As the learned Judge has shown, the defendant himself in a previous suit admitted that these advances were made on his own behalf and not on that of his ward. It was sought to charge the ward with these items on the strength of an agreement dated the 26th of April 1912 (Exhibit A97) made between the defendant and the mother and uncle of the plaintiff, in which they agreed, in consideration of the ward being allowed to manage the estate for himself (this was two years only before he attained majority), to indemnify the defendant against any suit for rendition of accounts which might be brought against him by the ward after attaining majority. It was admitted, and could not but be admitted, in this Court that this agreement could not in any way bind the ward.

On the merits, therefore, the appellant has absolutely no case. He falls back on a legal plea based on section 43 of the Guardians and Wards Act and suggests that because the annual accounts in which these items were claimed, were passed by the Judge, therefore, the correctness of his accounts cannot now be questioned. But an order to which section 48 applies must be an order passed under some provision of the Act. All that the Act provides is that the guardian shall, when so required, exhibit accounts [section 34 (c)]. The Act nowhere makes the Judge responsible for the correctness of those accounts. It is obvious that he is not in a position effectively to audit them. He may refuse to accept them if they contain manifest errors, but if they are on the face of them in order he simply directs them to be filed, leaving the ward to pursue his remedy against the guardian. That remedy is expressly reserved by sections 35 to 37 of the Act, the last of which in the broadest terms recognises the right of a ward or his representative to any remedy which is available to a beneficiary or his representative against his trustee. The relation of guardian and ward has been expressly declared in section 20 of the Act to be fiduciary relation. If there is one right which more than any other is inherent in the relation of trustee and beneficiary, it is the right of the beneficiary to sue his trustee for sums wrongfully appropriated or withheld by the latter. If the Court had passed an order under section 41 (4) discharging the guardian from all liability except in respect of fraud, there might have been force in the appellant's plea, but this the District Judge refrained from passing expressly in order that the plaintiff might have an opportunity of suing the defendant in respect of this item (Exhibit 17).

The item of Rs. 2,500, which the learned Judge has disallowed and in respect of which a cross-objection is filed, stands on a different footing from the others in that the defendant obtained an express order of the District Judge sanctioning the remission of this amount. The item related to the Fasli year 1312 corresponding to 1905. That was a year in which a severe frost occurred and remissions of rent and revenue were granted under the orders of Government. The remission of rent amounted to 25 per cent., and it would seem that in obtaining a concession of Rs. 2,500 the appellant obtained more than the circumstances of the village justified. His actual collections in that year, according to the jamabandi, were Rs. 4,141 11-3 on account of current demand and Rs. 1,406-15 3 on account of previous years giving a total or Rs. 5,548-10-6. The question is whether section 48 applies to the order of the District Judge sanctioning the remission so as to prevent that order being questioned in the present suit.

If we regard the District Judge's order as one authorizing the guardian to withhold a part of the profits which he had collected and which properly belonged to the minor, it is difficult to see how it can be justified; and indeed the whole arrangement by which the income was settled at a fixed sum has the appearance of being somewhat irregular. But in substance the arrangement was probably equivalent to a continuance of the theka which the defendant had held during the guardianship of Dalipat Singh, and probably the District Judge thought that it would in the long run be in the minor's interest to give the guardian an interest in the prosperity of the estate by entrusting the management to him on these terms. The arrangement at any rate was and is accepted by both the parties. But if the District Judge had power to make an arrangement of this sort, he had equally the power to modify it in a particular year in which the circumstances were abnormal. Regarding the order from this point of view there is no adequate ground why this Court should attempt to go behind it after the lapse of some thirteen years.

The result is that the appeal and cross-objection are both dismissed with costs.

GHASI—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 131, 194 (1), (3)—Partition—Co-sharer, whether can sue to eject tenants before confirmation of partition.

Where a holding is allotted to a co-sharer in a joint mahal on partition, he cannot, as sole proprietor, sue to eject the tenants of the holding until the partition is confirmed by the Commissioner under section 131 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and his status as sole proprietor is thereby established.

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 27th April 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent, Ghasi, was in his eleventh year of tenancy when his holding was allotted by the amin in partition to the plaintiff-applicant's kura on 29th January 1917—1324 Fasli. He had begun his twelfth year when plaintiff-applicant filed a suit to eject him on 11th September 1917, which was before the Collector confirmed the partition on 18th October 1917.

Plaintiff-applicant's case is that if he had not filed the suit in advance of the Collector's order of confirmation, he would not, under section 63, Tenancy Act, have been able to file it before 1st July 1918, by which time the tenant-respondent would have completed his twelfth year and would have acquired occupancy rights. He also urges, reasonably, that the other co-sharers in the joint mahal would not join him in filing the suit in 1917 because they had no interest in a holding, which they expected as a result of the amin's allotment would be going shortly into applicant's mahal. Respondent's Counsel suggests that applicant might have joined them as parties under Order I, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, but this has no force in view of section 194 (1) and (3), Tenancy Act. It is only in money suits, and not in ejectment suits, that a co sharer can join other co sharers as parties against their wish.

The Commissioner in his judgment refers to the principle of Swami Mukand Lal v. Ram Sarup (1). That refers to khudkasht land under section 127, Land Revenue Act, and has no bearing on tenant land. In Gopi Nath v. Abdul Aziz (2) it has been held that a co-sharer can file suits in his new capacity of proprietor of his lot in partition directly the Collector confirms the partition under the first part of section 131, Land Revenue Act, even though under the second part of that section the partition does not take effect till the subsequent July 1st. There, is, however, no legal warranty for putting the date further back and holding that he can file suits as soon as the amin has made out the lots. The suggestion cannot be brought within the wording of section 131.

I, therefore, hold with the lower Court that a co-sharer in a joint mahal cannot as sole proprietor sue to eject the tenants of his new lot until his status as sole proprietor of the latter is established by Collector's confirmation of the partition under section 131. If other co-sharers will not join him, he cannot sue at all. Applicant's suit to eject respondent was premature. It is a hard case, though probably exceptional. The effect is likely to be that respondent will get occupancy rights by a bit of good luck. I, therefore, reject the application, but without costs.

Application rejected.

The plaintiff, in a suit for contribution must show some equity in his favour. If he was a joint tort-feasor with the defendant, as where both trespassed on a third party's land, no right to contribution is created. [p. 79, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated the 19th September 1917, in Small Cause Suit No. 116 of 1917.

Mr. K. P. Shanmoogam Pillai, for the Petitioner.—The lower Court based its finding on Exhibit I, the judgment in the case in which plaintiff and defendant were sued in ejectment as trespassers by a third party. That judgment is not admissible in evidence. See Gobind Chunder Nundy v. Srigobind Chowdhry (1).

Mr. U. Rama Rao, for the Respondents. —Exhibit I is admissible. That is the basis of the present suit. No other evidence has been adduced in this case. That judgment cannot be impugned by the parties thereto. It shows that plaintiff and defendant were joint tort-feasors and there is is no contribution as between them. See Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (2), Lakshman Govind v. Amrit Gopal (3) and Siva Panda v. Jujusti Panda (4).

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this petition arises was for contribution in respect of costs awarded by the decree in Original Suit No. 41 of 1909 paid by the plaintiff. The sum paid by plaintiff was, according to the decree in Original Suit No. 41 of 1909, payable by plaintiff and defendants jointly. The suit was to recover possession of property which was trespassed upon by the defendants and a decree was passed in favour of plaintiff with costs. If the defendants were joint tort-feasors, there would prima facie be no liability for contribution. The Subordinate Judge framed a preliminary issue as to whether the plaintiff was in law entitled to recover any contribution for costs from the defendants. The judgment in Original Suit No. 41 of 1909 was filed as Exhibit I without any objection by the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge states, and it is not disputed before me, that neither party let in any evidence though time was given to them to do so. Each party filed a document (plaintiff filing Exhibit A and defendants Exhibit I). The Subordinate Judge referred to the findings in the judgment Exhibit I, which show that the defendants in that suit not only trespassed but fabricated false documents to defeat the claim of the plaintiff in that suit and held that no suit for contribution would lie under the circumstances.

Objection is taken that the judgment in Original Suit No. 41 of 1909 is not admissible in evidence and reliance has been placed on Gobind Chunder Nundy v. Srigobind Chowdhry (1), which follows a decision in Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry (5).

I am of opinion that the judgment in a suit which is the basis of a suit for contribution is admissible in evidence in a suit for contribution. As pointed out in Siva Panda v. Jujusti Panda (4), it is not open to the parties to impugn the propriety of the judgment, though it will be open to the party from whom contribution is sought to show that "as between the joint debtors the plaintiff is solely liable to the debt or that he is not equally liable with the plaintiff or that both being joint tort feasors in a sense in which on public grounds the right of contribution is negatived, the suit is not maintainable." If it is not open to the parties to impugn the judgment, I do not see how it can be said that the judgment in a suit to which all the parties to the suit for contribution were parties is not admissible in evidence.

The decision in Surender Nath Pal Chowdhry v. Brojo Nath Pal Chowdhry (5) has, as pointed out in Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (2), been considerably shaken by the decisions of the Privy Council in Ram Ranjan Chakerbati v. Ram Narain Singh (6) and Bitto

Kunwar v. Kesho Prasad Misser (7). The preponderance of authority is in favour of the view that in cases like the present the judgment to which the plaintiff and defendants were parties would be admissible even though it may not be a judgment in rem or operate as res judicata I need only refer to Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohun Das (2) and Lakshman Govind v. Amrit Gopal (3).

As neither party adduced any evidence and as the judgment in the previous suit is admissible in evidence, I think the Subordinate Judge was right in basing his decision on the findings in the previous judgment, which show that the present plaintiff was a joint tort-feasor. In a suit for contribution the plaintiff must show some equity in his favour. There is none when two persons join together and trespass on the property of a third person.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 68, 70—Mortgage—Attestation, proof of—Scribe, whether witness—Burden of proof—Admission by mortgagor, whether binds third parties—Lien, proof of.

It is settled law for the province of Bihar and Orissa that a person who signs a document as a scribe must prove specifically that in signing as a scribe he intended to sign as a witness. [p. 80, col. 1.]

In order to prove the due execution of a document, proof of attestation is necessary. Where the only witness to a document is the scribe, who deliberately elects to affix the word 'scribe' to his name in preference to the word 'witness', in the absence of evidence that he signed as an attesting witness, the document is not admissible in evidence. [p. 80, col. 1.]

Where debts are incurred for family necessity by the execution of mortgage deeds, the signature of the managing member of the family, as the guardian of any member who might have been a minor at the time of execution, would be sufficient to bind that minor and create a lien upon the minor's property. But a lien can only be created by a registered instrument, and in order to prove that the original instrument is a mortgage document, it is necessary to observe the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act. [p. 80, col. 2; p. 81, col. 1.]

An extra-judicial admission by the managing member of the family may or may not render it necessary to prove the original documents against himself, but this would not relieve the mortgagee of the necessity to prove them as against the minor. [p. 81, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—This appeal arises from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Monghyr upon twelve mortgage-bonds, details of which are given in the judgment, as against three members of a Mitakshara joint family—Adit Narain, Daroga and Nageshwar Prasad. Included among the defendants is the mother of Nageshwar, she being the widow and he the son of one Kuldip Sahai. Kuldip Sahai was, prior to his death in 1909, the managing member of the family, and at his decease Adit Narain became the managing member.

Up to 1907 Daroga Prasad was added as a party to the several deeds as a minor under the guardianship of Kuldip Sahai. From 1907 onwards the bonds were executed by Daroga Prasad himself as a major. The last two bonds are dated 1910 and were executed by Adit Narain for himself and for Nageshwar Prasad, a minor, and by Daroga Prasad for himself. Of the twelve bonds, seven, being Nos. 9, 11, 16 17, 18, 20, and 28 of the schedule attached to the judgment, were proved by Mohammad Wali, who had signed as scribe of these documents and no other attesting witness was called.

It was contended in the Court below that these documents could not be adduced in evidence without the calling of an attesting witness. This point was found against the defendants by the learned Subordinate Judge. It was also contended by Daroga Prasad that he was a minor at the time when these documents were executed, and, further, that he did not execute them of his own free will but under coercion from his brother These points were also found against Daroga Prasad by the learned Subordinate Judge. It was further urged that there had been no proof of the passing of consideration; and that if consideration did pass, then it was not proved that that consideration was for a family necessity. These points were also found against the defendants. In appeal to this Court Mr. Kulwant Sahai argues the case again on the same basis.

With regard to the attestation of these documents, it is specifically admitted in the pleadings by Adit Narain and by Daroga Prasad that these documents were executed by them. Therefore, as against them, no proof of attestation was necessary. The plaintiffs have been put to proof as against Nageshwar Prasad of execution of these documents; and it is now settled law for this province that one who signs as a scribe must prove specifically that in signing as a scribe he intended to sign as a witness. The authority for this proposition is to be found in Ram Bahadur Singh v. Ajodhya Singh (1). It has been suggested that that was not a judgment of a Divisional Bench, inasmuch as Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad did not concur in the ruling of Chief Justice Chamier, but that matter has been set at rest by the decision of Miller, C. J., and Mullick, J., in Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1917. A scribe who deliberately elects to affix the word 'scribe' to his name in preference to the word 'witness' places upon himself an almost insupportable burden of proof that he signed as a scribe and not as an attesting witness. In this case, moreover, it is not shown in a single line of the scribe's evidence that he signed as an attesting witness. I hold that he signed as a scribe only and that on his evidence alone the documents are not admissible in evidence.

The next point for consideration is the majority or minority of Daroga Prasad at the time when these documents were executed. Now as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, there could be no motive whatever for any fraud on the part of the mortgagee in obtaining the signature of Daroga Prasad. The debts, as I shall presently show, were all incurred for family necessity and the signature of the managing member of the family, as the guardian of any member who might have been a minor at the time of execution, would be sufficient to bind that minor and create a lien upon the minor's property. The fact that mortgagors and mortgagees agreed that these documents should be executed by Daroga Prasad himself suggests strongly that at the time of the execution Daroga Prasad was a major. The evidence to the contrary is of the flimsiest character. A horoscope has been produced which has not impressed me in the least. A document which purports to be a copy of an extract from a school attendance register has also been produced, and in addition a certificate by the present headmaster of the school to the effect that when Daroga Prasad was admitted into the school, his age was such that he could not have been a major at the time of the execution of these documents.

Now with regard to the register itself it does not seem to me to be admissible in evidence at all, for the reason that it is an entry made by one Raj Kumar Lal, who is alive and within reach of the process of the Court. The certificate given by the headmaster is also a mere statement made upon hearsay and is peculiarly valueless as evidence, seeing that it is dated the 25th July 1914, and was obviously procured solely for the purpose of this case.

The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the oral evidence of the plaintiff's witness Nanak Prasad to the effect that Daroga was at the time, when the suit was brought, between 25 and 26 years of age: and it follows that if this evidence be believed, he was at the time of the execution of the documents of age. Upon this point I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge. The documents are, therefore, binding upon Daroga Prasad, unless he can show that he executed them in circumstances which would render his signature void. Such circumstances have not been shown, and indeed Mr. Kulwant Sahai has not made any attempt to support Daroga Prasad's allegation of coercion.

The third point for consideration is the passing of consideration. As the learned Subordinate Judge points out, the whole history of the case indicates clearly that consideration passed. Adit Narain, who is now, and has been since the death of Kuldip Sahai, the managing member, admits that consideration did pass. His efforts to obtain a settlement with the mortgagee through Mr. Finch indicate that he recognised that the debts were binding upon the family. I see no reason to differ from the learned Subordinate Judge's finding of fact that consideration did pass. I see also no reason to differ from his finding that the consideration was taken for purposes of the family. In each document this specific purpose was set out. The mortgagee gives evidence that on each occasion on which money was taken he made enquiries as to whether the necessity stated in the bond was an existing necessity. He was not cross-examined upon this point, and we must accept his evidence upon it as unrebutted.

The last question is one as against Nageshwar Prasad, raised through the respondents' Vakil, Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick. The result of the failure of the plaintiff in the Court below to call an attesting witness to the documents is that a decree can be made only against the interests of Adit Narain and Daroga Prasad. But Mr. Mullick contends that inasmuch as the debts were for family necessity and were admitted by Kuldip Sahai in a subsequent mortgage document which has been legally proved, the nature of the debt relieves the mortgagee of the necessity for calling attesting witnesses to the original documents. This proposition I am unable to accept. I concede that the nature of the debt would render the minor liable to discharge it, but I cannot admit that the nature of the debt would create any lien upon the property. A lien can only be created by a registered instrument, and in order to prove that the original instrument is a mortgage document it is necessary that the provisions of section 68 of the Evidence Act be observed. The extra-judicial admission of Kuldip Sahai may or may not render it unnecessary to prove the original documents as against himself. It does not relieve the plaintiff of the necessity to prove them as against his son.

Nageshwar Prasad has not admitted the original documents. We have, therefore, no cognizance of any instrument creating a lien upon the property of the joint family as against Nageshwar Prasad. In my view, therefore, Nageshwar Prasad should be relieved from liability under the decree made. Upon the seven documents not legally proved, a decree should be made against Adit Narain and Daroga Prasad for the whole of the sums covered by these seven mortgages, and the right, title and interest of Adit Narain and Daroga Prasad brought to sale in execution of the decree so made.

Nageshwar Prasad has made no appeal with regard to the five documents not enumerated at an earlier stage of the judgment. He will, therefore, be bound by the decree made on these five documents. The amount due thereupon will be realised by the sale of the right, title and interest of the whole joint family in the property covered by these five documents. The period of grace in all cases will be six months from the date of this decree, and interest will run at the prescribed rate on the debt only up to the expiry of the period of grace, and thereafter at the Court rate on the whole decree, including costs.

I would make no order as to costs in this appeal. The plaintiff will have his costs in the lower Court in proportion to the amount decreed. The defendants will bear their own costs.

ATKINSON, J.—I frankly concur in the judgment of the Court which has been delivered by my learned brother. But having regard to the argument which has been addressed to us I desire to add a few brief observations on my own behalf.

I consider that the construction of section 70 of the Evidence Act of 1872 is accurately and clearly laid down in the considered judgment of Mr. Justice Woodroffe in Satish Chandra Mitra v. Jogendra Nath (2), and to the law laid down by the authority cited I beg most respectfully to subscribe.

Farther, I am of opinion that Abdul Karim v. Salimun (3) and Rajmangal Misir v. Mathura Dubain (4), which decide that an admission, under section 70 of the Evidence Act of 1872, to be admissible in evidence can only apply to an admission in fact made in the course of a legal proceeding then pending before a Court of Justice, cannot be supported on principle or authority. If authority were needed to refute such a proposition, I think authority may and can be found in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (5) and also in Hamplen v. Wallis (6) and also in Gobardhan Das v. Hori Lal (7).

In my opinion an admission under section 70 is admissible in evidence, even though it be an admission not made in the course of legal proceedings then pending before a Court of Justice, but which may be an admission made antecedent to the institution of legal proceedings. This construction of section 70 of the Evidence Act as to what constitutes an admission to be admissible in evidence is in harmony with the definition of an admission contained in sections 17 to 20 inclusive of the Evidence Act itself, and is in accordance with the general legal principle.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) ss. 95 (a), (b), 202—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. II, rr. 1, 2—Landlord and tenant—Ejectment, suit for—Plea of agricultural holding—Suit under s. 95 (b)—Refusal to have class determined, effect of—Procedure.

Where in a suit for ejectment in a Civil Court the respondents plead that they hold the land as an agricultural holding, and are referred to the Revenue Court under section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act, and in their suit under section 95 (b) of that Act they apply that they do not want their class determined, this action, though not quite in accordance with the principle of rules 1 and 2 of Order II of the Civil Procedure Code, does not bar the Revenue Court from deciding their claim to be tenants under section 95 (a). [p. 82, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 10th August 1918, in the case of declaration of rights.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant landholder, it seems, sued the respondents in the civil Court for ejectment from the land in suit. The Civil Court record is not before me, but applicant's Counsel tells me he sued them as lessees of pasture rights which under Choudhri Muhammad Mahmud Khan v. Ganga Ram (1) and the decision in Abdul Qayum v. Fida Husain (2) do not constitute an agricultural purpose. The respondent, it is said, pleaded that he held the land as an agricultural holding, and the Civil Court then, without apparently deciding the question as to whether the holding was an agricultural one or not, referred the respondents to the Revenue Court under section 202, Tenancy Act. Respondents then filed the present suit under section 95 (b), Tenancy Act, but afterwards on 14th June 1918 applied that they did not want their class determined, which evidently shows they are not themselves confident of their status. This action was not quite in accordance with the principle of rules 1 and 2, Order II, Civil Procedure Code, but the point was not taken in appeal to Commissioner and I am not prepared to hold that their withdrawal from their suit under section 95 (b) barred the Assistant Collector from deciding their claim to be tenants under section 95 (a).

Ever since 1307 the respondents have been holding the land, nearly 11 bighas in area, as recorded non-occupancy tenants at a rent of Rs. 11. Its class was shown as qadim—old fallow. In 1318 urd, a small millet capable of growth on inferior land, was grown and in 1321 the same crop was grown on a petty area of 6 biswas. In all other years there was no crop and it was evidently pasture. There is nothing to show for what purpose the land was originally let—it is clear that it was held for pastural purposes up to 1317—from that date they have been allowed to hold it for agricultural or pastural purposes indifferently; it is not alleged that the landholder-applicant refused rent or sued them for cultivating land let to them for pasture only, [section 57 (b), Tenancy Act]. So without proving as to what their status has been up to 1318, the question which they themselves have avoided by their application of 14th June 1918 in the first Court, I must hold with the lower Courts that since then, at any rate, they are tenants within the meaning of section 4 (5) read with section 4 (2), Tenancy Act.

I, therefore, reject this application for revision but without costs. The respondents do not deserve costs at applicant's expense in view of their application of 14th June 1918, avoiding final settlement of their status as tenants.

Application rejected.

Where the plaintiff in a suit to recover the balance of consideration due on a sale sets up a definite agreement that the balance with interest was to be paid on a particular date, the burden of proving the alleged agreement rests upon the plaintiff. He must establish at least a prima facie title to the relief which he seeks, more specially where the vended property as well as the sale-deed have been given in possession to the defendant. Mere denial of the receipt of consideration is not sufficient to relieve the plaintiff and to shift the burden on to he vendee defendant. [p. 84, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. He executed a kabala, dated the 3rd February 1913, in favour of defendant No. 1 in the name of his son, defendant No. 2, purporting to sell 13 bighas 19 kathas of his kasht land in village Babira, pargana and thana Arrah, for Rs. 1,400. On 2nd February 1916, the plaintiff brought a suit out of which this appeal has arisen, in the Court of the Munsif of Arrah for recovery of Rs. 619 as part of the consideration money with interest due under the said kabala.

The plaintiff's case was that out of Rs. 1,400, the consideration money of the kabala, he had received Rs. 601 on different occasions and got receipts granted therefor, and as regards the balance of the consideration money the defendant had promised to pay with interest at one per cent. per month and that the possession of the land sold was made over to the defendant and that subsequently the sale deed was lost from the basta of one Munshi Brij Kishore Sahay, to whom it was handed over for preparing an ekrarnama, and that the plaintiff afterwards came to know that the defendant had got surreptitiously the possession of the said sale deed, and when the plaintiff demanded from the defendant the balance of the consideration money he (defendant) paid Rs. 180 by several instalments, but did not pay the rest. The cause of action mentioned in the plaint is 15th April 1915, when the date of payment expired. The defendant resisted the claim of the plaintiff, denying that anything was due to the plaintiff under the kabala and asserting that after the registration of the kabala the plaintiff brought it from the registration office, went to the defendant and made demand for the consideration money, and that the defendant then and there paid the entire consideration money to the plaintiff in one lump sum and the plaintiff made over the kabala to the defendant. The Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the full consideration of the kabala was not paid. On appeal the District Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The learned District Judge disbelieved the account given by the plaintiff as to how the defendant came to be in possession of the sale-deed in question. The learned District Judge has held that the defendant-vendee was in possession of the land and had the sale certificate and the sale-deed. He has disbelieved the evidence on both sides namely, the evidence given by the plaintiff as to his not having received the consideration money in full and that given by the defendant as to the entire amount having been paid in one lump sum. The learned Judge has dismissed the suit upon the ground that a strong presumption of the full price having been paid to the plaintiff may be raised from the fact that the defendant was in possession of the land and the title-deeds. The question in this appeal is whether the District Judge is wrong in law in raising the presumption that he has done. It is said that the learned Judge himself has destroyed the presumption by holding that two small payments were made—one on 11th March 1913 and the other on 26th March 1913—which negative the theory of the defendant of a single payment of Rs. 1,400 in a lump sum. No doubt upon the finding of the Judge the case of the defendant of having paid the entire amount of Rs. 1,400 in one lump sum as asserted in paragraph 13 of his written statement must fail. If, therefore, the onus lay upon the defendant to prove the payment made by him, the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, but the onus of proving the case, as set forth in the plaint, lay upon the plaintiff in this case. He definitely stated that there was an agreement entered into by the defendant to pay the balance of the consideration money, with interest at the rate of one per cent. per month, on a particular date, namely, the 15th April 1915, mentioned as the date on which the cause of action is said to have arisen, vide paragraph 8 of the plaint. The burden of proving the allegations must, on general grounds, rest upon the plaintiff. The sale deed is a registered document and recites that the consideration of the deed was paid. This, of course, does not help either side, because according to the case of both the parties at the time when the recital was made the consideration did not pass, and it was, of course, open to the plaintiff to show that the entire consideration money was not paid [Sah Lal Chand v. Indarjit (1)]. Even if the defendant had to prove the passing of the consideration, the subsequent events, namely, the vended property having been given in possession to the defendant as well as the sale certificate and the sale-deed in question, shifted the burden upon the plaintiff to show that he parted with the land and the title-deeds without having received the entire consideration money. The attempt of the plaintiff to show that the sale deed had passed surreptitiously to the defendant has failed, and hence no onus lay at any stage or was ever shifted, upon the defendant. From the case of Kaleepershad Tewaree v. Rajah Sahib Pershad Sein (2) it may be easily deduced that it is too wide to affirm that the mere denial of the receipt of the consideration stated is in all cases sufficient to cast upon the party relying on the instrument the burden of proving the payment of that consideration, and that the plaintiff who wishes to set aside a contract under which there has been possession and enjoyment, and of which there has been performance, has the burden upon him of establishing at least a good prima facie title to the relief which he seeks. I, therefore, hold that the burden in this case of establishing the allegations set up in the plaint rested upon the plaintiff. According to the finding of the Judge the plaintiff has not proved his case.

As to the presumption raised by the Court, it was competent to the Court below to presume that the consideration money had been paid when the land was parted with and the title-deeds were made over to the defendant. This is a presumption arising from the ordinary course of human conduct in transacting worldly business. The question of presumption is a matter of inference from certain facts, and when once the Court draws a presumption it becomes a question of fact, and I do not think that it is competent for this Court to hold that the Judge was wrong in law in raising the presumption that he did in favour of the plaintiff.

The result is that the judgment of the Court below is upheld and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22 (c)—N. W. P. Rent Act (XII of 1881), s. 9, proviso—Occupancy tenant, death of—Brother, right of succession of.

The brother of an occupancy tenant succeeds on the death of the latter's widow, irrespective of whether or not he shared in the cultivation of his brother who died while the Rent Act of 1881 was in force, the succession being determined by the law in force at the time the right vests.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 19th March 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—The admitted facts are as follows :—

Sheo Bakhsh, occupancy tenant, died while the Rent Act XII of 1881 was in force, leaving a widow Musammat Rukminia and a brother, the appellant Budhoo. The former succeeded him as a Hindu widow with a life-estate. In her presence the question of Budhoo's succession did not arise, as he could hold no higher position than that of a reversioner with a contingent interest. The contingency has now arisen by the death of Musammat Rukminia under the Tenancy Act, II of 1901, and Budhoo claims the succession under section 22 (c). The first Court admitted his claim: the Commissioner, however, accepted the landholder-respondent's argument that although the succession of a brother under section 22 (c), Tenancy Act, is unconditional, it was subject under the proviso to section 9 of the Rent Act to the condition of co-sharing in cultivation with the deceased, and it is admitted that Budhoo did not co-share in cultivation with his brother Sheo Bakhsh. The Commissioner, therefore, reversed the Assistant Collector's decision. The point has previously come up before the Board in Petition No. 15 of 1914-15, Mahtab Singh v. Ram Sarup, and Petition No. 11 of 1914-15, Ramanand Rai v. Muhammad Abdul Bashir, and in both cases the principle of Babu Banshidhar v. Musammat Kaj- wantia (1), since affirmed in Selected Decision No. 2 of 1918, was followed and it was held that the brother succeeds on the death of the widow, whether he shared in the cultivation of his brother who deceased under the former Act or not. I have given the point much consideration and, though not without hesitation, think that the view then taken should be followed. There is, of course, no doubt that had there been no widow, Budhoo could not have inherited under the old Act, being barred by the proviso to section 9, Rent Act, and the holding would have lapsed to the landholder, but the intervention of the widow's life-estate has benefited him, the proviso has been swept away by the Tenancy Act and a brother succeeds whether he co-shared in cultivation with his deceased brother or not. I would, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the order of the Assistant Collector with costs to appellant throughout.

KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. HARBANS LAL.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I agree. The succession must be determined by the law in force at the time the right vested. In this case the right vested in the brother on the widow's death when the present Tenancy Act was in force, and it was not necessary that he should have shared in the cultivation of the deceased tenant.

Appeal allowed.

HARBANS LAL AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Application, when can be regarded as in continuation of previous application—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 3, 15—Limitation, plea of, when can be raised—Stay of sale in execution at instance of decree-holder—Time, whether can be excluded.

KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. HARBANS LAL.

Where an application for execution is dismissed for no fault or laches on the part of the decree-holder in the prosecution of the execution, a subsequent application, in all respects similar in scope and character to the former application, is a continuation of that application. But where an application is dismissed on account of the default of the decree-holder in not taking any step to proceed with it, a subsequent application cannot be treated as a continuation or revival of the previous application. [p. 88, col 2.]

Where the stay of a sale in execution is due entirely to the decree-holder, such stay cannot be regarded as a legal stoppage of the execution proceedings, so as to entitle the decree-holder to the benefit of section 15 of the Limitation Act. [p. 89, col. 1.]

So long as an application for execution is pending, the judgment-debtor can at any time show that the application is barred and the Court has no option but to dismiss it under section 3 of the Limitation Act It is only when the point of limitation is concluded by proceedings in a previous execution, that the judgment-debtor is not allowed to take an objection on the score of limitation in a subsequent execution of the decree. [p. 89, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 14th June 1919, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Arrah, dated the 31st May 1919.

Mr. Nirsu Narain Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Fakhruddin and Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The appellant obtained a mortgage decree against one Debi Lal on 7th September 1905. He made several executions of the said decree but without being able to realise the decretal amount. We are concerned only with the execution of the decree taken out just previous to the present execution, namely, on the 9th April 1914, which was No. 143 of 1914. The original judgment-debtor Debi Lal was dead and this execution was, therefore, taken out against his heirs, Maluk Chand Lal, son of Lachhmi Lal, and Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal, sons of Bahoran Lal. The decree-holder prayed for the realisation of the decretal amount by sale of 19 plots of land, 13 of which appertain to khata No. 151 and 7 to khata No. 152. Only three of these plots, namely, Nos. 3090 and 2074 of khata No. 151 and No. 2298 of khata No. 152 were the mortgaged properties.

Notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was issued upon the aforesaid judgment-debtors. This notice was served personally upon one of the judgment-debtors, Maluk Chand Lal, and as regards the other three the peon reported that they were not in the village and that he affixed the notice upon their houses.

On the 19th May 1914, the Court noted in the Order Sheet "Notice served," and directed the notice under Order XXI, rule 66, to issue. This notice was not served personally upon any of the judgment-debtors, and the peon who was entrusted with the service of this notice reported on the 28th May that he could not find any of the judgment-debtors and hence he posted the notice on their houses.

On remand the Courts below have held that the notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was served personally upon Maluk Chand Lal, but that it was not properly served upon the other three judgment-debtors, and hence, in spite of the note of the Court referred to above in the Order Sheet of the 19th May 1914, it must be accepted as a conclusive finding of fact that the notice under Order XXI, rule 22, was not properly served upon three of the judgment debtors, Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal. This becomes important in view of the fact that Maluk Chand Lal is dead and the present execution is against the other judgment debtors Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal.

On 25th June 1914 the decree-holder filed forms of sale proclamation, which was ordered to be issued fixing the 7th September 1914 for sale of the properties. On the 6th August 1914 Maluk Chand Lal filed a petition under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure objecting to the sale of the properties other than those mortgaged. This gave rise to Miscellaneous Case No. 115 of 1914, and it was fixed for hearing for the 4th September, with the object that it might be disposed of before the date fixed for the sale, namely, the 7th September.

On the 4th September, the decree-holder applied for time on the ground that the other objection cases were fixed for the 12th September and also on the ground that the agent of the decree-holder was busy in certain tamadi-cases, and the case was accordingly adjourned to the 12th September and was ordered to be "put up with claim cases."

On the 12th September apparently the other claim cases were adjourned and the Court passed the following order:—"Put up on 21st November 1914, for want of time, both Execution Case No. 143 of 1914 and Objection Case No. 115 of 1914 and Claim Cases Nos. 34 to 41 of 1914."

On 21st November 1914, the decree-holder put in a petition admitting the claim of the objectors-judgment-debtors and praying that only the mortgaged properties, namely the three plots mentioned above, be sold first. The Court accordingly allowed the objection and directed that the rest of the properties be released from the proceedings. This order of the Court is contained in Order No. 13 on the Order Sheet. Order No. 14 on the Order Sheet relates to the costs to be paid by the appellant to the judgment-debtor-objector. Order No. 15 on the Order Sheet of the same date relates to the Execution Case No. 143 and is in the following words.—"No steps taken by the decree-holder to-day. The case is dismissed for default."

The present application for execution was filed on the 3rd September 1917 and was numbered 156 of 1917, but as the copies of khatian and decree were not filed, the decree-holder was directed by an order on the back of the execution petition, dated the 3rd September, to file the same. The said copies were, however, filed on the 20th September and the application was registered on that date with an order to issue notice under Order XXI, rule 22, fixing the 13th November 1917. The execution was against Maluk Chand Lal and the aforesaid three persons Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal. Maluk Chand Lal was reported to be dead, and as regards the others it was stated in the report of the peon that Harbans Lal and Bhagwan Lal took the notice but refused to give receipt for the same, and that Isri Lal was serving in Calcutta and hence his notice was given to his brother Bhagwan Lal, who refused to give receipt for the same. The decree-holder applied that Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal be substituted in place of Maluk Chand Lal deceased as his heirs and legal representatives, and filed affidavit as to the service of notice upon the other judgment-debtors.

On the 15th December 1917, the Court made the following order: "Notice served and proved against all the judgment-debtors, save and except Maluk Chand Lal who is reported to be dead. On decree-holder's petition let Harbans Lal, Isri Lal and Bhagwan Lal be substituted in place of the deceased judgment debtor, amendment be made and notice be issued against them fixing 8th January 1918 to shew cause whether they have any objection to be made his heirs."

This notice was issued under Order XXI, rule 22, and the peon reported that he met Harbans Lal alone and that he handed all the three notices to him. An affidavit to that effect was also filed by a servant of the decree-holder. On 8th January 1918 the Court passed the following order:—"Notice served and proved. Process fee filed. Decree-holder to file forms duly filled up. Put up on 14th January."

On 14th January the Court made the following order:—"Forms filed. Issue attachment, fixing 12th February 1918."

On 12th February 1918 the Court passed the following order:—"Attachment served. Petition of no incumbrance along with process fee and forms filed. Issue notice under Order XXI, rule 66, fixing 14th March 1918."

In the meantime, on the 7th February, one of the judgment-debtors, Harbans Lal, filed an objection to the execution of the decree on, amongst others, the ground that it was barred by limitation. His petition was numbered 14 of 1918. The Subordinate Judge upheld the objection of the judgment-debtor on the ground that the last step taken by the decree-holder in aid of the execution was on June 25th, 1914, when he filed forms for the sale proclamation in Execution Case No. 143 of 1914. The present application filed on the 3rd September 1917 was out of time. The execution was accordingly dismissed. Against the said order the decree-holder appealed to the learned District Judge of Shahabad contending that the present execution was not barred by limitation. His contention was based on three grounds: (1) that the previous execution was dismissed on the 21st November 1914, and the present execution was in continuation of the previous one; (2) that the decree-holder is entitled to deduction of the time from the 12th September 1914, when the sale was stayed by the order of the Court pending the disposal of the objection filed by the judgment-debtors, up to the 24th November 1914, when the claim case of the judgment-debtors was disposed of, and (3) that the order of the Court of the 14th January 1918 in the present execution, directing the attachment to issue, was a determination between the parties that the decree was capable of execution and that it was not barred by limitation and hence, upon the authority of the Privy Council in the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (1) and the subsequent authorities of the various High Courts, the said order operates as res judicata between the parties and cannot be now reopened. All these objections were decided by the Court below against the decree-holder. In appeal the same points have been raised. There does not appear to be any substance in any of these contentions.

As to the first contention, the present application for execution on the 3rd September 1917 cannot in any way be said to be one in continuation of the previous application which was dismissed on the 21st November 1914. Reliance has been placed upon the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (2). In that case it was held that when the sale was subsequently set aside, the parties were restored to the position which they would have occupied if the sale had never taken place, and the order of the 17th December dismissing the application of the decree-holder for an order absolute was proved by the subsequent events to be erroneous. The subsequent applications in 1909 and 1910 of the decree-holder for an order absolute must be considered to be a continuation or revival of the previous application of the 19th December 1908. It was further observed in that case that the subsequent application may be treated as a continuation or revival, "the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claim subsequently proved to be groundless or has been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction". This ruling has no application to the present case where the objection of the judgment-debtor in the previous Execution Case No. 143 of 1914, that the decree-holder was not entitled to proceed with the properties other than the mortgaged properties, was upheld and the execution case was dismissed on account of the default of the decree-holder in not taking any step to proceed against the mortgaged properties. A subsequent application for execution can only be regarded as a continuation of the former one when the latter is dismissed without any fault or laches on the part of the decree holder in the prosecution of the execution, and the subsequent application is in all respects similar in scope and character to that of the former one. The previous application of the decree-holder of 1914 having been dismissed on account of his failure to proceed with the mortgaged properties and on account of his not taking any step in the prosecution of the said execution, the present application of the 3rd September 1917 is not a continuation of the former one. The relief sought in the present application to sell the mortgaged properties is not the same as in the former application where the prayer was to sell the other properties as well as the mortgaged properties: Krishna Dayal Gir v. Sakina Bibi (3). This contention of the decree-holder must, therefore, be overruled.

The next contention of the decree-holder is that he is entitled to a deduction of the time from the 12th September 1914, when the Court ordered the sale to be stayed, up to the 24th November 1914, when the claim case of the judgment-debtors was disposed of. This contention is raised upon section 15 of the Limitation Act. Under that section a decree holder is entitled to a deduction of the time during which the execution of his decree is stayed by an injunction or an order. In the first place, the execution of the decree in the present case was not at all stayed by any order of the Court. There was no claim with respect to the mortgaged properties by the judgment-debtors and, as a matter of fact, the decree-holder on the 21st November 1914 admitted the claim of the judgment-debtors and prayed for the sale only of the mortgaged properties. This he could have done long before and the sale would not have been stayed. The Court had fixed the 4th of September for disposal of the claim of the judgment-debtors with respect to the properties other than the mortgaged properties expressly with the object of disposing of the objection before the 7th September, the date fixed for the sale. The disposal of the objection was, on the 4th September, adjourned upon the application of the decree-holder and it was at his request that the claim case in that execution was made analogous with the other claim cases. On the 12th September the other claim cases were not disposed of and the Court was, therefore, bound to postpone the hearing of the claim case till then, and in the meantime to stay the sale. The stay of the sale of the mortgaged properties was, therefore, due entirely to the decree-holder and the order of the 12th September staying the sale cannot, therefore, be considered to be a legal stoppage of the execution proceedings. The decree-holder is not, therefore, entitled to a deduction of the time between the stay of the sale and the disposal of the claim case: Narayana Nambi v. Pappi Brahmani (4). This contention must, therefore, also be overruled.

(1) 8 C. 51; 11 C. L. R. 113; 8 I. A. 123; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 249; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 32 (P. C.).

(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 537; 37 C. 796; 12 C. L. J. 328; 15 C. W. N. 337.

(3) 34 Ind. Cas, 27; 1 P. L. J. 214; 20 C. W. N. 952; 2 P. L. W. 370.

The last contention of the decree-holder is that the order of the Court in the present execution of the 14th January 1918 directing the attachment to issue was a determination between the parties, that the decree was capable of execution and that it was not barred by limitation, and hence the judgment-debtors are debarred from reopening the question and contending that the execution of the decree was barred by time. In the case of Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Girja Kant Lahiri (1) and in all subsequent cases the objection of the decree being debarred by time was taken in subsequent executions of the decree when in the previous executions of the same decree the Court had, upon notice being served upon the judgment-debtor under Order XXI, rule 22, ordered the execution to proceed, but in none of those cases was it held that the objection on the score of limitation cannot be entertained when it is taken at the subsequent stage of the same pending execution. On the other hand, in the case of Sardar v. Fatteh Chand (5) it was expressly held that the judgment-debtor can raise the said objection to the execution of the decree at a later stage of the same execution proceedings when his objection was disallowed or not pressed at the earlier stage of the execution. That case was referred to with approval in the case of Bisheswar Dayal v. Rup Kishore (6) (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 332 of 1916), though it could not be applied to the facts of the latter case.

Thus, even if the order of the Court of the 8th January be considered to be a determination that the execution was valid and not barred by time, it was open to the judgment-debtors to object to the execution being time-barred on the 14th January 1918. This is so because the order passed under Order XXI, rule 22, is not appealable. The Court's duty was at any stage of the execution proceeding to dismiss the execution on the ground that it was barred by limitation. This duty is imposed by section 3 of the Limitation Act even when the ground is not taken by the judgment-debtor. It is only when the point of limitation is concluded by proceedings in a previous execution, that the judgment-debtor is not allowed to take the objection of limitation in a subsequent execution of the decree. But so long as an execution application is pending, the judgment-debtor can show at any stage that the application is barred and the Court will have no option but to dismiss the application under section 3 of the Limitation Act. I, therefore, hold that the objection of the judgment-debtors of the 14th January was fit to be entertained.

It is also doubtful, as observed by the learned Judge, whether the order of the 8th January directing the decree-holder to file process of attachment can "amount to a judicial finding that everything about the execution proceeding is in order."

Agreeing, therefore, with the views taken by the Courts below, we dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3157 OF 1912.

JAKHOMAL MEHERA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 69—Payment made by dar-putnidar on behalf of putnidar*—Amount paid, whether can be recovered*—Dar-putnidar, whether can be ordered to account for period during which he has been in possession—Limitation.

A dar-putnidar paying up the arrears of rent due by the putnidar to the zemindar came into possession of the putni under clause (4) of section 13 of the Putni Regulation of 1819 on the 17th of November 1862. He continued in possession for many years. It was not till the 7th August 1899 that his possession was formally terminated. On the 1st February 1901 the putnidar instituted a suit for rent against the dar-putnidar for the period between May 1895 and January 1901. During the pendency of this litigation the putnidar repeatedly made defaults in payment of rent and the dar-putnidar had to satisfy the demand of the superior landlord on seven successive occasions from 4th November 1905 to the 15th November 1908. The dar-putnidar then brought a suit to realise these sums after allowing the defendant putnidar credit for the rents payable by him as dar-putnidar during the period:

Held, (1) that as the payments made by the plaintiff benefited the defendant, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree; [p. 91, col. 1.]

(2) that the claim of the plaintiff could not be postponed merely because accounts had not been taken of the possession of the plaintiff from the 17th November 1862, inasmuch as if a claim were now put forward for an account of this period, it would be successfully met by the plea of limitation. [p. 91, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 9th August 1912, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 15th December 1910.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of money paid by him for the benefit of the defendants. The circumstances under which the payments have been made are not disputed. The defendants on the 6th May 1895 acquired a putni taluk created on the 17th February 1811. The plaintiff is the owner of a dar-putni of four out of the five villages comprised in the putni. This dar putni was created on the 16th May 1862. Shortly after the creation of the dar putni the putnidar made default in the payment of rent to the superior landlord. The dar putnidar thereupon paid up the arrears and on the 17th November 1862 came into possession under clause (4) of section 13 of the Putni Regulation of 1819. The dar-putnidar continued in possession for many years. Indeed, it was not till the 7th August 1899 that his possession was formally terminated. On the 1st February 1901 the putnidar instituted a suit for rent against the dar putnidar for the period between May 1995 and January 1901. It was stated in the plaint of this suit that possession of the dar putnidar as usufructuary lien-holder under the Regulation had terminated on the 7th August 1899. It is clear, however, that as rent was claimed from 1895, the case for the putnidar must have been that the lien had ceased to exist at least from that date. On any other theory it would be impossible to substantiate the claim for rent from the dar-putnidar, because it has not been and cannot be disputed that so long as the dar-putnidar lawfully remained in possession as lien-holder, he was not liable to pay rent to the putnidar. This suit was decreed by the Subordinate Judge in part and that decree was ultimately affirmed on appeal by this Court on the 7th April 1908: Jakhomull v. Saroda Prosad Dey (1). During the pendency of this litigation the putnidar repeatedly made default in payment of rent. The consequence was that the present plaintiff (the dar-putnidar) was driven to satisfy the demand of the superior landlord on seven successive occasions from the 4th November 1905 to the 15th November 1908. The plaintiff now seeks to realise these sums; but he has very properly allowed the defendants credit for the rent payable by him as dar putnidar during this period. The Court of first instance decreed the claim in part. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision. He has held, first, that the plaintiff claims to be in possession during these years as usufructuary lien-holder and he must consequently be deemed to have made the payments for the protection of his alleged lien; and secondly, that if accounts are taken from the 17th November 1862 when the dar-putnidar came into possession upon payment of the dues of the superior landlord up to the date when his possession actually terminated, a large sum would probably be found to be due to the putnidar, and that till this account has been taken the plaintiff should not be allowed to recover sums paid by him to save the putni. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either of these propositions.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, it is clear that the plaintiff did not claim to be in occupation as usufructuary lien-holder during the years 1905 to 1908. As already stated, the case for the putnidar in the previous suit for rent was that possession of the dar putnidar as lien-holder had ceased on the 7th August 1899. In fact, the suit was founded on the theory that possession had been terminated at least as early as 1895. That allegation was not repudiated by the defendant. The defendant stated that a large sum of money was due to him on account of the payment made by him to the superior landlord on the 17th November 1862, and he made a grievance that as this large sum was still due to him, he could not be held responsible for the payment of rent. But there was no allegation on his part that he was actually in occupation as a lien-holder. Under these circumstances it is impossible for us to hold that the present plaintiff may regularly be deemed to have made successive payments to the superior landlord for the protection of his alleged lien. Consequently the principle of the decision in the case of Jinnat Ali v. Fateh Ali (2), upon which the District Judge relies, cannot apply. The payments were made by the plaintiff in his character as dar putnidar and there is no question that the defendant as putnidar has profited by the payments.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it is clear that the claim of the plaintiff cannot be postponed merely because accounts have not been taken of the possession of the plaintiff from the 17th November 1862. It is plain that if a claim were now to be put forward for an account of this period, it would be successfully met by the plea of limitation. It is also clear that during this long series of years the putnidar has not put forward a claim for recovery of any excess amount which might have been realised by the dar putnidar. The grounds assigned by the District Judge in support of his judgment, therefore, cannot be supported.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 148A—Co-sharer, suit by, for arrears of rent—Form of suit.

The essential principles underlying section 148 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act are (1) that the suit should, in form, be for the whole rent and in substance for the separate share of rent in arrears, (2) that the whole body of landlords are impleaded, with the allegation that the plaintiff has not been able to ascertain what, if any, rents are due to the former. In such cases the whole rent due must, in the nature of things, be always a matter of speculation for the plaintiff and he is entitled to assert that he believes that his share of the rent due is the entire rent due and ask the Court to decide on the accuracy of that belief, if and when the impleaded co-sharers appear and claim any arrears as due to themselves. If his belief is accurate, the Court will give him a decree for his share of the rent only as being the entire rent due, if inaccurate, the Court will investigate and decree the arrears due to the impleaded co-sharers as well. RAM DHYAN SINGH v. PARDIP SINGH.

JUDGMENT.

MANUK, J,—This appeal comes before us against a judgment and decree of the District Judge of Gaya, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of the First Court of Gaya whereby the latter dismissed the plaintiffs-repondents' suit for arrears of rent against the contesting defendants, now represented by the appellants before us, and against the respondents second party as pro forma defendants.

The facts of the case, so far as we are concerned with them, are that at the time of the suit the superior interest qua mukarrari or sub-mokarrari grants in the property was held as to ten annas by the plaintiffs, as to four annas by the contesting defendants Nos. 1 to 16, and as to two annas by the pro forma defendants Nos. 17 to 20. Apart from their mokarrari interest the contesting defendants Nos. 1 to 16 held the whole of this property on a thika acquired from the original proprietors. In the year 1917 the plaintiffs, as ten-anna mokararidars, instituted a suit for recovery of arrears of thika rent due to them for the years 1324 and 1325 Fasli. The plaint on the record is silent as to whether the plaintiffs collected their rent separately from or jointly with the other co-sharers. They framed their suit as one under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In paragraph 7 of their plaint they alleged that the contesting defendants Nos. 1 to 16 were in collusion with the pro forma defendants; that the latter had refused to join in the institution of the suit; that, though enquiry was made, both sets of defendants had refused to let the plaintiffs know whether the thikadar defendants had paid all or any portion of the proportionate share of the rent due to the pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs were, therefore, driven to declare in their plaint that their proportionate share alone, as in arrears on the date of suit, was the entire amount of rent due, and that they, therefore, instituted the suit under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They prayed for a decree for the amount due them together with costs and interest, and in the alternative they prayed that "If the pro forma defendants also state that any rent is due to them and wish to join in the suit as plaintiffs, then they may be ordered to join in this suit on payment of Court-fees."

The thikadars, defendants Nos. 1 to 16, alone appeared in the first Court, and in their written statement they ignored the allegations contained in paragraph 7 of the plaint, whereby the plaintiff had sought to bring his suit under the provisions of section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They were silent as to whether they had paid any rent for the years in suit to the pro forma defendants, nor did they take any objection that the suit, as framed, did not fall under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge, in a very short judgment, held that Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1) applied to the facts of the case and that, therefore, the suit was not maintainable under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He accordingly dismissed the suit with costs.

On appeal the learned District Judge distinguished Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1), and holding that Nunda Lal v. Kala Chand (2) was more appropriate in its application to the facts of the present case, decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs. It is, as I have said, against this order, that this appeal has been made to us.

Now sections 145A and 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act were added to that Act in 1907 in order to set at rest the vexed questions arising out of suits brought by a co-sharer landlord suing alone for his share of the rent if there was no arrangement to collect separately, or for the entire rent if the collections had been joint. The Calcutta High Court had held that the Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply to a suit for recovery of rent by one or more co sharer landlords as distinguished from the whole body of them [see Jogendra Nath Ghosh v. Paban Chandra Ghosh (3) decided in 1904, and the cases cited therein]. That Court had also held that the tenure or holding does not pass to the purchaser at a sale in execution of such a decree [Narain Uddin v. Srimanta Ghose (4)]. Those decisions were mainly arrived at by interpreting the words "anything which the landlord under this Act is required or authorised to do" in section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act, as including the bringing of a suit for arrears of rent. A perusal of the judgments of Ghose, J., and Geidt, J., in dissension as set out in the report of the Privy Council decision in Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy (5), will suffice to show the views then prevalent. It is interesting to observe that shortly before that decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council, which was based on the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stood before its amendment in 1907, the Indian Legislature had intervened to set the questions at rest. The suit in the last mentioned case before the Privy Council was instituted by a co-sharer landlord for the entire rent against the tenant and the other co-sharer landlords, the latter having refused to join him in that suit. The Judicial Committee held that section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not a bar to such a suit, as the filing of a suit is not a thing which the landlord is under the Act required or authorised to do. Their Lordships further held that under the general principles of legal procedure, quite apart from the Bengal Tenancy Act, a sharer whose co sharers refuse to join as plaintiffs, can bring them into the suit as defendants and sue for the whole rent due, and could do so in spite of an arrangement previously prevailing whereby the co-sharers collected their rent separately. Such an arrangement, their Lordships say, merely affected the right to sue separately, that is without joining the other co sharers, but in no other respect modified the terms of the holding. It followed, therefore, that the right to bring the tenure to sale remained intact.

In my opinion it follows a fortiori from that decision that under the law, as it then stood, a co sharer could bring a similar suit even though the collection had been joint.

Meanwhile, as I have said, the Indian Legislature had placed section 148A and section 158B on the Statute Book; section 158B, in order to benefit co-sharer landlords who collected their rents jointly, and section 148A to include those who collected separately and were, therefore, not in a position to know whether the rents payable by the tenants to other co sharers had been in fact paid or not.

It is unnecessary for us to consider whether these sections have in any way affected the general principles of legal procedure laid down by the Privy Council as applying to such suits, for we can decide the appeal before us on section 148A itself.

I am of opinion that the essential principles underlying that section are (1) that the suit should, in form, be for the whole rent and in substance for the separate share of rent in arrears; (2) that the whole body of landlords are impleaded, with the allegation that the plaintiff has not been able to ascertain what, if any, rents are due to the former. In such cases the whole rent due must, in the nature of things, be always a matter of speculation for the plaintiff and he is entitled to assert that he believes that his share of the rent due is the entire rent due and ask the Court to decide on the accuracy of that belief, if and when the impleaded co-sharers appear and claim any arrears as due to themselves. If his belief is accurate the Court will give him a decree for his share of the rent only as being the entire rent due; if inaccurate, the Court will investigate and decree the arrears due to the impleaded co-sharers as well.

These are obviously the principles underlying the decision in Nunda Lal v. Kala Chand (2), in which it was held that the plaint must be examined to find its intention, and the decision in Brohmanand Nath Deb Sircar v. Hem Chandra Mitra (6), in which it was held that a very similar plaint to the one before us substantially complied with the requirements of section 148A inasmuch as the rent due under that section does not mean the entire rent payable on the original contract or lease. It may be the whole of the rent payable if the whole happens to be in arrears, it may include the arrears of the plaintiff and the known arrears of his co-sharers, it may, on the other hand, turn out to be only the arrears due to the plaintiff himself. If the plaint in spirit and intention complies with the essential require-Muhammadan Law, Volume II, page 262. The Courts below have confounded the age of fifteen with the age of puberty.

Babu Kshitis Chundra Sen, for the Respondent.—The law says that puberty is to be presumed on the completion of the fifteenth year unless the contrary is proved. Refers to section 91 of Wilson's Anglo-Muhammadan Law; Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, Volume II, page 279. If a girl attain puberty before that, she must prove that because it is within her special knowledge. In this case no such evidence has been given. The case for the defence in the Courts below was that the girl was above 15 years, and, therefore, puberty must be presumed, whereas on the evidence the Courts below have found that she was less than fifteen years. It was never the defendant's case that she attained puberty although she was less than 15 years at the time of the marriage in question.

Mr. Altof Ali briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendants are the wife and her father, and the plaintiff, the husband, has obtained a decree in both the lower Courts. The defendants denied that any marriage had been celebrated and further pleaded that even if such a celebration had been performed, the marriage was invalid because the consent was given by her father, although his daughter had attained puberty and was consequently competent to give her own consent. As regards the question whether the alleged marriage was performed, the finding of the lower Courts, which is in plaintiff's favour on this point, is conclusive. As regards the competency of the female defendant to give consent to her own marriage, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the actual date of the attainment of puberty had still to be ascertained, but that the age of the girl at the time of her marriage was 14 years and 9 months. That Court has held on this finding that as the girl did not attain 15 years of age, the presumption of puberty did not arise, and, therefore, she must be held to be a minor.

On behalf of the appellants, it is contended that the lower Appellate Court has misunderstood the presumption of Muhammadan Law; that although there is a presumption that a girl who has attained the age of 15 years has also attained puberty, there is no converse presumption that the girl who has not reached that age has not attained puberty. This is a correct statement, but we do not find in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that it has drawn the converse presumption. What appeared to have been the course of proceeding in the two lower Courts was that in defence it was pleaded that the age of the girl was 18 years and that there was no doubt of her power to consent. It does not seem to have been ever pleaded that she is entitled to rely on the physical fact of puberty, if her age was less than 15 years. Defendants relied entirely on the legal presumption to prove puberty and made no attempts to prove it by any other evidence. The fact of puberty obviously was a fact within the special knowledge of the first defendant and the burden of proving that fact lay on her. It is conceded that there is no evidence whatever to discharge that onus. It was argued that the statement of a Muhammadan female that she had attained puberty must, under the Muhammadan Law, be accepted. Assuming for the consideration of this argument that this is a correct statement of Muhammadan Law, it cannot help the defendants in this case, because there is no statement on the record of the actual fact of puberty having been attained. Our attention has been drawn to some statements in the written statements filed by the father and the daughter. But in none of them is there any statement which really goes further than the allegation that the daughter had reached the age at which she would be competent to give her consent. We are asked to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on the fact of puberty. As no evidence has been given and as this special plea of puberty was not taken in either of the lower Courts, the appellants are not entitled to a remand at this stage of the case.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s 69—Landlord and tenant—Bhogra land—Permanent lease granted by landlord—Ejectment.

There is nothing in the terms of section 69 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act from which it may be inferred that every tenant holding sir lands is on that account liable to be ejected, nor is there anything in the section which would bar the defendant, in a suit in ejectment from bhogra land, from setting up a permanent lease granted by the proprietor himself. The granting of such permanent leases by proprietors of bhogra land is not forbidden by either the Tenancy or the Land Revenue Act. [p. 98, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Sub-Judge, Sambalpur, dated the 8th December 1916, confirming a decision of the Additional Munsif, Sambalpur, dated the 9th September 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The plaintiffs Debi Prasad Patnaik and his two brothers are the gountias of Mauza Sudhamal in the Sambalpur District. In the year 1915 they filed a suit in the Munsif's Court at Sambalpur to eject the defendants as ordinary tenants from their bhogra lands and to recover khas possession. The defendants pleaded that they were not ordinary tenants; that about 50 years ago the lands in suit, together with some raiyati lands, were leased in perpetuity at a yearly rental of Rs. 11-8 0 to Dakhu, the great grandfather of the defendant No. 1, and one Damodar by Balmakund Patnaik, a former gountia of the village; that the land in suit had remained in the possession of the defendants' family ever since, the bhogra lands paying an invariable rent of Rs. 9, the rent of the other parcel, which was raiyati land and subject to enhancement, having been from time to time enhanced; that the bhogra lands were afterwards divided between the lessees, the portion of the defendants' grandfather coming into the possession of defendant No. 1, the other defendants being his co-sharers; that this lease had been granted on the express condition that the lessees should construct a tank and a kata in the village for the use of the villagers and for the improvement of the land, and that these conditions were duly fulfilled. They contended that the defendants, being tenants in perpetuity, were not liable to ejectment. The Munsif as well as the Subordinate Judge of Sambalpur, before whom the case came on appeal, found that the lease relied upon by the defendants was in fact granted, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court the case was remanded to the lower Appellate Court for the purposes of ascertaining whether Balmakund, the original lessor, had power to grant the lease in perpetuity binding his successors. The answer to this question would depend upon the nature of the interest held by Balmakund. The case was remanded with directions to the lower Appellate Court to answer the following questions:

(1) Had Balmakund a permanent or a temporary tenure as gountia in the lands in suit?

(2) If so, was it heritable?

(3) Do the plaintiffs claim to eject the defendants by right of inheritance as gountia in respect of Balmakund's interest? If not, do the plaintiffs claim under any other title to eject?

(4) Have the plaintiffs or their predecessors acquired the status of protected gountia under section 65 (a) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act?

The lower Appellate Court had power to take further evidence on these points, if necessary. No further verbal evidence was adduced before the Subordinate Judge on remand, but copies of two orders passed by Mr. Bowie, Deputy Commissioner of Sambalpur in 1870, and by Mr. A. M. Russell, the Settlement Officer in 1878, relating to the proprietary rights of the gountias in Mauza Sudhamal were referred to, as well as Mr. Russell's Reports on the Land Revenue Settlement of the Sambalpur District of 1876-1877 and the Settlement Reports of 1885 to 1889 and Mr. Dewar's Report of 1906. From these documents it appears that the village in question was at first granted mafi to the Patnaik family by the native Government but was subsequently assessed to land revenue. It, however, continued in the Patnaik family passing succession from one member to another until 1858, when the then gountia, being unable to pay the revenue, made over his interest in the village to Balmakund, and the order of Mr. Bowie, already referred to, recognised the proprietary right of Balmakund Patnaik in Mauza Sudhamal. What the exact interest of the gountias of this village was in the property before that date is, perhaps, a matter of conjecture. It was contended that according to the Settlement Report of Mr. Russell the gountias of Sambalpur were at first merely lessees holding under temporary leases, and that proprietary rights were not conferred on them until 1870. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion from a perusal of the history of this particular village that Balmakund was recognised as proprietor in 1870, and that even before that he and the Patnaik family had a heritable right to the village and not merely a temporary tenure. His answer to the first question, therefore, may be taken as being that Balmakund had a permanent not a temporary tenure as gountia in the lands in suit, and his answer to the second question was in the affirmative. In answer to the third question he found that the plaintiffs claimed to eject the defendants by right of inheritance as gountias in respect of Balmakund's interest and not under any other title. His answer to the fourth question was in the negative.

From this judgment the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court and contended in effect that the evidence adduced before the lower Appellate Court did not support the findings of the learned Judge. It was contended that the Settlement Reports, and especially that of Mr. Russell, clearly shewed that before 1870 the proprietary right in the village belonged to Government or to the zemindar and that the gountias had no permanent transferable interest even in the bhogra lands, and that it was not until 1870 that the proprietary right in the bhogra lands was given to the gountias, and that as the lease in question was granted 50 years ago, i.e., before 1870, Balmakund had no interest at that time which would entitle him to grant a permanent lease binding upon his successors. The respondents contended, firstly, that the evidence was quite sufficient to justify the conclusion that even before 1870 the gountias had a permanent transferable right in the bhogra lands, and, secondly, that even if their proprietary right was not conferred until 1870 the transferor, having acquired a permanent transferable interest, at all events in 1870, the transfer must be taken to operate on the interest then acquired, Balmakund the transferor being then alive, and that section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act was applicable to the circumstances of the present case. On referring to Mr. Russell's report and the correspondence annexed thereto, it appears that the question of re-settling the land revenue of Sambalpur was taken up by Mr. (afterwards Sir Richard) Temple in 1862, when settlement operations were commenced throughout the provinces, and orders were issued by him for making a settlement on precisely the same principles as those followed in other districts, the characteristic of which was that the village headmen or gountias were to be made proprietors of their villages and given rights of transfer. An open declaration of this policy was made to the gountias by proclamation at Sambalpur in 1862, and settlement operations were then set on foot but owing to the death of Major Impey, the Deputy Commissioner in 1864, little progress was made. His successor questioned the principles on which the settlement was to be made and a voluminous correspondence ensued, which did not close until 1872 and ended in the making of a settlement on a basis different from that of any other in the provinces. In the result it would appear that the principle followed in the settlement was that the proprietary rights which were conferred upon gountias in 1862 were limited to their bhogra lands. Although the order made by Mr Bowie in 1870 which concerned a dispute between Balmakund Patnaik and another claimant to the proprietary rights in Mauza Sudhamal, in terms purports to confer proprietary rights in that village on Balmakund, it may well be that even before that date such rights had been recognised in the gountias of that village in accordance with a proclamation made in 1862, the terms of which were repeated and confirmed by the Chief Commissioner in a public darbar held at Sambalpur on the 9th March 1863. Indeed, the decision of Mr. Bowie appeared to be based upon a consideration of the history of the gountiahi rights acquired by Balmakund's predecessors. However this may be, once it is admitted that Balmakund acquired a permanent transferable interest in the property in 1870, in my opinion section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act will apply, so that the transfer made before 1870 would operate on the interest which the transferor acquired in the property at that date, so as to create in the lessees a permanent transferable interest.

It was contended, however, that by section 69 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, the defendants were liable to be ejected from their holding on the ground that it consisted entirely of sir lands. Bhogra land is, under the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act, comprised in the term sir land, but in my opinion there is nothing in the terms of section 69 of the Tenancy Act from which it may be inferred that every tenant holding sir lands is on that account liable to be ejected. The section itself is introduced in the interest of the tenant and restricts the landlord's right of ejectment except in three cases, one of which is where the ejectment is in execution of a decree passed on the ground that the holding consists entirely of sir lands. There are undoubtedly certain cases in which the landlord's right to eject tenants from his sir land is recognised, but I can find nothing either in the Land Revenue Act of 1881 or in the Tenancy Act of 1898 restraining the proprietors of such lands from granting permanent leases, and where a suit is brought to eject a tenant of bhogra land, there is nothing in section 69 of the Tenancy Act which would bar the defendant from setting up a lease granted by the proprietor himself. In the present case it has been found as a fact that the lease was granted, and in my opinion there is sufficient evidence on the record to justify the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the plaintiff's predecessor had a permanent transferable interest which would entitle him to grant the lease in question. In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Under-proprietary holdings in Oudh, confiscation and restoration of—Title acquired, nature of—Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869, Sch. II.

Although under-proprietary holdings in Oudh were confiscated absolutely to Government by the Proclamation of 15th March 1858, the rights of the under-proprietors as they existed before the Proclamation were restored in 1859 by letters set out in Schedule II of the Oudh Estates Act and by the Settlement Court proceedings taken under the rules validated by Act XXVI of 1866, and the title acquired by the Settlement Court decrees was a title from the British Government but was the same title which was possessed by the claimants before the confiscation. The title was new in the sense that the grantor was new, but it was old in the sense that what was granted was what was held before. [p. 102, col 2; p. 103, col. 1]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 2nd August 1918, upholding the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 8th April 1918.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiffs for possession of a one-anna pukhtadari share in the village of Sata, Pargana Baraunsa, on the allegation that, when the plaintiffs' great-grandfather Sheoratan Singh mortgaged the share, the share was ancestral property and that the mortgage could not be binding on the plaintiffs as it was not for necessity or to pay off any previous debt. It may be explained that a pukhtadari share means a share of a village held in under-proprietary right. The expression pukhtadari was an invention of the Settlement Courts intended to indicate the tenure of an under-proprietor whose subordinate right in the villages vested in him such a right of management that he would be liable to the taluqdar for a fixed amount of revenue plus something extra called malikana, but would himself stand to profit or loss by any excess or deficit in rent collections over the estimated rent roll at the time when the subordinate right was created. (See page 140 of Syke's Compendium.) The learned Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur dismissed the suit on the preliminary finding that the under-proprietary share could not be considered to be the ancestral property of the mortgagor Sheoratan Singh, inasmuch as Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th March 1858 divested all the proprietors of land of their proprietary rights and transferred and vested those rights in the British Government. This finding of the Subordinate Judge was upheld by the District Judge of Fyzabad in appeal. The second appeal to this Court originally came before one of us, who asked that the matter should be referred to a Bench of this Court for the reasons stated in the following order :—

"This is a case which should, in my opinion, be referred to a Bench of this Court for decision.

"The facts are that one Sheoratan Singh mortgaged a one anna share of his under-proprietary right in the village of Sata for Rs. 800 to the defendant on the 13th July 1900 for 90 years. The plaintiffs, who are descendants of Sheoratan Singh, brought this suit against the mortgagee for possession of the mortgaged property, on the ground that the property was ancestral property and that the transfer had not been made for legal necessity. The sole question in the case was whether the property was the ancestral property of Sheoratan Singh or his self-acquired property.

"The Courts below have held that it was the self-acquired property of Sheoratan Singh, on the ground that by the Proclamation of Lord Canning of the 15th March 1858 the proprietary right in land in Oudh was confiscated to the British Government and that all who after the date of the proclamation claim title to landed property must claim through the Government, and that, therefore, by the settlement decree which was obtained by Sheoratan Singh after the Mutiny, the property became the self-acquired property of Sheoratan Singh. The Courts below appear to have overlooked the fact that Sheoratan Singh was not the proprietor but the under-proprietor of the property mortgaged by him, and have not discussed the effect of the proclamation of 15th March 1858, and of the subsequent Settlement Court decrees on under-proprietary holdings. In the letter of the Government of India of the 12th September 1860 it was stated as follows :—

"'It was the intention of Government that all such subordinate holders, unless specially deserving of punishment for persisted rebellion, should be restored to the rights they possessed before the rebellion, whether the parent estates were ancestral, acquired or conferred, and that every such holder should be maintained in his rights under the new grantee precisely as if the taluqa had not been confiscated or as if having been confiscated, it had been settled with the hereditary taluqdar.'

"The questions for decision are :—

"1. What was the effect of the Proclamation of the 15th March 1858 on under-proprietary holdings in Oudh? Were such under-proprietary holdings confiscated absolutely to Government?

"2. What was the effect of the subsequent Settlement Court decrees, by which persons who had held as under-proprietors before the rebellion were recognised and decreed to be holding as under-proprietors?

"3. Did they acquire their title to such under proprietary holdings by virtue of the settlement decree from the British Government or were they by virtue of the decree merely maintained in the rights which they possessed prior to the proclamation?

"As it would appear that no case has been before this Court in which these points have been raised and as they are points of the greatest importance affecting as they do a large area of land held by under-proprietors in Oudh, I refer the case for decision of a Bench of this Court."

It may be stated that there can be no question that the property, apart from Lord Canning's Proclamation, was the ancestral property of Sheoratan Singh and this fact is conceded by the respondent's Counsel. The lower Court's judgment shows that Sheoratan Singh obtained this four-annas share by a Settlement Court decree from his three relations with whom it had been settled, on the ground that the property had belonged to his father. The evidence in cross-examination of Suraj Bali, defence witness No. 1, establishes this. The mortgage deed itself states that the property is ancestral. We have, therefore, only to decide the questions of law stated above.

Beginning with Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th March 1858, we find that certain taluqdars are specified as having deserved well of the British Government. "It is declared that these taluqdars are henceforward the sole hereditary proprietors of the land which they held when Oudh came under British rule, subject only to such moderate assessment as may be imposed upon them." (See page 379 of Syke's Compendium). The proclamation goes on to state: "The Governor-General further proclaims to the people of Oudh, that, with the above-mentioned exceptions, the proprietary right in the soil of the Province is confiscated to the British Government which will dispose of that right in such manner as to it may seem fitting." This confiscating proclamation was soon followed by one issued by the Chief Commissioner on the 25th March 1858, informing the land holders of Oudh other than the rewarded taluqdars that if they at once came in ready to obey his orders, and had taken no part in the atrocities committed on helpless Europeans, their lands would not be confiscated and claims to land held by them prior to annexation would be heard (See page 62 of Syke's Compendium.) The majority of land holders obeyed this invitation and the second Summary Settlement (the first Summary Settlement having taken place in 1856) followed, the result being that most of the taluqdars were reinstated in the estates they held in 1856. This second Summary Settlement was completed before the middle of 1859 (Ibid., page 63). On the 10th of October 1859 was issued the first of the two letters appended to the Oudh Estates Act with reference to section 3 of that Act and which is thus part of the statutory law of Oudh. The second, third and fourth paragraphs of this letter run as follows:—

"2. His Excellency in Council, agreeing with you as to the expediency of removing all doubts as to the intention of the Government to maintain the taluqdars in possession of the taluqas for which they have been permitted to engage, is pleased to declare that every taluqdar with whom a Summary Settlement has been made since the reoccupation of the Province, has thereby acquired a permanent hereditary and transferable proprietary right, namely, in the taluqa for which he has engaged, including the perpetual privilege of engaging with the Government for the revenue of the taluqa.

"3. This right is, however, conceded, subject to any measure which the Government may think proper to take for the purpose of protecting the inferior zemindars and village occupants from extortion, and of upholding their rights in the soil in subordination to the taluqdars

"4. The Governor General in Council desires that you will have ready, by His Excellency's arrival at Lucknow, a list of the taluqdars upon whom a permanent proprietary right has now been conferred; and that you will prepare sanads to be issued to these taluqdars at that time. The sanads will be given by, and will run in the name of, the Chief Commissioner, acting under the authority of the Governor General."

It will be seen that in the third paragraph reference is made to any measure which the Government may think proper to take for the purpose of protecting the inferior zemindars and village occupants from extortion and of upholding their rights in the soil in subordination to the taluqdars, and that in the fourth paragraph reference is made to the preparation of sanads. One of the measures taken was the drafting of the sanad in such a manner as to secure subordinate rights. We find in the approved form of the sanad printed on page 513 of Chhail Behari Lal's Taluqdari Law of Oudh, 1910 edition, the following passage:—

"It is also a condition of the grant that you will so far as in your power promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed."

A second measure taken by Government to ensure the protection of subordinate holders is foreshadowed in paragraph 5 of the second letter, dated 14th October 1859, in the Schedule of the Oudh Estates Act. That paragraph runs as follows:—

"5. This being the position in which the taluqdars will be placed, they cannot, with any show of reason, complain if the Government takes effectual steps to re establish and maintain in subordination to them the former rights, as those existed in 1855, of other persons whose connection with the soil is in many cases more intimate and more ancient than theirs; and it is obvious that the only effectual protection, which the Government can extend to these inferior holders, is to define and record their rights, and to limit the demand of the taluqdar as against such persons during the currency of the settlement to the amount fixed by the Government as the basis of its own revenue demand."

The measure foreshadowed is the defining of the subordinate rights. The procedure for defining these rights is contained in the rules given in the Schedule of Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866. The preamble of this Act runs as follows:—

"Whereas rules have been made by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh for the better determination of certain claims by persons possessed of subordinate rights of property in the territories subject to his administration; and whereas it is expedient that such rules should have the force of law; it is hereby enacted as follows: ..."

It is common ground that Sheoratan Singh got the four annas under-proprietary share in the village of which the one-anna share in suit is a fraction under a Settlement Court decree. It is clear also from the citations made by us above that what he got was given in pursuance of the Government's policy to maintain or restore the under-proprietary rights existing previous to the confiscation. The word "maintain" will be the right term if the sentence in the Proclamation of the 15th March 1858 "The proprietary right in the soil of the province is confiscated" be interpreted to mean that nothing more than the full or superior proprietary right was confiscated. The word "restore" will be right if we deem that the expression "proprietary right in the soil" would include under-proprietary rights.

There can be no question to our minds that the proper term to use is the word "restore". For the purpose of interpreting the expression in the proclamation "The proprietary right in the soil of the Province is confiscated", we may have recourse to Lord Canning's own letters and orders at or about the time of proclamation as expositio contemporanea of the highest value. In a letter of Lord Canning explaining his policy of the 17th June 1858, from which extensive quotations are made on pages 51 to 61 of Syke's Compendium, at pages 51 and 52, Lord Canning explains that, although a few of the talukdars of Oudh were the representatives of ancient families, the majority were men who, having held office as governors or collectors of Government rents under the native Government, had taken advantage of the weakness of that Government to make themselves nominal proprietors and actual possessors of the villages or the majority of the villages which formed what they called their talukas or estates, so that the condition of the actual occupants of the soil of the Province was one of unparalleled depression. In numerous instances they were compelled by the taluqdars to execute deeds of sale of whatever proprietary right they nominally possessed. He goes on to say (with reference to the first Summary Settlement which preceded the Mutiny): "Such being the condition of things in Oudh, the Government of India, perhaps with more of chivalrous justice than political prudence, determined at once to reinstate these proprietary occupants of the soil in what were believed to be their hereditary rights." On 12th September 1860 was issued a letter from the Government of India to the Officiating Chief Commissioner, Colonel Barrow, which is printed on pages 115 et seq of Syke's Compendium. The first paragraph of this letter runs as follows: —

"The Governor-General in Council desires me to observe that in declaring that in confiscated estates which have been conferred on talugdari tenure on a new grantee the strict terms of the Proclamation of March 1858 are to be enforced against all holders of subordinate rights in such estates, ...the Officiating Chief Commissioner has gone considerably beyond the intentions of His Excellency, and has not acted in accordance with the spirit of Her Majesty's Proclamation".

Later on occurs the passage: —

"As already observed, you are quite right in saying that confiscation under the Proclamation of March 1858 where it has been carried out annuls proprietary rights of every kind in the soil, inferior as well as superior, and in this sense confiscation was carried out throughout the Province except as regards the six estates specified in the proclamation."

These quotations suffice to show that the words "proprietary right in the soil" in the proclamation included under-proprietary right. The literature of the period as given in Syke's Compendium does not suggest that any one ever considered the proclamation not to affect under proprietary rights.

It has indeed been suggested to us in argument that, even though it be admitted that the under-proprietary rights were confiscated to Government by the Proclamation of 15th March 1858, there was no need of actual restoration. Reliance is placed on the Privy Council ruling reported as Jehan Kadr v. Afsar Buhu Begum (1). In that case it was held that the former title to certain immoveable property in Lucknow as it belonged before the proclamation "was let in" by reason of Government having "withdrawn themselves" without making any order in favour of any definite person. (See page 12 of the ruling.) It has, therefore, been suggested that under-proprietary rights were "let in" in the same way and that no proof of actual grant by Government was necessary. The same ruling, however, expressed the view that such revival of title by withdrawal of Government could not be predicated except where there was no settlement to be made. The title by withdrawal of Government cannot, therefore, have accrued in the case of under-proprietors to claim their rights in the Settlement Court.

The method or conduct by which Government reconferred the confiscated under-proprietary rights is to be found in paragraph 5 of the letter of the 19th October 1859 mentioned above appended to the Oudh Estates Act. The words are, "Taluqdars cannot complain if the Government takes effectual steps to re-establish and maintain in subordination to them the former rights as those existed in 1855." The Settlement Court proceedings were merely a defining of the rights which were granted by this paragraph. In brief in this letter Government re-establish under-proprietary rights as defined by subsequent proceedings. Before concluding this judgment it appears desirable to refer to the following passage in the Samarpaha Taluka case, Bisheshar Bakhsh Singh v. Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (2), decided by Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Stuart and reported in 21 Oudh Case 1. On page 27* we find the following passage:—

"It seems clear, therefore, that it was at this time the intention of the Government, in spite of the grant of full proprietary rights to the taluqdars, to revive as against them the rights of certain subordinate zemindars and tenure-holders; but beyond this there is nothing in the language of this letter of the 10th October 1859 to indicate that Government had any intention of restoring or reviving other rights, such for example as those of the rights of the reversionary heirs of a deceased Hindu expectant on the death of the Hindu widow in possession of the estate."

Now this passage might appear to conflict with our view that after the confiscation taluqdars were granted by their sanads and other proceedings their estates subject to such under proprietary rights as should subsequently be found to have existed at the date of confiscation. It is to be remarked, however, that the Samarpaha case was not concerned in any way with under-proprietary rights. The passage quoted up to the semicolon was merely for the purpose of drawing the conclusion that follows the semicolon, and for this purpose it was sufficiently accurate. Nor can this conclusion be held to mean that Government had no intention of restoring reversionary rights in the case of under-proprietary holdings. The conclusion is dealing merely with reversionary rights as affecting the title of the superior holders. This passage does, however, indicate that Mr. Lindsay and Mr. Stuart adopted the view that under-proprietary rights were affected by the proclamation and required to be restored.

Our answers then to the questions for decision referred to this Bench are as follows:—The answer to the first question is that under-proprietary holdings in Oudh were confiscated absolutely to Government by the Proclamation of 15th March 1858. Our answer to the second question is that the rights of the under-proprietors as they existed before the proclamation were restored by the letters of the 10th October 1859 and 19th October 1859, which are set out in Schedule II of the Oudh Estates Act, and by the Settlement Court proceedings taken under the rules validated by Act XXVI of 1866. Our answer to the last question is that the title acquired by Settlement Court decrees was a title from the British Government, but the title possessed by the claimants before the confiscation. The title was new in the sense that the grantor was new, but the title was old in the sense that what was granted was what was held before. It was just as much in the power of Government to grant a man an ancestral right in property as to grant him a personal right. In every case it is a question of what was the intention of Government, and this has been the principle always adopted in deciding cases of the grant of the proprietary right proper. The lower Courts were right in holding that the Proclamation put an end to the under-proprietary rights but they failed to notice that the policy and the declared intention of Government in re-conferring these rights was to re-confer them in the precise condition in which they had been held before confiscation.

Accordingly we allow this appeal and remand the case to the Court of first instance for decision of the remaining issues. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEAN, C. J.—This is a rent suit, the rent being payable partly in cash and partly in kind, and the question which we have to decide depends upon the true construction of the kabuliyat which is set out at page 11 of the paper book. The defendant, the present appellant, who is the tenant, says that under that document, if the paddy which he agreed to deliver were not delivered, the parties themselves put a value upon it, namely, a value of Rs 30. The plaintiff's contention is, that if the paddy were not delivered, then that he was entitled to get the value of it at the market rate of the day. Now by the argument, the defendant, who, as I have just said, is the tenant, agreed to pay a rent which amounted to Rs. 59-10-0 and also to deliver to the plaintiff 1½ bish of paddy "which may be valued at Rs. 30 by guess", which I understand is by estimation, "making a total of Rs. 89-10 as. the assessed rent, as also to offer a bonus of Rs. 15." Then the document goes on to say that he "would pay every year the rent fixed," by that, I suppose, was meant the Rs. 59-10-0, and then the document goes on to say that the defendant should carry to the house the amount of paddy to which I have referred. Then if we look at the clause at page 12, we find this "if there be any negligence in the payment of rent or the delivery of paddy, an interest at the rate of 3 pies per rupee per month shall be charged till the day of payment or delivery. No plea of payment shall be put forth on the basis of any receipt or document, other than the dakhila, and if the rent is neglected to be paid, it shall be realized by taking legal measures." The question is what effect, looking at the document as a whole, is to be given to the language used. If the plaintiff's contention is sound, it is difficult to see what real effect is given to the words "paddy which may be valued at R. 30 by estimation, making a total of Rs. 89-10-0 the assessed rent." It is suggested for the plaintiff that these words are adopted merely for stamp purposes for the purpose, that is, of estimating the stamp duty payable for the document. But that is a mere suggestion and I do not think that that is a suggestion which we can accept. It seems to me, taking the document as a whole, that what the parties intended was this, that the defendant was to pay so much rent in money and so much rent in kind, but that in order to avoid disputes and the going into any question as to the value of the paddy in the event of its non-delivery, the parties agreed that it should be valued at Rs. 30 by estimation, and that view is supported by the word "making a total of Rs. 89 10-0 as the assessed rent." This view is also supported by the subsequent clause at page 12, which provides for payment of interest in the event of non-payment of rent and non-delivery of paddy; it says that it shall be charged till the date of payment and delivery. Charged upon what? I think that must mean upon the amount of rent and upon the amount at which they estimated the value of the paddy. The last clause provides that the plaintiff shall be entitled to realize the rent, if it be not paid, by taking legal measures. There is nothing said as to what the plaintiff is to do if the paddy is not delivered. That seems to me again to point to the conclusion that when they speak of "rent" there, they mean not only the rent in cash but the rent in kind the value of which had been assessed as between the parties at Rs. 30. It may very well be that there were good reasons for this; the parties may have thought that it would be more prudent as between themselves to fix the amount which should be taken as the value of the paddy if it were not delivered rather than have a dispute upon each occasion as to the market value of the paddy at the time of the breach.

Looking at the document as a whole, I think the contention of the appellant is sound, and that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be varied by reducing the amount decreed to the plaintiff, in accordance with our decision, and the appellant must have the costs of the appeal.

BANERJEE, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice in thinking that this appeal ought to be allowed. I only wish to add that whatever weight the explanation offered for the plaintiff, that the estimated value of the paddy is given in the kabuliyat for the purpose of determining the amount of stamp duty, might have had if the kabuliyat had not contained the words, "making a total of Rs. 89 10 0 only as the assessed rent," in the presence of those words, that explanation loses all its force. The words in the original are "ekuni 89 taka 10 ana jamma abadharita", and "jamma abadharita" is a well known Bengali expression which means a great deal more than a provisional settlement of the rent for the incidental purpose of ascertaining the stamp duty. The lease was a mokarrari and mourasi lease; and when such a document mentions a certain sum of money as the "jamma abadharita," which words may well be rendered as "the fixed rent," the meaning of the document seems to be very clear, that the parties wanted to fix the value of the paddy, that is, the part of rent which was payable in kind.

Appeal allowed.

Mr B. B. Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the superior proprietor of the village in which the disputed plots are situated. The plots were held by Umrao Khan, the husband of the defendant, as a muafidar. The plaintiff sought to resume the holding but was unsuccessful. The finding of the Revenue Court, which was upheld by the Board of Revenue, was that Umrao Khan was entitled to under-proprietary rights (qabiz darmiani). The plaintiff then threatened to file a suit in the Civil Court to challenge the proprietary cf that finding Umrao Khan was evidently unaware whether a suit of that kind was maintainable in the Civil Court He is said to have agreed to relinq ish the under-proprietary rights conferred on him by the decree of the Revenue Court and to take a lease of the said land on a rental of Rs. 24 per year. A formal deed of relinquishment was obtained from him on the 14th March 1908, and registered on the same day. A kabuliyat was granted to him in return for 1315 Fasli on the 22nd May 1908.

On the strength of that kabuliyat the plaintiff sought to eject the defendant from the said land in November 1915. The defendant contested the notice of ejectment and set up her under-proprietary rights by virtue of the decree passed in the resumption proceeding. She succeeded. In the present suit the plaintiff claims a declaration that the defendant is not entitled to under proprietary rights. The Court of first instance decided against him but the lower Appellate Court upheld his claim, holding that the deed of relinquishment was not void for want of consideration.

A bona fide compromise effected to settle doubtful claims is not legally invalid, because the surrender of a doubtful right by one party and the forbearance by the other of his right to sue form a good reciprocal consideration for such a settlement. An intending litigant who bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate does give up something of value, but as pointed out by Cotton, L. J., in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Company (1) there must be in fact a serious claim honestly made.

Here the plaintiff had no right to sue at all, for section 108, clause 5-A, of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), as amended by Act IV of 1901, distinctly provides that the Courts of Revenue shall have exclusive jurisdiction over matters connected with the resumption of land held rent-free. The declaration made by the Revenue Court under section 108, clause H, that the rent free holder had acquired under-proprietary rights was final and could not have been questioned in the Civil Court. The plaintiff somehow misled Umrao Khan by his threat. The forbearance of a claim which was not maintainable cannot be treated as a forbearance at all The relinquishment was gratuitous. No effect was given to it in the revenue papers and the lower Appellate Court was not justified in holding that it was valid and enforceable as against the defendant.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs throughout.

[p. 107, cols. 1 & 2]

A lease in favour of a firm or a concern must be taken to be a lease in favour of the individuals constituting the firm, and in the absence of anything to show that the original grantees are no longer members of the firm, there is nothing to prevent them from acquiring occupancy rights. [p. 108, col. 2.]

Certain land was leased to a firm: the lease expired in 1905, but the firm continued in possession of the land. On the 1st April 1915 they were served with notice to quit but they disregarded the notice. On the 24th January 1916 the present suit was brought to eject them:

Held, (1) that the suit, having been brought more than six months after the expiration of the lease, was barred by the special rule of limitation prescribed by Article 1 (a) of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act; [p. 107, col. 1.]

(2) that the firm had acquired a right of occupancy in the land in dispute. [p. 109, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 29th June 1917.

Messrs. Lachmi Narain Sinha and Jagarnath Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manuk (with him Messrs. O.M. Agarwala and Panchanan Banerjee), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—This appeal comes before us from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr and arises out of a suit instituted by Rani Ranjit Kuer, the present proprietress of the Narhan Estate, as the shebait of an idol, for a declaration that 75 bighas 11 kathas and 1 dhur of land, forming part of Mouza Narayanpur, is the khudkasht land of the malik, and that the defendants, as the partners of a concern known as Daulatpur Factory, have not acquired a right of occupancy therein, and for khas possession thereof.

The plaintiff's case is that village Narayanpur was purchased by Musammat Ram Kuari, the wife of Babu Ranjit Singh, the then holder of the estate, out of her separate funds, and was dedicated by her to the family idol some time in 1237. The original grant, as contained in the copperplate, has been produced in this case, and it does not appear that it lays down any rule of succession to the office of the shebait. According to the plaintiff the income of the village was always appropriated to the use of the idol, although it is admitted that the Narhan Estate always stood recorded as the proprietor of the village in the Land Registration Department. The Court of Wards, who were long in possession of the estate, first on behalf of Babu Barham Narain Singh, then on behalf of his widow Musammat Biseswari Kueri, and lastly on behalf of his mother, the present proprietress, always treated Mouza Narayanpur as part and parcel of the estate, but they released the mouza on discovery of the copperplate, which discovery took place some time in July 1912.

On the 1st September 1914 Rani Ranjit herself executed a fresh deed in favour of the idol, and there is some contention before us whether this constitutes a fresh grant in favour of the idol or whether it merely confirms the original grant made by Musammat Rani Kueri.

The plaintiff's case is that the mouza of which the defendants are admittedly in possession is the khudkasht land of the idol, and that the defendants have not acquired any right of occupancy therein. On the 1st April 1915 the plaintiff served on the defendants a notice to quit, which was disregarded by the defendants. On the 24th January 1916 the present action was brought.

Now this appeal may be disposed of on a very short point. It is practically conceded by the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the appellant that if the Full Bench of this Court has decided the case of Janki Singh v.

Mahant Jagannath Das (1) correctly, then the plaintiff's suit, having been brought more than six months after the expiration of the lease, is barred by the special rule of limitation provided by the Bengal Tenancy Act. But he argues that that case was wrongly decided, and is at present before the Judicial Committee. So far as we are concerned, we are conclusively bound by the Full Bench decision and must hold that the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation. But as various other questions have been argued before us, we think it right and proper to deal with them.

The first question that arises is what is the title of the idol which enables it to maintain an action in ejectment. The only evidence of an endowment in favour of the idol is a copperplate which was discovered in an iron safe where the late Rani's ornaments were kept, but a dedication to be effectual must be real and not nominal; and it must be shown that the grantor completely divested herself of every portion of the property which is the subject matter of the grant. In the case of Madhab Chandra Bara v. Sarat Kumari Debi (2), which was a case of a public endowment, it was laid down by their Lordships that to support the case relied on that the lands in suit formed the subject of a valid public endowment it must be established that an absolute grant was, in the first place, made with the intention that the properties should be applied for the service of the idol, and that the properties have since been so applied, and that the members of the family of the settlor have not treated the property as one the profits of which were mainly intended to be applied for their benefit.

In my opinion the same considerations must apply, only with greater force, to the case of a private endowment which, it must be remembered, can be put an end to by the consensus of the family; and the dedication must be held to be nominal when there is no proof of the application of the income of the property endowed for the maintenance of the idol, and when the whole conduct of the parties is inconsistent with the hypothesis of a valid trust.

In this there is no evidence that the income of the village was ever applied for the maintenance of the idol; there is, on the other hand, positive evidence on the record, and that from the side of the plaintiff herself, that Musammat Ram Kuari herself treated this property as belonging to her. The property has always stood recorded, as I have said before, in the name of the estate in the Land Registration Department, and the mode of dealing with the property by the parties interested in the endowment shows conclusively that they regarded the property as belonging to the estate. It seems to me that the original endowment was altogether ineffectual, and that the trust in favour of the idol was never brought into existence. If the original endowment was ineffectual, then the subsequent grant by Rani Ranjit Koer having the estate of a Hindu mother cannot create a valid title in favour of the idol. It follows, therefore, that the idol cannot maintain a suit in ejectment.

The principal question of fact in this case is:—Are the lands, the subject-matter of the suit, the proprietor's private lands so as to prevent the accrual of a right of occupancy therein.

Mr. Manuk's argument is that under the combined operation of sections 20 and 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the defendants would have a right of occupancy in the land, unless it can be established (1) that the land has been cultivated as zerait land by the proprietor himself with his own stock and by his own servants or by hired labour for 12 continuous years immediately before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act; or that the land is recognized by village usage as proprietor's private land, and (2) that the land is held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year.

It is Mr. Manuk's argument that section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act gives a convenient definition of 'proprietor's private land,' but that section 116 of the Act is the substantive section that deals with the non-accrual of a right of occupancy in a proprietor's private land; and that, in order to establish such non-accrual, it must be shown as a condition precedent that the land is actually held under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year.

In this case the lease in favour of the defendants expired in 1905. The suit was brought in 1916. Between 1905 and 1916 the defendants have been in actual possession of the land without a lease, and it seems to me that the essential condition for non-accrual of a right of occupancy is not satisfied.

(1) 44 Ind. Cas. 94; 3 P. L. J. 1.
(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 26; 15 C. W. N. 126.

Mr. L. N. Sinha, however, argues that it must be presumed that the tenant has held over on the same terms and conditions, and that, therefore, he has in effect held under a lease from year to year or for a term of years.

This argument has great force, for it has been held that all that the landlord need prove on this point is that when the holding was first created it was held under a lease for a term of years or from year to year. It is, however, unnecessary to come to a definite conclusion on this point, because I am satisfied that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the land is the proprietor's private land within the meaning of section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is no evidence worth the name that the land has been cultivated by the proprietor himself with his own stock by his own servants or by hired labour for twelve continuous years immediately before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it is not suggested that the land is recognised by village usage as the proprietor's zerait.

Mr. L. N. Sinha relies on two circumstances in support of his contention. First, on the patta granted by Babu Permeshwar Narain Singh, the then holder of the estate, on the 11th February 1872 coupled with a letting by Poshan Jha in favour of Daulatpur Factory on the 27th March 1873 for cultivating purposes; and, secondly, on the admission of the defendants that the land is the zerait land of the malik.

I am of opinion that there is no force in this contention. The fact that the plaintiff's predecessor-in-interest was letting out a portion of the village for cultivating purposes in my opinion leads to nothing at all, and the admission of the defendant that the land is the zerait of the malik must be taken with all other facts, admitted or proved in the case, before it is possible for us to arrive at a definite conclusion.

It is admitted that the finally published Record of Rights, which was promulgated after the admission made by the defendants, is against the contention of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff has given no evidence whatever to discharge the heavy onus that is on her to bring her case within section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; I hold, therefore, that the land which is the subject-matter of this suit is not the zerait land of the plaintiff.

It was next contended by Mr. L. N. Sinha that in any case the defendants, being a concern or a firm, are incapable of acquiring a right of occupancy in any land, and reliance was placed on the case of Cannan, Liquidator Agra and Masterman's Bank v. Kylash Chunder Roy Chowdhry (3), Rai Komul Dossee v. J. W. Laidley (4) and Burrangi Raut v. M. H. Mackenzie (5).

The first two cases were decided under the old Rent Acts which contained no definition of a raiyat, but the word has now been defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act to mean "Primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself or by members of his family or by hired servants, or with the aid of partners, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right."

It is impossible to hold now that the members of a firm are incapable of acquiring a right of occupancy in the land. The two earlier cases were considered in the case of Laidley v. Gour Gobind Sarkar (6), and it was there pointed out that, so far as the first case was concerned, the report did not show the particular facts on which the decision was based, and with reference to which the observations of the learned Judges were made, and, so far as the second case was concerned, the observations on which the plaintiff relied, were obiter dicta and were not necessary for the decision of the case. The Court came to the conclusion that a lease in favour of a firm or of a concern must be taken to be a lease in favour of the individuals constituting the firm and as there was nothing to show in that case that the original grantees were no longer members of the firm, there was nothing to prevent them from acquiring a right of occupancy in the land. In the case before us the last lease in favour of the Daulatpur Factory is dated the 22nd May 1900, and there is nothing to show that the original grantees are no longer members of the firm. There is, on the other hand, a clear admission by the plaintiffs in their plaint that the original grantees are still the members of the firm.

This case was again considered in Bujrangi Raut v. M. H. Mackenzie (5), wherein its authority was not in any way shaken. The facts in the latter case were entirely different. The names of the original grantees in that case were unknown and the person who claimed to have acquired a right of occupancy in the land was some one different from the original grantees. It is obvious that that case can have no application to the facts of the case before us.

I hold that the defendants have acquired a right of occupancy in the land in dispute.

This appeal, therefore, fails, and I would dismiss it with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 108—Lease terminable on happening of certain event—Notice by lessee terminating lease, effect of.

Where a lease is terminable upon the happening of an event, as, e. g., a default in the payment of rent, it cannot, in the absence of such event happening, be terminated by the lessee. A notice, therefore, in such a case sent by a tenant under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, terminating the lease, is of no value.

Application to revise the order of the Additional Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Lucknow, dated the 26th August 1918.

Mr. A. Sham, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent in respect of a house let by the plaintiff to the defendants. The lease was granted for a period of one year. The rent was payable monthly, and the only contingency in which the lease could be terminated before the lapse of one year was according to the lease dependent on the will of the lessor, who was empowered to ask the lessees to vacate the house if he wanted the house himself or if the rent stipulated was not regularly paid. It is not disputed that none of these contingencies actually happened. What happened was that the lessees themselves chose to terminate the lease by sending a notice to the landlord and vacated the house on the 13th July 1917, within 8 months of the date when the lease was granted. They had, however, no such right under the lease. Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), which has been relied on, expressly saves a contract to the contrary and section 111 declares that a lease of that kind can be determined either by the efflux of the time limited by it or where such time is limited conditionally on the happening of some event, by the happening of such event. As the lessees had taken the lease of the house for a period of one year, they are liable to pay to the landlord the rent due for that period. As pointed out in Khuda Bakhsh v. Abid Husain (1), a notice sent by a tenant under section 106 is of no value, where there is an express contract providing for the manner in which the tenancy is to be terminated. The Court below granted a decree to the plaintiff for eight months.

Let the decree of the Court below be modified so as to allow the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 80 in addition to the amount allowed by the Court below with costs here and hitherto. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

Application allowed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 22 (2)—"Third person", who is—Co-sharer proprietor, whether can be third person.

A person inducted on to land as a tenant and not as a proprietor, and as a person intending to cultivate the land with his own ploughs, is a "third person" within the meaning of section 22 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, even though he may be a co-sharer proprietor.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 12th November 1917, setting aside a decision of the Munsif, Monghyr, dated the 2 th March 1917.

Messrs. Mohammad Ishfaq and Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kulwant Sahay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The land in suit in this case has been recorded in the finally published Record of Rights as being the bakasht of the plaintiff, who is a co sharer proprietor of the village. The case made out in the plaint was that it was not true bakasht land, but it was an old occupancy holding which had been acquired by the plaintiffs and for which they paid rent to their co-sharer maliks. The learned Munsif who tried the case came to the conclusion that there was nothing to show that the land had ever been an occupancy jote, and he appears to have accepted the evidence of two of the plaintiffs' witnesses that the land was kamat land. The learned Subordinate Judge does not come to a finding upon this point. He describes the land simply as the bakasht land of the plaintiffs.

The position of the defendant is that he was inducted on to the land by the common manager of the whole body of landlords. He is himself a co-sharer proprietor, and it is the case common to both sides that he pays rent not to the whole body of landlords, but to those among them only who are the plaintiffs in this case. The learned Subordinate Judge found that his position is that of a non-occupancy raiyat who can be evicted upon service of notice as one who is holding on a lease from year to year, the suit being one for ejectment. The suit was decreed in the Appellate Court upon this ground. In the Court of first instance the suit was dismissed although, as it seems to me, if the learned Munsif was going to accept evidence that the land was kamat land he should have accepted that evidence in its entirety and regarded the land as falling under section 116. That, however, is immaterial to the present question. We may assume, for the purposes of the case, that the plaintiff's story, as given in the plaint, is the correct story, that he is a co-sharer proprietor and acquired these lands in the manner contemplated by section 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; but he has also let out the land in the manner contemplated by section 22 (2), and, that being so, the person to whom he has let out the land becomes a raiyat upon the land, and as a raiyat, whether he has a right of occupancy or not, he cannot be ejected except upon conditions prescribed in the Bengal Tenancy Act, none of which have been fulfilled. It is, however, contended by Mr. Kulwant Sahay that a co-sharer proprietor of a village is not a third person within the meaning of section 22 (2). I for my own part fail to appreciate this distinction. It is a mere accident that the defendant in this case holds a small share in the village. He was inducted on to the land as a tenant and not as a proprietor, and as a person intending to cultivate the land with his own ploughs, to my mind he is a third person within the meaning of the section.

I would, therefore, decree this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 166 OF 1918.
June 12, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Justice Cuming.

HARIDAS BASAK—DECREE HOLDER—APPELLANT

RAJ KUMAR DEY SARKAR AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXI, rr. 11, 17—Execution of decree—Application for execution proving infructuous—Decree-holder not wishing to proceed, effect of—Application to amend previous application, nature of—Proceedings interrupted owing to erroneous order of Court—Inherent power of Court, exercise of.

Where an application for execution of a decree proves infructuous, and the decree-holder states that he no longer intends to proceed with it, the proceeding arising out of the application ipso facto comes to an end, and there is no necessity for a formal order striking off the application to terminate the proceeding. [p. 113, col 2.]

An application to amend a previous application, though not in the form prescribed by rule 11 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, but which, when read with the previous application, supplies all the information required by that rule, should be treated as a fresh application, and execution should be directed to proceed [p 113, col. 2.]

The fact that a decree-holder has, by an erroneous order of the Court, been prevented from proceeding with the execution of his decree in accordance with law, would justify the bringing into operation of section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. So, too, where it is found that a plea advanced by a judgment-debtor of payment is dishonest, and was made with the intention of delaying the execution until the decree was time-barred. [p. 114, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Dacca, dated the 8th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Munshigunge, dated the 22nd January 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Prokash Chandra Pakrashi, for the Respondents, raised a preliminary objection that the value of the suit being less than Rs. 500, the second appeal was not competent under section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Babu Upendra Lal Roy (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Dutta), for the Appellant.—The suit is one for accounts not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and the decree is for Rs. 746, so the second appeal is competent.

The appeal is on behalf of the decree-holder and it arises out of an application for execution of decree, by which the decree holder seeks to proceed against the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors The point involved in this case is covered by the decision in Gnanendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Shayama Sunder Jen (1). The decree-holder's application for attachment of the moveable properties was made within 12 years when the decree was not time-barred. Refers to Order XXI, rule 17, Civil Prosedure Code and Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (2). In Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3) the list was filed after the expiry of the period of limitation. In this case the application for execution together with the list having been filed within the period of limitation, no question of limitation can arise

Further, the fraudulent conduct of the judgment-debtors in delaying the execution of the decree by obtaining several postponements would entitle the decree-holder to execute the decree even after the expiry of 12 years. All the High Courts have unanimously held that where the judgment-debtor by fraudulent means delays or hampers the execution of the decree, the decree can be executed even after the expiry of 12 years, and the judgment-debtor would be debarred from raising the plea of limitation.

Babu Gunoda Charan Sen (with him Bab Prokash Chandra Pakrashi), for the Respondents.—The application for execution is to be made in a certain form prescribed in Order XXI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, and unless that is so, the application cannot be treated as an application for execution in accordance with law. The second application for execution cannot be treated as a fresh application in accordance with law, as it does not give the information required by law to be given in an application for execution. The question is, whether the second application can be considered as a continuance of the original application. It cannot be so regarded, because in the original application there was no prayer for attachment of the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors. The relief prayed for by the original application was exhausted when the peon gave his return, saying that no moveables of the judgment debtors could be found. If you want a continuance, there must be continuance in the proper sense of the term. In the case of Gnanendra Kumar Rai Chowdhury v. Shayma Sunder Jen (1), there was a distinct prayer in the original application for execution of the decree for proceeding against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, so that in that case there could be in law a continuance of the original application; but in the present case there could be no continuance of the original application, because in the original application there was no prayer for proceeding against the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors.

(3) 17 C. 631; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 960.

The real question for decision is, whether the present application can be regarded as an amendment of the original application within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 17 of the Civil Procedure Code. What the decree-holder wants is to add to the original application for execution a prayer to the effect that the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors may also be proceeded against. But in the original application there was no immoveable property mentioned which could be attached, and, therefore, as has been held in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3), the Court cannot add any new item of property not to be found in that application. The present application cannot be treated as an application for amendment of the previous application. In the case of Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3) their Lordships were agreed that amendment cannot be allowed after the application has been registered. See also the case of Hurry Charan Bose v. Sulaydar Sheikh (4), see also Padmanund Singh v. Anant Lal Misser (5) in which reliance was placed upon the decision in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3). The case of Gnanendra Kumar Rai Chowdhury v. Shayama Sunder Jen (1), in which there was a list of immoveable properties, is distinguishable from the case of Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3) and the present case. In the case of Salimulla Bahadur v. Sainaddi Sarkar (2), which is distinguished in Gnanendra Kumar Rai Chowdhury v. Shayama Sunder Jen (1), the question which has now arisen for decision did not arise at all I submit that in view of the Full Bench case the decision of the Court of Appeal below should be allowed to stand.

Then, section 151, Civil Procedure Code, can have no application to the facts of this case. If the Court was not competent to allow an amendment under Order XXI, rule 17, Civil Procedure Code, it cannot allow an amendment under section 151 invoking the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. If the law does not permit an amendment of the application for execution of the decree after the application has been registered, the Court cannot exercise its inherent jurisdiction to give that relief to the decree holder The power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code must be exercised with care and caution, and cannot be exercised where the Code makes an adequate provision for the purpose. Refers to Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan v. Allahabad Bank Limited (6).

Further, the second application for execution is barred by limitation. Now, the question is—am I estopped from raising the plea of limitation? The argument that because the judgment debtor paid various sums in obtaining several adjournments, therefore he is estopped from contending that the application was out of time, has got no substance in it. Refers to Mina Konwari v. Juggat Setani (7).

Babu Upendra Lal Roy briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the District Judge of Dacca reversing the order of the Munsif of Munshigunge passed in execution proceedings. The decree sought to be executed was passed on the 31st July 1905. The present proceeding arises out of an application for execution which was made on the 10th May 1915. In this application the decree-holder asked that the moveable property only of the judgment-debtors might be attached. The decree-holder was unable to attach any moveable property, so on the 10th July he filed a petition asking that his application for execution might be struck off, with the intention of making a fresh application for attachment of the judgment-debtors' immoveables. In the meantime the judgment-debtors had filed a petition alleging that the decree had been satisfied, and as these proceedings were pending the Munsif refused consent to the decree-holder's application to strike off the execution proceeding. Thereupon the decree-holder on the 18th July filed an application to amend his original petition so as to proceed against the immoveable property of the judgment-debtors. This was allowed by the Munsif, but his order was reversed on appeal by the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge has held, relying on the Full Bench decision in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3), that the original application for execution having been accepted and registered could not be amended.

On behalf of the appellant our attention has been drawn to the decision of a Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party, in the case of Gnanendra Kumar Rai Chowdhury v. Shayama Sunder Jen (1). In our opinion the facts of that case are distinguishable from the facts of the present case; and although we think the District Judge's order is wrong, we do not base our decision on the authority of that ruling. The principles, of the provisions of Order XXI, rule 17, are explained in the judgment of Petheram, C. J., in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (3): "Section 245" (of the old Code corresponding to Order XLI, rule 17, of the present Code) "gives a power of amendment before admission and registration, and I think by implication excludes any such power afterwards; indeed it is apparent that no such power is needed in the interests of justice, as if one application is defective, the applicant can at any time within the period of limitation present another in proper form." In the present case this remedy of presenting a fresh application was withheld from the appellant by the order of the Munsif. That order ought not to have been passed. He should have allowed a fresh application to be filed and the execution proceeding to be struck off, and that would not have prevented him from continuing his enquiry into the judgment-debtors' allegation of payment, which should have been treated as a separate proceeding under Order XLI, rule 2. But though after the Munsif's order the decree-holder could not in form make a fresh application, in our opinion he did so in substance. When he had stated that he no longer intended to proceed with his original application, the proceeding arising out of that application ipso facto came to an end and it was not necessary that there should be a further formal order by the Munsif striking off the application to terminate those proceedings. The Munsif, when the decree-holder filed the application to be allowed to proceed against the immoveable property, ordered that the petition should be made part of the execution petition. The consequence was that though that petition for amendment was not in the form prescribed by rule 11, Order XXI, yet reading the two petitions together, all the informations required by rule 11 and the subsequent rules relating to the information to be given in applications for execution were supplied to the Court.

The present case differs from the other cases on this point to which our attention has been drawn, as there is no necessity to invoke the aid of rule 17 and make the application of the 18th July date back to the 10th of May 1915, since a fresh application on the 18th July would not have been barred by limitation. Treating this application for amendment as an application for execution, the Munsif could have directed the execution to proceed and as stated above, we do not think that Order XXI, rule 11, Civil Procedure Code, would be any bar. Also we think that the Munsif's order can be supported from another point of view. He justified his order by reliance on section 151, Civil Procedure Code, which provides for the inherent power of the Court to make such order as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. We fully appreciate that one should be careful in applying this section, and we are in full agreement with the remarks to this effect made in more than one judgment in the case of Abdul Karim Abu Ahmed Khan v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (6). But there are two special circumstances in this case which, in our opinion, would have justified our bringing section 151, Civil Procedure Code, into operation had it been necessary. The first is, that the decree holder was prevented by an erroneous order of the Court from proceeding with the execution of his decree in accordance with law. The second is, that both the lower Courts have held that the judgment-debtors' plea of payment was dishonest and was made with the intention of delaying the execution proceedings until the decree became time-barred.

We, therefore, hold that the application for attachment of immoveable property filed on the 18th July 1917 should be treated as an original application in execution and allowed to proceed.

A point was taken before us that the application is barred by limitation, because the second application for execution made on the 21st August, 1911 was made more than three years after the last previous step-in-aid of execution. Assuming that this was so, we think that the conduct of the judgment debtors in the subsequent execution case, in which they paid various sums in order to obtain postponements, barred them from raising the plea of limitation in the present execution proceeding. The case relied on by the lower Courts, Coventry v. Tulshi Pershad Narayan Singh (8), supports their decision on this point. It is more applicable to the facts of the present case than the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mina Konwari v. Juggat Setani (7) which was cited on behalf of the appellant.

The result is, that the appeal is decreed. The order of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored. The appellant will get his costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The plaintiffs are appellants in this case. The plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are the sons of one Mohan Lal. Plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 purchased a portion of the property from plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 by means of a kobala, dated the 26th April 1912. The plaintiffs brought the present suit for confirmation of possession and in the alternative for recovery of possession of the properties in suit on declaration of their title thereto and on holding that the defendants are merely Farzidars having no title in the properties in suit, nor have they ever been in possession thereof. Mohan Lal, the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, executed an unregistered mortgage-bond in the Farzi name of Babunandan Jha on the 25th Chait 1266. Babunandan Jha on the basis of the said mortgage obtained a Farzi decree in execution of which he purchased the properties in suit on behalf of Mohan Lal. These properties consisted of some shares in four villages; 7-gandas 2-cowris share pokhta out of 16-annas share of Mouza Machheta, Tauzi No. 3403, and 13-gandas 1-cowri and 1 K. pokhta out of 16 annas of a Mouza called Awksi Madhubani, bearing Tauzi No. 3490, 5 gandas 3 cowris pokhta share in Mauza Nadiani, Tauzi No. 13466, and 4 gandas pokhta share in Mauza Nadiani bearing Tauzi No. 3431. The latter two shares in village Nadiani are covered by suit No. 353, Second Appeal No. 155. The shares in the former two are covered by Suit No. 311, Second Appeal No. 141. The facts giving rise to the cause of action in both the suits are almost the same. The suits and the appeals in the Courts below were tried analogously and consequently the second appeals in this Court were heard together and it will be sufficient to dispose of all these second appeals by one judgment.

The plaintiffs' case is that at the time when the mortgage bond was executed in the Farzi name of Babunandan Jha, who was the father's sister's son of Mohan Lal, there was a decree for rent against Mohan Lal of the Maharajah of Darbhanga amounting to Rs. 7,000. The said bond was executed in order to save the properties from the Court sale in execution of the said decree of the Maharaja of Darbhanga. The decree of Babunandan Jha and the subsequent auction sales in execution thereof were all the result of the same intention and have been styled in the plaints as "collusive transactions." The translation in the paper book of the plaint is not accurate.

In paragraph 5 of the plaint it is stated that in order to maintain the Farzi nature of the transactions the defendant No. 1's name was designedly recorded in the Collectorate in respect of the said shares. The plaintiffs assert, however, that in spite of the said Farzi transaction the plaintiffs' ancestor and thereafter the plaintiffs continued to be in possession of the properties in suit, and in the year 1900, when the survey operations were undertaken, the plaintiffs preferred an objection to the survey authorities praying that their names be entered in the survey records and the names of the defendants be expunged. The survey authorities in respect of all the villages in question found that the transactions by virtue of which the names of the defendants or their ancestors were recorded in the Collectorate were all Benami and Farzi and that the title remained all along with Mohan Lal and after his death, with the plaintiffs. In respect of the villages comprised in Suit No. 311 corresponding to Appeal No. 141, the survey authorities definitely came to the conclusion after enquiry on the spot that the said shares were all along in the uninterrupted possession of the plaintiffs and the defendants had never been in possession of the said shares by virtue of the Farzi entries in the Government records or on the strength of the auction purchase. In respect of the properties comprised in Suit No. 303 corresponding to Appeal No. 155, the Assistant Settlement Officer found that Mohan Lal was in possession of the lands but Harbans Jha son of Babunandan was collecting rents in respect of the lands held by the defendants. The survey authorities, however, did not actually cause mutation of names, inasmuch as the names of the defendants were recorded in Register "D" of the Collector, but made a note of the aforesaid findings in the Khewat prepared by them. Thereafter the plaintiffs applied in the Collectorate for mutation of their names in place of the names of the defendants, but their application was rejected on the 5th of May 1913 in respect of the villages in Suit No. 311 and on the 21st of May in respect of the villages in Suit No. 303. On the strength of the orders of the Land Registration Deputy Collector the defendants caused some interference in the possession of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs accordingly brought the present suits for declaration of their title and for a further declaration that the defendants were mere Farzidars, and for confirmation of their possession.

The defendants are the descendants of Babunandan Jha. They resisted the plaintiffs' claim. The name of Babunandan Jha in whose name the mortgage-bond was executed and the property was purchased at the auction-sale was originally recorded in the Collectorate in respect of the properties in suit. After his death his two sons by different wives Harbans Jha and Chatur Jha were recorded in the Collectorate in place of Babunandan Jha. The suits have been brought against Harbans Jha and Makund Jha son of Chatur Jha and their respective descendants. Two written statements were filed in the suits, one on behalf of the defendants Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 and the other on behalf of Makund Jha, defendant No. 2. But the pleas taken in the written statements are practically the same in both. The defendants denied that Babunandan Jha was the Farzidar of the plaintiffs' ancestor Mohan Lal and asserted that the mortgage-bond, the decree and the auction purchase in execution of that decree were all bona fide and that Babunandan Jha purchased the properties for himself and that he was in possession of them in his own right and after his death the defendants have been in possession of the properties in suit. The pleas taken by the defendants were that the suits were barred by sections 66 and 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and by limitation. Upon the pleas of the defendants among others the following issues were framed by the learned Munsif:—

(1) Are these suits barred by sections 66 and 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

(2) Are the defendants of these suits Benamidars of the plaintiffs?

(3) Can these suits for confirmation of possession lie?

(4) Have the defendants acquired any right to the disputed properties by adverse possession for over 12 years?

The Munsif decided the aforesaid issues in favour of the plaintiffs and against the defendants. The Munsif found that the mortgage-bond of 1869 was merely a "paper transaction" and that the decree obtained on the basis of the mortgage was only a collusive one and that it created no right in favour of the defendants. He also held that Mohan Lal and thereafter the plaintiffs have been in possession of the disputed properties all along and that the said transactions in the name of Babunandan Jha, the ancestor of the defendants, did not in fact cause any change in the title or possession of the properties, which the plaintiffs had prior to and at the time of the said transactions. He overruled the defendants' pleas in bar and held that the suit was not barred by limitation, nor was the suit affected by sections 66 or 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He accordingly decreed the suit of the plaintiffs, declaring their title to the lands in suit and confirming their possession.

On appeal by the defendants the learned Judge agreed with the Munsif so far as the findings regarding the pleas in bar were concerned. The only point that was pressed before the learned Judge on behalf of the appellants was that the suits did not lie. The learned Judge upheld this contention on the ground that the plaintiffs' ancestor executed the mortgage-bond and caused the property to be sold and purchased in the name of Babunandan Jha, the defendants' ancestor with the view of defrauding the creditor, the Maharaja of Darbhanga, in respect of the decree of rent already obtained and that the intended fraud was carried into effect inasmuch as the decree of the Maharaja of Darbhanga was only partially realised and the rest was time-barred. The learned Judge, therefore, held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a declaration that the said transactions were Benami and he accordingly upset the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs.

Against that decision the plaintiffs came in second appeal to this Court. In order to dispose of the appeal this Court thought it necessary to have the decision of the Court below on two issues of facts, and accordingly by its order of the 14th March 1919 the case was remanded to the Court below for a determination of the issue framed by this Court. The issue was:—

"The plaintiffs' cause of action being dated the 5th May 1913 with regard to a declaration which they desire and the 15th Chait 1321 with regard to the actual dispossession against which they seek relief, were the plaintiffs in possession of the land adversely to the defendants for 12 years prior to the 5th May 1913, or for 12 years prior to the 15th Chait 1321?"

The learned Judge has now remitted his decision upon the said issue in a very careful and detailed judgment. He has come to a clear and definite finding of fact which may be quoted as follows:—

"The respondents never had a good title and were never in possession of the disputed properties. There can be no reasonable doubt that the whole series of transactions was Farzi, and I accordingly find that the appellants have been throughout in possession of the properties in suit adversely to the defendants-respondents down to the date of their dispossession on or about the 15th Chait 1321."

The learned Counsel on behalf of the respondents contends that this finding of fact though against the respondents, does not entitle the plaintiffs to a decree in the suits and that in spite of the aforesaid findings the judgment of the District Judge before remand should be upheld. Reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel upon the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1). The actual decision in that case was that where the purpose of the fraud is not effected, there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff from repudiating the transaction as Benami and recovering possession of the property. Lord Atkinson in delivering the judgment observed as follows:—"to enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must, according to the authorities, be effected. Then and then alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with." Applying this Mr. Dutt on behalf of the respondents says that according to the findings of the District Judge in this case, the intended fraud to defeat the creditor was carried into action and hence the plaintiffs cannot seek the assistance of the Court to give a decree to them in respect of the property in suit. The principle will apply only when the plaintiff seeks to receive possession of properties lost by him on account of his fraudulent and Benami transaction. In the present case the plaintiffs do not invoke the aid of the Court to restore them to possession of the property which they lost by virtue of the Farzi transactions. The plaintiffs' case is that no change in the status quo of the properties in any way occurred on account of the said transactions and that as a matter of fact there was no transfer of the properties in question to the defendants but that there was only a paper transaction and as that paper transaction was threatened to be used by the defendants against their undisputed title and the possession which have been found concurrently by the Courts below in their favour, the plaintiffs simply want a declaration of the true existing state of affairs, namely, that they are the real beneficial owners of the properties and they have been in possession all along of the properties and that the defendants have no concern at all.

The case of Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) no doubt lends some colour to the contention of the learned Counsel. But in the case of Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (3), after a detailed review of the authorities on the subject, Mookerjee, J., declined to accept entirely the broad proposition laid down in the case of Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) and at page 983 of the judgment observed: "with all respect I am unable to see how the view taken by this Court in the case of Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) enables a party to a dishonest trick by which his creditors may have been defrauded to get himself reinstated when his purpose has been served. On the other hand, it seems to me that if the Court refuses to aid the plaintiff who has made a fictitious transfer of his property from an improper motive but has not carried into effect his intention, the Court really becomes an instrument to aid the defendant in his fraudulent claim to possession contrary to the real agreement with the plaintiff." Even if the proposition laid down in Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) be accepted, the case is distinguishable from the present one, inasmuch as the defence taken in that case was that after the Farzi conveyance in question two of the creditors of the plaintiffs attached some of the property conveyed to which the defendants preferred a claim and the properties were released from the attachment. In the present case the defendants have not raised any such plea. Their defence throughout has been that there was no decree of the Maharaja of Darbhanga and that there was no intention to defraud any creditor by means of the mortgage and the decree in question. The plaintiffs also did not make any such allegation in the plaint that any creditor was as a matter of fact defrauded or that the object of the fictitious transaction was to defraud any creditor of the mortgagor Mohan Lal. All that the plaints averred is that there was at the time the mortgage-bond was executed a decree of the Maharajah of Darbhanga and in order to save the properties from the sale the said mortgage-bond was executed in the Farzi name of the defendants' ancestor Babunandan. There was no issue raised in the trial Court as to whether the fraud was carried into effect and whether the Maharaja of Darbhanga or any other creditor of the plaintiffs' ancestor was as a matter of fact defrauded by means of the said transaction. Upon the pleadings in the present case the decision in Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) is distinguishable and cannot be applied, nor can it be held that the plaintiffs are not entitled to the declaration that they have sought in this case.

I do not think it was open to the District Judge, when it was neither the case of the plaintiffs nor of the defendants, nor was there any issue upon the point, to hold that the fraud was carried into effect and the Maharaja of Darbhanga was defrauded in respect of his decree. We have looked into the sale certificates Exhibits 23, K and 328 and the previous deposition of one of the plaintiffs, but we do not find anything in them to shew that the Farzi transactions were used for the purpose of laying any claim in execution of the Maharaja's decree or that on account of the said transactions the execution of the decree failed. The endorsements simply shew that the sale certificates were filed in some Court, but the nature of the case and the purpose of the filing are not shown. The order sheet in the claim case and the objections, if any, made to the execution of the decree were necessary to be filed to raise the plea. Again the depositions only shew that a part of the decree was satisfied and the rest was time-barred. There is a big gap to shew that the Farzi transactions in question were the cause of this result. There is no evidence thereof to shew that the fraud was carried into effect and the aforesaid evidence relied upon can only be a matter of surmise and supposition. If the lower Appellate Court thought that the point was necessary to be investigated into it ought to have framed an issue to allow the parties to give evidence on the point. If the finding of the Judge is not accepted, then there can be no question that the fraud was not carried into effect and hence upon the aforesaid authority of the Privy Council case of Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (1) the plaintiffs are entitled not only to confirmation of possession but to recover possession if they had lost possession on account of the Farzi transactions. Even if the finding of the learned Judge be accepted as a finding of fact, the plaintiffs, being in possession for over 12 years, have acquired title by adverse possession and are entitled to the declaration sought for.

Again there was no question in the case of Banka Behary Dass v. Raj Kumar Dass (2) as to the effect of the continuous possession of the plaintiff for over 12 years prior to the institution of the suit. The Farzi conveyance in that case was executed in 1859 and the suit was brought in 1893. During a short period of 4 or 5 years no question of acquisition of title by virtue of adverse possession of any of the parties could arise. In the present case plaintiffs have been in possession of the properties from 1859 up to the present moment a period of 60 years not to speak of 12 years which under section 28 of the Limitation Act is sufficient not only to extinguish the right and title of a person to a property but to create a complete title in favour of the person who has been in possession for over 12 years. The point appears to me to have been settled, and it is, therefore, needless to quote any authority in support of it. It is sufficient to quote the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Gopinath Mandal (4), where it was laid down that the effect of section 28 of the Limitation Act is not merely to extinguish the title of the rightful owner of the land but also to create a title by negation in the occupant, in which he can actively assert if he loses possession even as against the true owner. That principle will apply with greater force in the case of a rightful owner being in possession of the property for over 12 years in spite of his having executed a Farzi transaction for some ulterior motive. The case of Govinda Kuar v. Lala Kishun Prosad (5) would seem to appear to be on all fours with the present case. In that case it was held that where the ostensible transferee never had any exclusive possession of the property in question, which was for a great many years treated as a part of the joint family property, and which was enjoyed by the joint family (of which the plaintiff was now the sole surviving member) for more than 12 years before suit, the plaintiff was entitled to have a declaration of his right to the property and to confirmation of his possession thereof in spite of the fact that he had executed a colourable transfer for the purpose of defrauding his creditors and where his intention was wholly or partially carried into effect. Mr. Dutt, however, seeks to distinguish this case by contending that in that case the property was joint family property and the fraudulent conveyance was by a member of the family. I fail to appreciate the distinction in principle. In the present case the plaintiffs' case is that their father was in possession of the property in suit and thereafter they have been in possession all along. This Court, while remanding the case for a finding upon the said issue, had clearly in view the principles enunciated in the case of Govinda Kuar v. Lala Kishun Prosad (5). It was then understood clearly by this Court and at the Bar that the finding of fact upon the issue remitted would dispose of the case and that if it was found by the Court below that the plaintiffs were in continuous possession for over 12 years before their possession was interfered with, they would be entitled to a decree in the suit. On fuller construction of the law on the subject and upon a true construction of the pleadings in the case the view taken by this Court before remand appears to have been confirmed.

The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the reliefs granted to them by the learned Munsif. The result is that the decision of the District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif is restored. The appeal is allowed with costs of the remand and also those assessed in the decree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Restitution—Mesne profits—Decree reversed on appeal—Successful party, right of, to restitution.

If a decree is reversed in appeal, the party against whom the decree had been given is entitled to have restitution of all that he has been deprived of under it, including the profits accruing from property of the possession of which he had been deprived by the other party. [p. 121, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 19th August 1915, directing the decree-holder respondent to be put in possession of certain land.

Messrs. Morton and Anant Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This miscellaneous appeal has arisen out of the following facts:—Muhammad Din and others, plaintiffs, brought a suit for dissolution of partnership against Nur Din, defendant, the ancestor of the present respondents to this appeal. In paragraph 1 of the plaint the plaintiffs stated that they (the parties) contributed funds in equal shares for the purchase of land in Manzas Mehdpore and Pathanwali. The suit was hotly contested between the parties. Eventually Mr. Makhan Lal, Subordinate Judge, passed a decree on the 31st of May 1901 in the following terms:—

"It is ordered that the defendant do pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 1,015-15-2, that the plaintiffs should also retain the immoveable property unless the defendant chooses to have it partitioned and take his share, in which case he must pay them Rs. 5,368-2 3."

It is admitted that in consequence of this decree the plaintiffs took exclusive possession of the share of the defendant in Manzas Mehdpore and Pathanwali mentioned above. From this decree Nur Din, defendant, appealed to the Chief Court, which set aside the judgment and the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and remanded the case to be tried de novo. The order was made on the 31st of May 1906. On the 20th of October 1906 the defendant made an application under section 583, Civil Procedure Code, for restitution praying that the possession over his half share in the properties in Mehdpore and Pathanwali should be restored to him and that the plaintiffs should be ordered to pay mesne profits. This application was disallowed by Mr. Malan, District Judge, on the 15th January 1907, on the ground that it was premature inasmuch as an order under section 552, Civil Procedure Code, not being a decree, did not entitle the defendant to the benefit of section 583 of the Code. This order was upheld in appeal by Mr. Justice Rattigan on the 31st of June 1907.

On the case coming back to the original Court on remand parties agreed to refer their dispute to arbitration. The arbitrator gave his award under which a large sum was found due to the defendant from the plaintiffs. Objections were raised by the plaintiffs to the legality of the award on various grounds. Sardar Gulab Singh set aside the award, decided the case on the merits and passed a decree on the 10th of July 1919. Both the parties appealed from the decree to the Chief Court. The defendant's appeal raised the question whether Sardar Gulab Singh was justified in refusing to pass a decree in accordance with the award, while the plaintiffs attacked the decree on the ground that an inadequate amount had been decreed to them. The appeal of the defendant was first taken up, as it went to the root of the case and raised a question of principle. It was heard and decided by a Division Bench of the Chief Court, which allowed the defendant's appeal, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 10th of July 1909, and ordered a decree to be drawn up in accordance with the terms of the award made by the arbitrator on the 22nd of October 1908. The appeal of the plaintiffs was dismissed. The decree of the Chief Court was passed on the 14th of May 1914. In the meantime the defendant had again applied for restitution. The application was transferred by the District Judge of Rawalpindi to that of Gujranwala within whose jurisdiction the property claimed was situated. Mr. Harris, the District Judge of Gujranwala, made an order on the 1st of July 1911 staying further proceedings under the application to the 15th of July 1911 at the request of the plaintiffs-judgment-debtors, who had made an application to the Chief Court for stay of execution on the 19th of June 1911. An order was made on the 27th of July 1911 staying the proceedings on condition of the plaintiffs giving security for the mesne profits to which the defendant may be entitled.

After the decision of the appeal by the Chief Court passing a decree according to the terms of the award, Allah Bakhsh and Khuda Bakhsh, the heirs and legal representatives of Nur Din, defendant, on the 24th of March 1915 renewed the application for restitution and mesne profits. Paragraph 5 of the application ran in these words:—

"That the applicants have ultimately been declared entitled to recover Rs. 11,571-14 0 besides the other house property as detailed in the decree of the Chief Court, dated 14th May 1914, and the plaintiffs' claim against the applicants has been dismissed on the dissolution of partnership and rendition of account in accordance with the award of the arbitrator."

This application was opposed by the plaintiffs-judgment debtors mainly upon two grounds, namely, (1) that the application purported to be an application for the execution of the decree of the Chief Court and that unless it was shown that the property claimed was given to the decree holders under the decree, they were not entitled to claim it in execution of the decree; and (2) that as no mesne profits had been ordered and decreed under the above decree, the decree-holders were not entitled to claim mesne profits. Both these pleas were repelled by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Gujranwala who, by his order dated the 19th of August 1915, held that the decree-holders were entitled to recover by way of restitution the two properties Mehdpur and Pathanwali. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge further held on the question of mesne profits that the decree-holders were entitled to claim them from the date of the mutation entry of 1904. The judgment-debtors have filed this appeal, in which they reiterate their objections taken in the Court below and challenge the right of the decree-holders to get back the possession of the above-mentioned property in the execution proceedings and also their right to claim mesne profits. The decree-holders on the other hand have filed a revision No. 848 of 1915, in which they claim mesne profits for a longer period commencing from the year 1901, when the suit was first decreed in favour of the plaintiffs authorising them to retain possession of the properties in dispute until payment of Rs. 5,368-2-3.

In our opinion the appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs has no force. They have misunderstood the nature of the application by which the restitution of the land in suit is claimed. This is not an application for the execution of the decree of the Chief Court, dated 14th May 1914. It is substantially an application made under section 144, Civil Procedure Code, or it may be treated as an application asking for the revival of the previous applications made under section 583, Civil Procedure Code, the trial and disposal of which had been postponed on account of the pendency of the proceedings in the regular suit. Now when the suit has been finally disposed of by the judgment of the Chief Court dated the 14th May 1914, all obstacles have been removed and the decree-holders are entitled to claim the restitution of their property. As regards the rights of the decree-holders to claim mesne profits, it has been held in several cases that if a decree is reversed in appeal, the party against whom the decree had been given is entitled to have restitution of all that he has been deprived of under it. The Courts have always tried to put the successful party into the position in which he ought to have been. In this case there is no doubt that the decree-holders were deprived of their half share of the profits owing to the exclusive possession of the successful plaintiffs under the decree of the 31st May 1901. The decree-holders are, therefore, entitled to all the profits of which they have been deprived by the plaintiffs-judgment-debtors. The appeal of the judgment-debtors in this view fails and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), ss. 34, 35—Surety-bond—Assignment—Breach of bond, what is—Suit on bond, when maintainable.

In the case of a surety-bond for the due discharge of his obligations under a bond given to the Court under section 34 (a) of the Guardians and Wards Act by the guardian of a minor, the Court is the obligee under the bond and is alone entitled to sue on it in the absence of an assignment in due form of law. An order by the Court that the bond be assigned to a person does not amount to a regular assignment so as to entitle that person to institute a suit to enforce the obligation under the bond. [p. 122, col. 2.]

To constitute a breach of a bond given to the Court under the Guardians and Wards Act there must be a failure either duly to account at a period directed by the Court, or the failure to pay, as ordered by the Court, a balance found due, and in the absence of any evidence that there was such a failure there is no breach of the bond, and a suit on the bond must necessarily fail. [p. 122, col. 2; p. 123, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam Aiyan, in Original Suit No. 53 of 1915.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and G. Gopalakrishna Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam, in so far as it dismissed the suit brought by the plaintiff as assignee of a surety-bond, Exhibit A, dated 21st April 1896, charging the immoveables therein mentioned for the due performance by the 1st defendant of his obligations under the bond given by him to the District Court, under section 34 (a) of the Guardians and Wards Act, as guardian of the plaintiff who was then a minor. The immoveable properties of the other sureties being insufficient, the 1st defendant added certain properties of his own and became a party to the surety-bond, Exhibit A, as well as to the principal bond which is now missing. The Subordinate Judge passed a personal decree against the guardian, the 1st defendant, who did not contest the suit, and otherwise dismissed it on the ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue on the bond Exhibit A at the date of the suit, as the principal bond had not been assigned to him and there had been no regular assignment to him of the surety bond Exhibit A but only an order by the District Court that it should be assigned. He also dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prove what were the terms of the principal bond which was missing, and held that the defendants, who are alienees from the sureties under Exhibit A, took without notice and are exempt from liability.

As regards the first point, I am of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to sue on Exhibit A, without an assignment to him by the Court both of the principal bond and of the surety bond Exhibit A but I do not think the case can be satisfactorily disposed of on this ground. The District Judge has since assigned Exhibit A by a registered instrument and though the principal bond has not yet been assigned, we might, I think, accept the assignment even at this late stage if this was the only difficulty in the plaintiff's way. The fact that the principal bond is lost would not prevent its being duly assigned. The Ecclesiastical Courts were required by a Statute of Henry VIII to take bonds with sureties from persons to whom they granted administration of the estates of deceased persons, and a Statute of Charles II settled the terms of the bond to be so taken. There was a right of action on these bonds in the common law Courts, but the Ecclesiastical Judge to whom the bond had been given did not sue himself, but as stated in Bolton v. Powell (1), the Ecclesiastical Court made an order in favour generally of one of the next-of-kins that the bond be "attended with" and the party in whose favour the order was made was allowed to sue in the name of the Ecclesiastical Judge to whom the bond had been given. Whether under any circumstances the sureties could be proceeded against in equity without such an order of the Ecclesiastical Court was discussed in the case just mentioned. The Probate Act of 1857 first made these bonds assignable, and its provisions in this respect have been reproduced in the Indian Succession Act and the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, and lastly in sections 34 and 35 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. The Court now being the obligee under the bond is alone entitled to sue on it, in the absence of an assignment in due form of law.

In the present case I feel constrained to hold in the present state of the evidence that the suit fails on the broad ground that no breach of the conditions of the bond Exhibit A has been proved. Section 34 (a) of the Guardians and Wards Act obliges the guardian, if so required, to give a bond to the Judge of the Court "engaging duly to account for what he may receive in respect of the property of the ward." By section 34 (b) he is to deliver an inventory within six months, and by section 34 (c) he is to "exhibit his accounts in the Court at such time and in such form as the Court from time to time directs." And by section 34 (d) he is "to pay into the Court the balance due from him on those accounts, or so much thereof as the Court directs." The form of bond prescribed in Form 93 of the Civil Rules of Practice, 1902, clearly follows the provisions of section 34 (c) and (d) just set out, the condition of the bond being that the guardian shall duly account at such periods as the Judge shall appoint and shall duly pay or dispose of balances which shall from time to time be found to be due from him as the said Court or Judge has directed, or shall hereafter direct. No doubt this form was not in force in 1896 when the 1st defendant, as guardian, executed the principal bond which is now missing, but there is no reason to assume that the bond then executed by the 1st defendant was of a more onerous character than the form now prescribed. Now to constitute a breach of this bond there must be a failure either duly to account at a period directed by the Court, or a failure to pay as ordered by Court a balance found due from him, and where there is no evidence of any order to account within a fixed time, or to pay any balance within a fixed period, there is no breach of the obligations of the bond. This follows from the language of the bond, and has been expressly ruled in the case of a similar provision in the old statutory form of administration bond. Archbishop of Canterbury v. Tappen (2) and Archbishop of Canterbury v. Robertson (3). The latter case also deals with the question of what amounts to a breach of the condition well and truly to administer the estate in the old form of administration bond. To establish a breach of that condition it was not necessary to show a failure to obey a specific order of the Court. Similarly under section 81 of the Probate Act, 1857, the bond is to be conditioned for duly collecting, getting in and administering the estate of the deceased, language followed in section 256 of the Indian Succession Act and section 78 of the Probate and Administration Act, and, therefore, in the case of these bonds it is enough to show a failure to administer or collect and it is not necessary to show a failure to obey a specific order of the Court. Where, however, as we must assume in the present case, the only conditions in the bond were to exhibit accounts when ordered by the Court and to pay or apply the balance found due as directed by the Court, if there is no order, there is no breach and the suit on the bond necessarily fails. There is no evidence of any order to account or of any order to pay in the present case. All the District Judge did was to direct the assignment of the bond on the ground that there was a prima facie case of maladministration against 1st defendant. In the case of bonds under the Guardians and Wards Act the proper course appears to be to get an order to pay against the guardian under section 34 (d) or a decree against him, and if he fails to satisfy the order or decree, then to sue the sureties in respect of this breach, as to which there will be no defence and the Article of limitation will be Article 68 unless, as in the present case, the bond charges immoveable property, when that Article may be inapplicable. It is unnecessary to consider this point or the other question raised in argument before us as to when time begins to run when the condition in the bond is duly to administer. In my opinion the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs against defendants Nos. 3 to 9, the alienees. As those grounds apply also to the decree against the 1st defendant, we set aside that decree also but without costs in the exercise of our powers under Order XLI, rule 33.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (b)—Partition—Document reciting fact of partition, whether compulsorily registrable—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11—Contract by minor, validity of—Ratification by minor, effect of.

A document reciting the fact that certain immoveable property has already been partitioned and that each party has since been in possession of the share allotted to him at partition, does not come within the purview of section 17 (b) of the Registration Act and need not be registered [p. 124, col. 1.]

A contract by a minor is void and not voidable and cannot, therefore, be ratified by any subsequent act of the minor. [p. 124, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 4th August 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 4th May 1914, dismissing the claim with costs.

Lala Hargopal, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was an action by one Amar Nath, a Khatri of the Jullundur District, against his brother and cousins, for the partition of certain property which he described as the property of a Hindu co-parcenary consisting of himself and the defendants. The District Judge, concurring with the Subordinate Judge, holds that at the time of the suit there was neither a joint Hindu family as alleged by the plaintiff nor any joint property in which the plaintiff was a co sharer with his relatives.

The second appeal preferred by the plaintiff was admitted on the question whether a document, dated the 26th August 1909, was a partition deed relating to immoveable property, and consequently required compulsory registration. Now, we have carefully perused the terms of the deed; and we find that the instrument deals mainly with the moveable property belonging to the joint business, and effects a partition thereof; and that so far as the immoveable property is concerned, it merely recites the fact that property had already been partitioned, and that each party had since been in possession of the property allotted to him on partition. There can, therefore, be little doubt that at the time of the execution of the instrument the partition of the immoveable property was a fait accompli, and a document containing the recital of such a fact does not come within the purview of section 17 (b) of the Registration Act, and need not be registered.

Mr. Hargopal for the appellant does not seriously contend that the deed was compulsorily registrable, and could not, therefore, be admitted in evidence. The learned Vakil, however, urges that his client is entitled to recover $\frac{1}{4}$th share in a house (vide plan A), which was originally purchased by the parties' ancestors Thandu Mal and Budha Mal. Now, it appears that the plaintiff and his brother Bhana Mal sold their $\frac{1}{2}$ share in the house to the defendants by a registered deed, dated the 9th November 1938, but the plaintiff contends that he was a minor at that time and is consequently not bound by the deed which was executed by him wrongly representing himself to be sui juris.

The learned District Judge, while holding that the plaintiff was a major on the 26th August 1909, has not determined the question whether he was a minor at the time of the sale-deed; and the Court of first instance, though making some observations against the plaintiff's contention as to his age, has disposed of it by holding that he ratified the sale subsequently. Now, it is perfectly clear that a contract by a minor is void and not voidable, and that there cannot be a ratification of a void contract.

In view of the unsatisfactory judgments of the lower Courts on the question, we have examined the evidence on the subject of the alleged minority and reached the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to discharge the onus which undoubtedly rested upon him. The horoscope produced by him cannot be regarded as a reliable document, and the entry from the Birth Register may or may not refer to him. But there is one fact which, in our opinion, goes to show that the plaintiff was not a minor in November 1908. It appears that one Mukand Lal instituted a suit against the plaintiff and his brother Bhana Mal in that year, and that the present plaintiff was not only described as a major in that litigation, but appeared in October before the Court, filed a written statement and never asserted that he was a minor and should consequently be represented by a guardian ad litem. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff rightly described himself as a major in the sale-deed; and that he cannot now back out of it.

For the aforesaid reasons we confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismisesd.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Mesne profits—Dispossession—Plaintiff wrongfully kept out of possession of land, whether entitled to mesne profits—Limitation.

Where a plaintiff succeeds in establishing that he has been kept out of possession of land to which he was entitled, he should be allowed reasonable mesne profits for the period during which he has been kept out of possession, subject to any law of limitation. [p. 125, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 7th of September 1917, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Patuya, dated the 26th of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastgir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitra), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession after declaration of title thereto. The plaintiff's case is that the land belonged to his permanently settled estate. In his absence it was recorded as belonging to the Government. The defendant on the basis of a lease from defendant No. 1 dispossessed him in 1912. Hence the suit. Plaintiff served a notice on the defendant No. 1, the Secretary of State for India, who has denied plaintiff's title and possession. The Amin found that it was part of the plaintiff's estate, which has never been challenged. The first Court decreed the suit but did not award mesne profits. On appeal the District Judge dismissed my claim for mesne profits. My submission is that where it has been found that the plaintiff has been dispossessed by the defendant from a property belonging to the plaintiff, he is entitled to mesne profits for the period of dispossession. The learned District Judge has erred in law in dismissing my claim for mesne profits.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, Senior Government Pleader, for the Respondents.—I do not think I can resist the argument of the plaintiff. But as to the amount payable by the Government, the plaintiff should accept your Lordships' suggestion that the parties must abide by the settlement as to the amount made by the District Collector.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of a piece of land on declaration of the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff succeeded in the suit, but in granting the decree the Munsif overlooked the fact that he claimed mesne profits for the period of dispossession. The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge of Chittagong claiming mesne profits, but that appeal was dismissed and the plaintiff has now appealed to this Court. As the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing that he had been kept out of possession of the land to which he was entitled, he should be allowed reasonable mesne profits for the period during which he was dispossessed, subject, of course, to any law of limitation.

On my suggesting that it would be to the interest of the parties to come to an agreement as to the sum payable for mesne profits, the learned Pleader for the appellant conceded that his client who is a wealthy Zemindar would be well content to accept any sum which may be awarded by the Collector. The learned Senior Government Pleader who appealed for the respondents agreed that on that undertaking he would not contest this appeal. The appeal is accordingly decreed. The appellant, the plaintiff, is declared to be entitled to such mesne profits as the Collector may consider fit and proper.

I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal allowed.

NALAM LAKSHMIKANTAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Sale of goods—Transit by canal in boats—Shortage of water—Delay in delivery—Rescission of contract, right of vendee to—Impossibility of performance, doctrine of, limits of—Reasonable time, performance in—Shipment, whether amounts to delivery—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 50, 55, 56, 64, 73.

Plaintiffs agreed to purchase from 1st defendant 5,000 bags of Covelong salt at a fixed price and paid to 1st defendant as advance therefor Rs. 1,000 on 30th November 1916. The conditions of the contract were inter alia that the 1st defendant was to despatch the salt by boats from Covelong to Elephant Gate Basin, Madras, through the Buckingham canal, and the amount due for each consignment was to be paid by the plaintiff before taking delivery at the Elephant Gate Basin. No time was fixed, however, for the delivery of the entire quantity of salt. The course of business adopted was that along with each consignment a watchman was sent by the vendor who was responsible for its custody. The despatch of the salt and its expected arrival in Madras were notified by the vendor, not to the purchasers, but to his own agents in Madras and, when it did arrive, the latter either sent a delivery order to the purchasers or sent one of their own men to meet the boats with the purchasers' represen tative and indicate that delivery was to be made to the purchasers. The 1st defendant sent two consignments on 8th and 17th January 1917, totalling 740 bags, which were shipped on twelve canal boats. The remaining quantity was detained at Pappanchavidi, 13 miles from Covelong, as water in the canal was very low and the boats could proceed no further. The plaintiffs, after complaining of the delay in delivery of the balance of the stipulated salt, formally rescinded the contract on 20th February 1917, and brought the present action for damages. The defendants pleaded: (1) that shipment of the salt amounted to delivery, (2) that they could not be held liable for the contract becoming impossible of performance owing to the state of the canal, and (3) that they had substantially performed the contract and that the plaintiffs' action in rescinding it was premature:

Held, (1) that the property in the goods did not pass on shipment but that the vendor kept them as his property until they were paid for and delivered and that the appropriation at Covelong was conditional only; [p. 130, col. 1.]

(2) that the absence of facilities in transit could not excuse defendant on the ground of impossibility of performance; [p. 130, col. 1]

The principle of the Coronation cases, Krell v. Henry, (1903) 2 K. B. 740; 72 L. J. K. B. 794; 89 L. T. 328; 19 T. L. R. 711; 52 W. R. 246, explained;

(3) that the defendant having substantially performed the contract and discharged his obligation and the delay being attributable to causes beyond his control, plaintiffs' repudiation was unjustifiable. [p. 131, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. P. Ramaswami Aiyar, for the Plaintiffs.—Though no time was specified in the contract, the 1st defendant was bound to discharge his obligation within a reasonable time. The absence of facilities for transmitting the salt is no excuse. If transport through the canal became difficult, the vendor should have devised or adopted other means for effecting the delivery. It was open to him to use portage over the shallow places and re-load the cargo where water was deep enough. Or he could relieve the boats of their weight and distribute the cargo of the fully laden boats among other boats, so that they could be pulled through the shallowest part of the canal. The plaintiffs are not bound to wait indefinitely and till the defendant secures facilities for transport. The defendant should have foreseen these contingencies at date of contract. The rescission by plaintiffs was quite justifiable.

The property in the goods passed only on delivery at Elephant Gate Basin.

Messrs. Venkatasubba Rao and Radhakrishnaya, for the Defendants.—The rescission was not warranted and was premature. Defendants' obligation was discharged when they shipped the goods at Covelong under the terms of the contract, which laid down that the salt was to be put on boats. Fragano v. Long (1), Tregelles v. Sewell (2), Wiltshire Iron Company, In re, Pearson, Ex parte (3). The defendants are not liable for what happened afterwards and for delay in transit.

Secondly, as the contract became impossible of performance by water being low in the canal, performance is excused.

Lastly, the defendants have substantially performed the contract. The mode of transit contemplated by the parties was that the salt should be shipped at Covelong. The entire quantity stipulated to be supplied was shipped and if plaintiffs had only waited awhile, they would all have been delivered. The defendants are not bound by any limitations of time according to the contract. In any event they are entitled to reasonable time for performance.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for damages for non-delivery of certain salt contracted to be delivered by the defendants to the plaintiffs. The facts of the case have taken some trouble to elucidate, but at the end of the case they were practically not in dispute. The 2nd defendant, Messrs. Holst and Nathan, were added as parties to the suit on the motion of the 1st defendant, but a perusal of the agreement of the 11th of December 1915 between the 1st and 2nd defendants makes it clear that the 1st defendant was to sell the salt covered by the agreement and that no privity of contract could possibly exist between Messrs. Holst and Nathan and third parties with whom the 1st defendant entered into contracts.

The contract sued upon is dated the 30th of November 1916. It recites an advance of Rs. 1,000 by the plaintiffs to the 1st defendant for the supply of 5,000 bags of Covelong salt and is in the following terms: "Received from Messrs. Mahomed

(1) (1825) 4 B. & C. 219; 3 L. J. (o. s.) K. B. 177; 107 E. R. 1040; 28 R. R. 226; 6 Dowl. & Ry. 283.
(2) (1862) 7 H. & N. 574; 126 R. R. 558; 158 E. R. 600.
(3) (1868) 3 Ch. 443; 37 L. J. Ch. 554; 18 L. T. 38; 16 W. R. 682.

Ibrahim Mahomed Jaffir and Co., Madras, the sum of Rs. 1,000 being the advance for the supply of 5,000 bags of Covelong salt for export from Madras to Calcutta under the following terms:

1. That the abovesaid Company shall supply gunnies and twine at the Covelong Salt Factory.

2. That on receipt of gunnies, necessary application will be made for removal of salt.

3. That on obtaining permission from Inspector for removal, the gunnies will be filled in as per rules of the department and the bags will be despatched by boats from Covelong to Elephant Gate Basin, Madras.

4. That the said Company will take delivery of the salt bags from boats immediately on arrival at the Basin.

5. That the rate fixed and approved for each bag of salt so delivered at Elephant Gate Basin is Rs 3 4 6 per bag.

6. That the amount due for each consignment of salt at the above mentioned rate will be paid before taking delivery of the bags at the Elephant Gate Basin.

7. That the advance amount of Rs. 1,000 lodged with us will be adjusted at the last consignment while settling the whole account."

The course of business is this: the salt is collected from lands over which the sea flows in the neighbourhood of Covelong and put into the Government Salt Factory at that place for cleansing and refinement. It is taken out of the factory by the contractors in the position of the defendants, who have to provide gunny bags to pack it with and to pay the price and the tax. The Buckingham canal goes past Covelong and there is a wharf within the boundaries of the factory, from which the bags of salt can be loaded into boats for conveyance by the canal to Madras. By the terms of the contract the plaintiffs were to supply the gunny bags and twine for receiving the salt. In practice, the defendants take a lump sum from the plaintiffs to cover the cost of the bags and provide them themselves. It is now beyond dispute that there was ample salt at Covelong at the disposal of defendants for them to fulfil their contract and they could not and do not attempt to show that there were not enough bags into which to pack the salt. The trouble arose over the conditions of the waterway and the facilities of despatch. The first two consignments were sent off on the 8th and the 17th of January and totalled 740 bags shipped on twelve canal boats. The subsequent despatches were as follows:—

Date of Despatch.	No. of boats.	No. of bags.
25th January	4	300
1st February	6	507
2nd ,,	6	400
9th ,,	10	600
10th ,,	12	745
16th ,,	17	1000
5th March	7	500

Under normal conditions the transit from Covelong to Madras takes three or four days, and I think I may assume that, if the boats had arrived in Madras after the normal interval from their despatch from Covelong, there would have been a substantial compliance with the terms of the contract. In fact, during the latter part of January and whole of February the water in the Buckingham canal was very low and the boats arrived as far as Papanchavadi, which is some thirteen miles from Covelong and nine to the Elephant Gate Basin, and proceeded no further.

It is suggested that the boats might have been got to Madras by one or two methods, either by using portage over the shallow places and re-loading the cargo where the water was deep enough again or by distributing the cargo of the fully laden boats among other boats and so ensuring that no boat had so heavy a load that she could not be pulled through the shallowest part. I do not doubt that both of the suggested courses were physically possible. I am convinced that as a matter of business both were commercially impracticable. It is reasonably clear from the evidence that there were not enough boats available for all the cargo to be carried through in half-laden boats, and with regard to the portage scheme, though it may be theoretically possible, the evidence is conclusive that no one has ever attempted to do it with a cargo of salt. The figures given by the look-keeper at Adayar South Lock appear to me to be conclusive on this point. He has produced the record of the boats carrying salt cargoes for the months of January, February and March, and it speaks for itself. In the month of January 80 boats went through the lock with salt cargoes, 29 from the 1st to the 10th, 21 from the 11th to the 20th and 30 from the 21st to 31st. In the month of February not one single boat went through with a salt cargo, though 264 boats went through loaded with cargoes of different descriptions. In the month of March no salt boat went through from the 1st to the 20th and one only from the 21st to the 31st. During that month 346 boats went through carrying other cargoes. The result was that the boats laden with salt destined to fulfil this contract stopped at Pappanchavidi, nine miles from their destination, and the evidence has satisfied me that it was commercially impracticable that they should do otherwise.

The effect of this state of things on the contracting parties and how they dealt with it can be seen from the correspondence to which I now turn. The shortage was beginning to be felt towards the end of January and the plaintiffs' Vakil, Mr. Narayanasawmi Aiyar, addressed a letter on the 22nd of January to the 1st defendant in the following terms:

"With reference to the letter dated 18th January 1917 addressed by Messrs. Holst and Nathan to my clients Messrs. Mahomed Ibrahim and Mahomed Jaffir & Co., carrying on business at No. 55 Kandappa Chetty Street, Georgetown, Madras, I have been instructed to state that though my clients have been going to Elephant Gate and making enquiries there and also of you for the last three days, they are informed that no boats containing the consignment referred to in the said letter have yet arrived at Elephant Gate Basin.

"My clients further instruct me to state that by agreement dated 30th November 1916 you have agreed that on obtaining permission from Inspector for removal of salt and for exporting the same to Calcutta you would despatch the salt to my clients, that you on or about 20th December 1916 obtained permission from Inspector for such removal and export and that you have not yet sent the salt stipulated for in the said agreement to my clients.

"My clients further state with each consignment of goods stipulated for you must send a certificate that it contains Covelong salt.

"My clients again instruct me to call upon you to deliver to them the balance of 4,660 bags of Covelong salt with the certificate referred to above and also send them the permission from Inspector mentioned above, and to give you notice that if you fail to comply with the said request on or before the 31st of this month, they will cancel the agreement entered into by them with you on 30th November 1916 and sue you for the damages incurred by them for breach of the said agreement."

That was answered by a letter from the 1st defendant on the 24th of January, of which the material passage is as follows: "We have come to understand that owing to there being no water in the Buckingham canal the passage of boats has become very difficult and we are not in the least responsible for the delay in transport of these bags, as we have no control over this contingency. We have to make you distinctly understand that we have not made any contract to supply the goods within any stipulated time."

It is quite true that there was no stipulated time for the performance of the contract, but it is not disputed that whatever the defendant was under an obligation to do under the terms of his contract, and that is a matter which I will discuss hereafter, he had to do it within a reasonable time. On the 30th of January another letter was sent by the plaintiffs' Vakil, which complained of the shortage of the supply of salt and threatened to cancel the contract if delivery of the outstanding balance of over 4,000 bags was not made within five days. That was answered by a letter from the defendant, which bears no date but was obviously written at the beginning of February, explaining that the failure of water in the canal was the cause of the shortage of supply and offering to give delivery at Papanchavidi and to make concession in the question of the cost of conveyance by land from Papanchavidi to Elephant Gate. On the 20th of February a letter was written on behalf of the plaintiffs, which in effect was a repudiation of the contract. It is not disputed that at that time no more than the first consignment of 740 bags despatched early in January had reached the plaintiffs and it is equally clear that upwards of 4,000 bags had been loaded by the defendant at Covelong. The question I have to decide is whether that repudiation was justified or not. That again turns upon the question, whether the delay in transit under the terms of the contract and the course of dealing between the parties falls upon the plaintiffs or the defendant.

A point was taken for the defendant, which I suggested myself in the course of the argument and which I think being entirely a point of law on the construction of the contract was open to the defendant, viz, that he discharged his obligation when he shipped the goods on board the boats at Covelong. Clause 3 of the contract provides that the bags are to be despatched by boats from Covelong to Elephant Gate Basin, and it is urged that, when they were put on boats at Covelong, the obligation of the defendant in that respect was discharged, in other words, that this was in effect an f. o. b. contract. Fragano v. Long (1), Tregelles v. Sewell (2) and Wiltshire Iron Company, In re, Pearson, Ex parte (3) were cited as illustrating this position. But in the English shipping cases one usually has a bill of lading or a policy of insurance or both, the custody of which at any given moment of the transaction is a guide to help one in determining at what point of time the property passed, and in this case, of course, there is nothing of the sort. The plaintiffs relied upon the latter clauses of the contract, Nos. 7, 5 and 6, as showing that the property in the goods was not intended to pass until they were delivered on payment at Elephant Gate Basin. The defendant contends that these terms relate merely to payment and while conceding that the effect of the contract may be to disentitle him from suing for the price of the goods until they arrived at Elephant Gate Basin, argues that he is nevertheless not liable for damages for delay during transit. If that were the position in law, it would approximate to that in the well-known case of Calcutta and Burmah Steam Navigation Company Limited v. De Mattos (4). In that case De Mattos agreed to ship coal from London to Rangoon there to be delivered to the buyers. Half the price was to be paid on shipment against delivery of invoices and bills of lading and a policy for half the invoice amount. Some of the goods were lost during the voyage and it was held that the property passed to the buyers on shipment although, by the special terms of the contract, the vendor was not entitled to recover the price until the goods arrived at Rangoon. That state of things is admirably expressed in a passage of the judgment of Blackburn, J., at page 328, which runs as follows:—"But the parties may intend an intermediate state of things; they may intend that the vendor shall deliver the goods to the carrier, and that, when he has done so, he shall have fulfilled his undertaking, so that he shall not be liable in damages for a breach of contract if the goods do not reach their destination; and yet they may intend that the whole or part of the price shall not be payable unless the goods do arrive. They may bargain that the property shall vest in the purchaser, as owner, as soon as the goods are shipped, that they shall then be both sold and delivered, and yet that the price (in whole or in part) shall be payable only on the contingency of the goods arriving; just as they might, if they pleased, contract, that the price should not be payable unless a particular tree falls; but without any contract on the vendor's part in the one case to procure the goods to arrive, or in the other to cause the tree to fall. Where the contract is of this kind, the position of the vendor and purchaser, in case the goods do not arrive, is analogous to that of freighter and shipowner, in the ordinary contract of carriage on board a ship, in case the goods are prevented from arriving by one of the excepted perils. The shipowner is not bound to carry and deliver at all events; but, though he is excused if prevented by the excepted perils, yet no freight is earned or payable unless the goods are delivered." Certain facts relating to the course of business were proved in this case which, to my mind, preclude me from holding that the property passed to the buyer on shipment. The effect of that evidence is shortly this, when the salt was despatched on its journey, a watchman was sent with it who was responsible for its custody and who was employed and paid by the vendors. The despatch of the salt and its expected arrival at Madras was notified by the vendors from Covelong not to the purchaser but to their own agents in Madras; and when it did arrive, the vendors in Madras either sent a delivery order to the purchaser or sent one of their men to meet the boats with the purchaser's representative and indicate that delivery was to be made to the purchaser. These facts appear to me to establish that the vendors effectually reserved to themselves the jus disponendi and that though the placing of the salt in bags marked with the purchaser's initials at Covelong was undoubtedly an appropriation of the goods, it was a conditional appropriation only. [See Mirabita v. Imperial Ottoman Bank (5), Gabarrow v. Kreeft (6) and Moakes v. Nicolson (7).] I am, therefore, of opinion that by this contract the property in the goods did not pass on shipment, but that the vendor kept them as his property until they should be paid for and delivered and that the appropriation at Covelong was conditional only.

It was next argued for the defendant that this case fell within the principle of what are called the Coronation cases, Krell v. Henry (8) and the rest, and that assuming the vendor to have taken the responsibility of carriage and delivery upon himself, he was excused by the impossibility of performance. I understand the Coronation cases and the older cases which they followed to establish this proposition, that where the contract between the parties is made wholly with reference to a state of things which was supposed to exist and on the supposition that that state of things does exist, the contractual obligation is dissolved if, in fact, the circumstances on which the whole contract is based do not exist. A contract to sing or play in a particular hall is dissolved if, unknown to the parties, the hall has been burned down. A contract with a hirer of seats to view a public ceremony is dissolved if that public ceremony is cancelled and cannot take place. I do not think that the principles enunciated in these cases have any application here. It seems to me impossible to say that these parties based their contract on the supposition that clear facilities of transport existed between Covelong and Madras in such a sense that their contract could be said to be deprived of its fundamental assumption and to become meaningless and insignificant if those facilities did not exist.

The last point taken by the defendant is to my mind conclusive. Accepting the position that he reserved the property in the goods to himself and that it did not pass on shipment, and admitting there was no such impossibility as would excuse him on the principle enunciated in the Coronation cases, he contends that he has substantially complied with the obligations cast upon him by the contract. His obligation on this footing no doubt was to deliver the goods at Madras, but the mode of transit contemplated by the parties was that he should ship the goods at Covelong on the boats ordinarily available for conveying salt from Covelong to Madras by the Buckingham canal. That being the method of transit contemplated by the parties, the defendant contends that he is not in default and that he has shewn his ability to deliver the goods "within reasonable time." The plaintiffs' repudiation was on the 20th of February. Had they not repudiated on that date, it is reasonably clear and I so find as a fact that they would have had delivery of the balance of the contract quantity at the end of March and the beginning of April. The question is whether that is delivery "within a reasonable time." On this point I shall refer to the well-known cases relating to a charter's liability for demurrage or damages for detention when he is under an obligation to discharge the ship according to the custom of the port with due despatch. [See Postlethwaite v. Freeland (9), Hick v. Raymond (10), Carlton Steamship Company v. Castle Mail Packets Company (11) and Hulthen v.

Stewart & Co. (12)]. These cases appear to me to lay down the principle that the question of what is a reasonable time for the performance of the contract is one to be decided not by general abstract considerations but by the particular circumstance of each case. The principle appears to me to be most clearly expressed in the words of Lord Watson in Hick v. Raymond (10), where his Lordship uses these words; "When the language of a contract does not expressly, or by necessary implication, fix any time for the performance of a contractual obligation, the law implies that it shall be performed within a reasonable time. The rule is of general application, and is not confined to contracts for the carriage of goods by sea. In the case of other contracts the condition of reasonable time has been frequently interpreted; and has invariably been held to mean that the party upon whom it is incumbent duly fulfils his obligation, notwithstanding protracted delay, so long as such delay is attributable to causes beyond his control, and he has neither acted negligently nor unreasonably." The unsuccessful contention in each of these cases was that you could ascertain what was a reasonable time in normal circumstances for discharge of the ship and translate the indefinite words of the contract into terms of days and hours. The House of Lords throughout refused to accept this contention and laid it down that in every case you must have regard to the particular circumstances and conditions existing at the moment. Following that principle I think I must hold that I must have regard to the failure of water in the Buckingham canal at the material times, to the number of boats actually available and to the fact that no one attempted to carry salt cargoes beyond Pappanchavidi in February and March as indicating that the delay in transit was attributable to causes beyond the control of the vendors and that they had acted neither negligently nor unreasonably.

I must accordingly find that the defendant has discharged his obligations under the contract and is not liable in damages for delay in delivery to the plaintiffs. On the other hand, he cannot, in my opinion, retain the advance of Rs. 1,000 and the money paid for the gunny bags, except in so far as he can set off against them the price of the 740 gunny bags actually delivered. In the result there will be judgment for the plaintiffs for Rs. 2,491 with Vakil's fee and institution fees on that amount as costs. The whole case was fought on the question of damages, as to which the defendant has succeeded. I decline, therefore, to give plaintiffs the hearing fees. On the other hand the defendant did not bring into Court the money due on the deposit and the bags; and I must, therefore, decline to give him costs, though on the issue really fought he has succeeded. Interest at 6 per cent. on this amount.

The plaintiff must pay the costs of the 2nd defendant: but may add them to the costs he recovers from the 1st defendant. [See Bullock v. London General Omnibus Company (13)].

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEALS FROM THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

May 30, 1919.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Buckmaster and Lord Dunedin.

SUNITABALA DEBI—APPELLANT

DHARA SUNDARI DEBI CHOWDHURANI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage to several tenants-in-common—Mortgagees, rights of—Pardanashin lady, transaction with—Test to be applied in determining validity of transaction.

Where a mortgage is made by one mortgagor to two tenants-in-common, the right of either mortgagee who desires to realise the mortgaged property and obtain payment of his debt failing the consent of the co-mortgagee, is to add the co-mortgagee as defendant, and ask for the proper mortgage decree, which in such case should provide for all necessary accounts and payments, except that there can be no judgment for a sum of money entered as between the mortgagee defendant and the mortgagor. [p. 134, col 2]

To validate transactions with a pardahnashin lady, it is not necessary to prove that she understood every detail of the matter. It is sufficient that she should understand its general effect, and that people disinterested and competent to give advice should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise her to enter upon it. [p. 134, col. 2.]

Appeal and cross-appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court, dated August 26, 1915, modifying a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rangpur.

FACTS.—This was a suit on a mortgage deed, details of which are given in their Lordships' judgment, executed by appellant in favour of respondents. The appellant was the daughter and the respondents the two widows of one Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, and the mortgage was effected in compromise of sundry disputes as to the testamentary dispositions of the latter. By it appellant mortgaged the estate of the deceased in payment of two sums of Rs. 80,000 to the respondents.

The suit was brought by the first respondent only against appellant, the second respondent (Sarojini) and a prior mortgagee. In it the first respondent claimed Rs. 80,000 and interest and asked for sale of half the mortgaged property.

Appellant defended the suit on the grounds (1) that she had not understood the compromise to carry out which the mortgage was effected; (2) that under section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act no decree could be passed for sale of part of the mortgaged property.

The Subordinate Judge of Rangpur overruled these contentions and decreed the suit as framed, but on appeal the Calcutta High Court (Sharfuddin and Newbould, JJ.), while agreeing with the lower Court that the deed was binding on appellant, held that the suit was not properly framed, being barred by section 67 (d) of the Transfer of Property Act unless it were proved (which was not alleged) that Sunitabala, the mortgagor, gave her consent to the mortgagees to sever their interests under the mortgage. They allowed the plaintiff to amend her plaint and plaintiff thereupon applied for leave to amend by adding the following prayer:

"If in the opinion of the Court the plaintiff is held to be not entitled to a decree on the footing of mortgage for the principal sum of Rs. 80,000, then a usual mortgage decree may be passed in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3 for the amount found due up to the period of grace to be fixed by the Court on the basis of the entire mortgage money, that is, Rs. 1,60,000."

On the same date Sarojini Dabi, defendant No. 3, filed a petition in the High Court praying that a decree for sale for the whole amount of Rs. 1,60,000 be made in favour of her assignee and the plaintiff. The said High Court heard the applications together and delivered the following judgment on the 26th August 1915:—

"After hearing both sides we order that the plaint be amended in the lower Court in the following terms:—'If in the opinion of the Court the plaintiff is held to be not entitled to a decree on the footing of a mortgage for the principal sum of Rs. 80,000, then a usual mortgage decree may be passed in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant No. 3 for the amount found due up to the period of grace to be fixed by the Court upon the basis of the entire mortgage money, that is, Rs. 1,60,000.'

"The parties agree and it is directed that no party should be allowed in the lower Court to re open any question that has already been tried by the judgment of this Court, dated the 11th June 1915."

In the result the High Court made a decree remanding the suit to the said Subordinate Judge for trial according to law.

Sunitabala appealed to the Privy Council on the grounds (1) that the deed was not binding on her; (2) that the High Court were wrong in allowing an amendment of the plaint; while first respondent cross-appealed on the grounds (1) that the suit was maintainable as framed; (2) that having regard to Sarojini's application, the High Court should have made the proper decree for sale itself instead of remanding the suit.

Sir W. Garth and Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., for the Defendant Appellant, submitted that the first thing to consider in judging a compromise was the litigants' chance of success. Here respondents had practically no chance whatever, and the transaction amounted to a gift to them by appellant. The legal advisers avoided saying that they advised her to compromise and everything was left to her husband. It should be shown that she understood thoroughly what she was doing: of this there was no proof.

(The Board intimated that they considered appellant's case hopeless.)

Mr. Dunne, K. C., for the Respondents, in support of the cross-appeal submitted that section 67 had nothing to do with the case. The High Court ought to have decided the matter themselves, instead of remanding it.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—That is a matter of discretion.]

The High Court should not have reversed the Subordinate Judge as to the form of judgment. Even if we were entitled to execution against the whole property, it has been held in India that a plaintiff can abandon a portion of his security.

(The Board intimated that they considered the cross-appeal hopeless. Mr. Dunne, thereupon abandoned it.)

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The history of this case is the history of a family dispute between the appellant—a pardanashin lady, the daughter of one Sarut Chandra Roy Chowdhury, and the respondents, who are his two widows. After the death of Sarut Chowdhury, the respondents applied for a grant of Letters of Administration of his estate with a Will annexed, the Will being dated the 22nd November 1903, the date of his death. The appellant, as the daughter of the deceased and devisee under an earlier Will, opposed this application. The District Judge refused the grant, holding that the alleged Will was not genuine, and the respondents appealed to the High Court. While this appeal was pending, the Administrator-General of Bengal as executor applied for Probate of an earlier Will, dated the 21st September 1892. By the terms of this Will the appellant would take the whole property of the testator, subject to certain small provisions for maintenance in favour of the first respondent and of another wife. A caveat was entered by the respondents to this grant, and there was thus opened a prospect of litigation inviting indeed to all who enjoy quarrels themselves or profit by the quarrels of others, but of small service to those interested either by family or pecuniary considerations in the estate.

In these circumstances a compromise of the whole proceedings was an obviously sensible course to take, for apart altogether from strict rights under disputed documents, the parties in controversy were associated by close relationship to the deceased—the one as his daughter and the others as his widows. A compromise was, in fact, reached, and it might have been hoped the disputes were ended, but it is rash to entertain such an expectation, for it is out of that compromise that these proceedings have arisen.

The effect of the compromise was simple. The respondents' appeal against the judgment which declared against the alleged Will of 22nd November 1903, and the caveat against the grant of the earlier Will were both to be withdrawn, and the Probate of the earlier Will was to be granted to the Administrator General. As a consideration for this, and as a release of all claims against the estate, the appellant agreed to pay each of the widows an absolute sum of Rs. 80,000 with interest at 6 per cent. until payment, and to secure these sums by executing in their behalf a mortgage of the testator's estate, the value of which was stated to be Rs. 2,95,000.

Three documents were executed in pursuance of this arrangement—the one, an agreement of the 16th January 1907, between the respondents and the appellant, being the agreement of compromise; the second, a mortgage of the 5th March 1907, mortgaging the real and personal estate in payment of the two sums of Rs. 80,000; and the third, a release by the widows of their claims.

On the 25th March 1909, the first respondent instituted proceedings under the mortgage deed against the appellant, the other respondent and a prior mortgagee of the real estate asking for payment of the Rs 80,000, and interest, and sale of half of the mortgaged property.

This action was defended on two grounds —the one of substance and the other of form. The first that the compromise was not binding upon the appellant owing to the disabilities attaching to a pardanashin lady, and the other that the proceedings were wrong in form: since by section 67 of the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 it is impossible to seek for sale of part only of mortgaged property.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided against the appellant on both contentions, and granted the relief claimed. On appeal to the High Court of Calcutta this decree was reversed so far as it depended upon the question of form; but confirmed on the question of substance, the High Court holding that it was not possible to obtain partial relief upon such a mortgage, and granting permission to the plaintiff to make the necessary amendments in the plaint, and sending the matter back for re-hearing when these amendments had been made.

In their Lordships' opinion, the High Court were quite right in the conclusion at which they arrived. It would, of course, be possible—though inconvenient—to execute in one document a mortgage of one-half of an entire property in favour of each of two mortgagees. By this means two independent mortgages would be combined in one deed, and in such a case independent relief might be granted to each mortgagee; but the present mortgage does not take that form. It contains no covenant for payment of the mortgage debt, but consists of a conveyance of the whole property to the two mortgagees as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants, with separate provisos for redemption as to the real and personal estate in the same terms, viz., that upon payment "by sums of equal amounts to each of the two mortgagees and their representatives of Rs. 80,000 with interest," and on payment of costs and incidental expenses "the said mortgagees, their respective heirs or assigns, will separately at the cost of the mortgagor" re-convey and re-assign the mortgaged property. This mortgage clearly effects the conveyance of the real estate to the mortgagees as tenants-in-common, and no redemption could be effected of part of the property by paying to one of the mortgagees her separate debt. It is not a mortgage to each of a divided half, but a conveyance to them of the whole property.

Where a mortgage is made by one mortgagor to two tenants in common, the right of either mortgagee who desires to realise the mortgaged property and obtain payment of the debt, if the consent of the co-mortgagee cannot be obtained, is to add the co-mortgagee as a defendant to the suit and to ask for the proper mortgage decree, which would provide for all the necessary accounts and payments, excepting that there could be no judgment for a sum of money entered as between the mortgagee defendant and the mortgagor. So far, therefore, as this appeal depends on maintaining the correctness of the form of the proceedings, it must fail. The proceedings were wrong in form, but were capable of being amended so as to constitute a properly framed suit. It was within the competence of the Court to make such an amendment, and indeed it was their clear duty to do it if thereby delay and expense would be avoided. In their Lordships' opinion, the amendment of the plaint as directed by the High Court is not appropriately worded and they consider that the trial Judge should on the re-hearing of the suit make such amendments as may be necessary and proper.

The remaining ground upon which this appeal depends is that the mortgage was in fact executed by a Hindu pardanashin lady, and it is, therefore, incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that she had independent and disinterested advice.

It is not necessary—indeed, it is undesirable—to insist in such cases upon a test which depends upon a clear understanding of each detail of a matter which may be greatly involved in legal technicalities. It is sufficient that the general result of the compromise should be understood, and that people disinterested and competent to give advice should, with a fair understanding of the whole matter, advise the lady that the deed should be executed. The learned Subordinate Judge has applied the proper and necessary test for the purpose of examining the evidence. He has found that the lady had sufficient intelligence to understand the relevant and important matters, that she did understand them as they were explained to her, that nothing was concealed, and that there was no undue influence or misrepresentation. As apparently it was only her husband who was blamed in the matter, it is satisfactory to find by the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that in his opinion he did his best to serve his wife. The High Court of Bengal confirmed this judgment, and, after examining the evidence, stated that the deed was executed with the full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction, and that the lady had independent and disinterested advice in the matter.

It is not in accordance with the practice of this Board to interfere with two concurrent findings of fact so clearly and definitely expressed and they, therefore, think that the second ground of appeal fails equally with the first, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

The cross-appeal, as to whether the suit as originally framed was maintainable, raises no independent question and was not opened. It should also be dismissed but without costs. The costs of obtaining special leave to cross-appeal will, of course, be borne by the cross-appellant, and these will be set off against the costs of the main appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

BANSILAL NARAYAN MARWARI—OPPONENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXI, r. 89—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 166—Execution of decree—Sale—Deposit of decretal amount, whether application to set aside sale—Application to set aside sale made more than three years after confirmation of sale, dismissal of—Revision, maintainability of.

Where property is sold in execution of a decree, the mere deposit by the judgment-debtor of the amount of the decree within thirty days of the sale cannot be regarded as an application under Order XXI, rule 89, of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale. [p. 136, col. 1.]

Where an application by a judgment-debtor to set aside a sale of his property in execution of the decree against him made more than three years after the confirmation of the sale was dismissed as time-barred:

Held, that there was no ground for the exercise of the powers vested in the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 136, col. 1.]

The policy of the Legislature in providing short periods within which applications should be made to set aside sales, is that titles arising from judicial sales should be settled as soon as possible. [p. 136, col 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Less than thirty days before the 3rd of September 1915 the property of the applicant was sold in execution of a decree against him, and on the 3rd September, the applicant deposited in Court the amount of the decree together with interest on the purchase-money for the property sold. He obtained from the Nazir of the Court who received the money a receipt, which recorded that it was paid on account of the Darkhast and on account of interest. But no application was made at that time to set aside the sale. Presumably the intention was to do what was required under Order XXI, rule 89. No application having been made to set aside the sale, the sale was confirmed in January 1916, and thereafter the Court gave notice to the applicant as depositor to take away his money. He then applied that his deposit should be considered as an application to set aside the sale. That application was refused, and the applicant did not appeal, although he was represented by a Pleader. Then later he repeated his previous application which was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, and after that an appeal was preferred to the District Court, which was asked to deal with the matter under section 151 of the Code, for making such order as might be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of the Court or for the ends of justice The learned District Judge having rejected the appeal, the applicant now comes here under section 115 of the Code for the interference of the High Court. It is difficult to see how this application will lie under section 115. There is no defect whatever in jurisdiction, no irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. All the irregularities are on the side of the applicant. The Code, with the Limitation Act, provides a short period within which applications specifying their object should be made to set aside sales, and the shortness of time allowed may be taken as indicative of the policy of the Legislature that titles arising from judicial sales should be settled as soon as possible. Now we have an application before us, three years after the confirmation of a judicial sale, to set it aside, the reason being that the applicant who ought to have applied to the Court did not apply to the Court when he deposited his money. We should be violating the principle under which the rules are framed for obtaining finality at an early date in such matters if we were to accede to the present application, even if we assume that it could be brought within the terms of section 115. The applicant's only remedy is to take back his money. The concession which is allowed to judgment-debtors is only allowed under certain conditions. Those conditions do not exist in the present case. We must, therefore, discharge the Rule with costs. One set of costs.

Rule discharged.

Mortgage, suit on—Minority, plea of—Burden of proof.

Where a defendant alleges minority in order to escape liability under a mortgage, the burden lies upon him to prove that he was a minor at the time the transaction was entered into. [p 137, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 2nd April 1918, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 8th September 1917.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner :—

"This appeal is up for admission under Order XLI, rule 11, of the Code of Civil Procedure and I have directed that notice may go. I think it advisable that the case should be dealt with by a Bench in view of an apparent conflict of opinion regarding a point of law which is of some importance.

"The suit was a suit on a mortgage, and the defence of the appellant here was that he was a minor at the time of the execution of the mortgage and that consequently there was no valid contract which could be enforced. The lower Appellate Court, relying upon a judgment of a Bench of this Court, as also on Select Case No. 265, has held that the burden of proving minority lay upon the defendant who asserted it. On the other hand, there is a reference to a Bench judgment reported as Muhammad Husain v. Lalji Singh (1), a judgment to which I myself was a party. I think I am entitled to say that it is very doubtful whether the judgment in that case is correct. However, I do not propose to say anything more on the subject, except that in view of the difference of opinion in the judgments just referred, it is desirable that this point should be considered by a Bench.

"Mr. Mumtaz Husain has also asked leave to add two new grounds of appeal to his petition. I allow him to do so."

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession on the basis of a mortgage of the year 1901. The substantial defence and the only point argued in first appeal in the Court below and before us is that the defendant-appellant Mian Jan Khan was a minor on the date of the mortgage. The learned Judicial Commissioner referred the appeal to a Bench on the ground of there being a conflict of authority in this Court on the question whether the burden of proving minority in such a case as this lay on the plaintiff or the defendant. It has now been settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jagannath Prashad Singh v. Abdullah (2) that the burden of proof lies on the defendant who alleges minority, and the learned Counsel for the appellant admits that he cannot go behind this decision. The defendant has signally failed to discharge the burden of proof that lay on him, and we are unable to hold that there is any ground for going behind the finding of fact of the lower Court on this point. The appeal, therefore, fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Two additional pleas were inserted in the petition of appeal at the time when it was referred to the Bench, but they have not been pressed before us.

(2)—Entry in bahi—Evidence of oral agreement to pay interest, whether admissible.

Plaintiff sued defendant for the recovery of Rs. 825 principal and Rs. 412-8-0 interest on a bahi entry, alleging that the defendant owed him Rs. 725 on a previous bahi account, that that bahi had been lost and that Rs. 100 had been advanced at the time of the defendants signing the entry sued on. The Rs. 725 were made up of three items, viz, Rs. 150, Rs. 310 and Rs. 225. The 1st Court, holding that the items of Rs. 150 and 350 had not been proved, gave plaintiff a decree for Rs. 325 with interest at 2 per cent per annum making a total of Rs. 448.8.0. Both parties appealed. The District Judge wrote a judgment covering both appeals and dismissed the defendant's appeal and accepted that of the plaintiff, allowing him Rs. 825 principal and Rs 264 interest. Separate decrees were given in the two appeals The defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court and attached copies of the judgment of the 1st Court, the two judgments in appeal and the decree in the plaintiff's appeal but no copy of the decree in his own appeal:

Held, (1) that the appellant was entitled to an extension of the period of limitation to the extent of the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the 1st Court's judgment; [p. 139, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as no copy of the lower Appellate Court, decree in the defendant' sappeal to that Court had been filed, there was no valid appeal in the High Court from that decree; [p. 138, col. 2.]

(3 that on the general principles of the doctrine of res judicata the present appeal was barred in respect of Rs. 448-8-0, inasmuch as the sum was directly in issue in the defendant's appeal to the lower Appellate Court; [p. 139, col. 1.]

(4) that the findings as to the items of Rs. 150 and 350 were conclusive and a mere alleged error in weighing evidence was not a sufficient ground for second appeal. [p. 139, col. 1.]

Evidence relating to an oral agreement entered in a bahi to pay interest is admissible under the 2nd proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act, and the existence of such an agreement is a question of fact which cannot be considered in second appeal. [p. 140, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary to be mentioned for the purposes of this second appeal are that the plaintiff-respondent instituted a suit against the defendant appellant for the recovery of Rs. 825 principal and Rs. 412 8 0 interest on a bahi entry executed by the defendant. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant owed him Rs. 725 on a previous bahi account and that bahi had been lost, while Rs. 100 had been advanced to the defendant at the time of signing the entry of Rs. 825, now sued on. The Rs. 725 were made up of three items, namely, Rs. 150; Rs. 350 and Rs. 225. The first Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove the items of Rs. 150 and Rs. 350, and gave him a decree for Rs. 325 with interest at 2 per cent. per annum, making a total of Rs. 448-8-0. Both parties appealed; the appeal of the defendant being No. 345 of 1918 and that of plaintiff No. 351 of 1918. The lower Appellate Court wrote a judgment in Appeal No. 345 covering both appeals and thereby he dismissed the defendant's appeal No. 345 and accepted the plaintiff's appeal No. 351, allowing the latter Rs. 825 principal and Rs. 264 interest, or a total of Rs. 1,089. The usual brief judgment was also written in Appeal No. 351, wherein the plaintiff's appeal was accepted for the reasons given in Appeal No. 345. Separate decrees were given in the two appeals. To his grounds of second appeal in this Court the appellant attached copies of the judgment of the first Court, the two judgments in appeal and of the decree in Appeal No. 351, but no copy of the decree in Appeal No. 345.

For the plaintiff respondent various preliminary objections are raised. The first is that the appeal is barred by time. In reply it is contended that the appeal is not barred if the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the first Court's judgment is allowed, and it is prayed that this be allowed. Although at present the attaching of the copy of the first Court's judgment with the appeal is not a rule of Court, it is a practice which is observed and insisted upon. The advantages of having a copy of the first Court's judgment attached to the appeal are so obvious that it is probable that the matter will be provided for in the rules. Under section 5 of the Limitation Act I allow an extension of the period of limitation as prayed for.

The next preliminary objection is that there is no legal and valid appeal before this Court in respect of the decree passed in Appeal No. 345 in the lower Appellate Court, because a copy of that decree does not accompany the grounds of this appeal and that, therefore, the decree in that appeal is final and the items covered by that decree are res judicata and cannot be dealt with now. Reliance is placed on Order XLI, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure and a number of authorities including C. v. C. & B. (1). For the appellant it is contended in reply that it is not necessary that copies of both the appeals should accompany the grounds of appeal in a consolidated judgment and reliance is placed on Jogal Kishore v. Ohammo (2).

It is clear that for the reasons urged by the respondent, there is no valid appeal in this Court from the decree in Appeal No. 345 but that, to my mind, does not conclude the matter. The decision in Jogal Kishore v. Ohammo (2), relied on by the appellant, is not on all fours with the present case. In that case two suits for pre-emption were instituted by two rival pre-emptors against the same defendant in respect of the same property. Both cases were tried together and disposed of by one judgment. One plaintiff was granted a decree giving her the right to pre empt within a certain time and the other was granted a decree giving him the same right on the failure of the first. The head-note is apparently wrong in stating that the same decree was given and that each pre-emptor was impleaded as a defendant in the suit of the other, but that is not material for the present purpose. The latter plaintiff appealed only from the decree in his own suit and the lower Appellate Court held that the existence of the other judgment and decree which had become final were a bar to the appeal and dismissed it. It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab, whilst admitting that the question was one of difficulty, that it was not necessary to appeal from both the decrees. But that case is distinguishable. In the present case the two appeals in the lower Appellate Court were distinct and related to different subject-matters. In Appeal No. 345 the defendant's claim was that the plaintiff was not entitled to the sum of Rs. 448 8-0 which had been allowed him by the first Court, and in Appeal No. 351 the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to Rs. 500 and interest which the first Court had disallowed.

The law of res judicata in relation to two simultaneous decrees between the same parties is a difficult subject and the High Courts in India have not held the same views, and I may add that beyond merely referring me to the judgment in Jogal Kishore v. Ohammo (2), no attempt has been made to argue the point involved and no authority has been cited dealing with circumstances similar to the present. It appears to me on the general principles of the law of res judicata that the present appeal in respect of Rs. 448-8-0 is barred. It would be convenient here to state that the decree in Appeal No. 351, a copy of which has been attached, is not merely for the further sum of Rs. 500 and interest claimed in that appeal, but includes the sum of Rs. 448-8-0 which is the subject-matter of Appeal No. 345, and grants a decree for Rs. 1,089. It might be argued for the appellant that the present appeal arises out of the original suit for Rs. 825 and interest and that the question in issue between the parties in both the first and the lower Appellate Courts was whether that money was due or not, and that a decree having ultimately been passed against him for Rs. 1,089, he is entitled to raise all questions permitted in second appeal included in, or covered by, that decree and that he is so entitled irrespective of the fact that there may be another simultaneous decree which purported to modify the decree of the first Court and dismissed his appeal No. 345. But in my opinion, the proper test is not the contents of a decree. We have to see what was the matter directly and substantially in issue in Appeal No. 345, and the only matter there in issue related to the sum of Rs. 448-8-0. The decision was against the defendant-appellant and as I have already held that there is no valid appeal before this Court in respect of Appeal No. 345, it follows that the decision is final and this appeal in respect of the Rs. 448-8-0 is barred as res judicata. The matter in issue in Appeal No. 351 was different, and it can make no difference that both matters were dealt with by the same judgment, though, as explained, there are two judgments, and the decree in Appeal No. 351 included the Rs. 448-8-0.

The third preliminary objection is that no second appeal lies in respect of the items of Rs. 150 and Rs. 350, that mere alleged error in weighing evidence is insufficient and that the findings as to these items are one of fact. The appellant contends that there is no evidence whatever on the record in support of the findings, inasmuch as the statement of the plaintiff relied on by the Court was not made as a witness but as a party and no opportunity was given to cross-examine him. The record does not bear out the contention. The plaintiff was examined after the issues were fixed, on a day fixed for evidence, he was given the number 1 and the real witness was numbered 2. He was not cross-examined but that is immaterial. I hold no second appeal lies in respect of these items.

There remains only the question raised by the appellant regarding the liability to pay interest. He contends that the bahi entry of Rs. 825 contains no reference to interest and that, under section 92 of the Evidence Act, the evidence of witnesses, who allege that it was settled at the time that interest was to be paid, is inadmissible, that there are no preceding transactions between the parties from which an agreement to pay interest can be implied, nor is there any direct evidence on the point and that the plaintiff has admitted that no interest was agreed to, or fixed, at the time of borrowing the Rs. 150 and Rs. 350. Reliance was placed on Bura v. Mailia Shah (3), Raghu Mal v. Bandu (4) and Kishore Chand v. Gurditta Mal (5). It is also urged that the circumstances were peculiar as the defendant was suspected of being a party to the destruction of the previous bahi and that the probabilities are that he was induced to sign a fresh account on the advance of another Rs. 100 and the promise that no interest would be charged and that, otherwise, there is no explanation of an omission to make any entry as to interest. The respondent contends that Rs. 123 out of the total amount of interest allowed is part of the Rs. 448-8-0 and cannot be gone into, and I hold that this contention is correct. He also contends that the item of Rs. 225 is admittedly made up of Rs. 220 principal and Rs. 25 interest, from which an implied agreement with regard to the payment of interest can be implied. The question of interest has been somewhat perfunctorily dealt with by both the lower Courts. The finding of the first Court is not very clearly expressed, but what it, apparently, found was that the plaintiff had proved that, at the time the entries relating to the Rs. 825 were made, there was an oral agreement between the parties that interest was to be paid, but that the rate of interest had either not been agreed upon, or had not been proved. The lower Appellate Court in effect accepts this finding and also holds that the rate of interest allowed is reasonable. The contention of the appellant that evidence regarding the oral agreement is inadmissible under section 92 of the Evidence Act is untenable. The judgment in Kishore Chand v. Gurditta Mal (5) relied on by him in support of his contention is inapplicable. The grounds of that decision are that the instruments sued on were shah jog hundis drawn with the utmost formality and could not be regarded but as documents of a very formal nature and that, therefore, the alleged oral agreement as to interest on which the hundis were silent, was not saved by the 2nd proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act. The concluding words of that proviso, which are very material, are as follows:—"In considering whether or not this proviso applies, the Court shall have regard to the degree of formality of the document." Entries in bahis cannot be said to bear any formal character and may be of various descriptions. I hold, therefore, that the evidence relating to an oral agreement to pay interest is admissible under the 2nd proviso to section 92 of the Evidence Act and that the existence of such an agreement is a question of fact which cannot be considered in second appeal.

For the above reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant No 1 gave a zar-i-peshgi lease of the land in suit in this case to the defendant No. 3 for ten years from 1312—1321 Fasli under a registered document, dated 30th of August 1904. On the 25th of January 1914 the defendant No. 1 gave the defendant No. 3 a further zar i peshgi lease of the land for a term of three years from 1322—24 Fasli. The term of the second lease in favour of the defendant No. 3 expired on the 5th June 1917. Ont he 22nd November 1915 the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 gave the plaintiff a zar i peshgi lease of the same land for thirteen years from 1325—37 Fasli. According to the terms of this lease the defendant No. 3 was to vacate the land at the end of Jeth 1324 Fasli and the plaintiff was to take possession of the land when vacated by the defendant No. 3. The defendant No. 3 failed to vacate the land on the determination of his lease and the plaintiff brought this suit for possession. The plaintiff stated in his plaint that when the defendant No. 3 heard that a lease had been executed in favour of the plaintiff, he persuaded the defendant No. 1 to execute on the 1st of August 1916 another lease in his own favour for seven years from 1325—1331 Fasli and that in the lease of the 1st of August 1916 in favour of defendant No. 3 there was a false recital to the effect that the lease was executed in pursuance of an agreement entered into between the defendants Nos. 1 and 3 on the 22nd of August 1915.

The defendant No. 3 among other grounds defended the suit on the grounds that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction, that the defendant No. 1 had agreed to lease the property in suit to him before the execution of the lease in favour of the plaintiff and that the plaintiff had notice of this agreement.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that he had jurisdiction to try the suit. He has also found that no agreement was entered into betweent the defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 3 on the 22nd of August 1915. He has decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession and the defendant No. 3 now appeals.

Although several pleas have been taken in the grounds of appeal, the learned Counsel for the appellant has confined himself to a discussion of the finding on two only of the issues framed by the learned Subordinate Judge. These are issues Nos. 6 and 11.

"Did the defendant No. 1 agree to lease the property in suit to the defendant No. 3 before the execution of the lease in favour of the plaintiff and did he receive a consideration for such agreement from the defendant No. 3? If so, how does it affect the plaintiff?"

"Has this Court no jurisdiction to eject the defendant No. 3?" In his attempt to prove the alleged agreement the defendant No. 3 has, in addition to oral evidence, produced two documents Exhibits C1 and C2 Exhibit C1 is a letter, dated 22nd of August 1915, purporting to have been written by the defendant No. 1 to the defendant No. 3 containing the alleged agreement, and Exhibit C2, which is also dated 22nd of August 1915, purports to be a receipt for Rs. 200 executed by defendant No. 1 in favour of the defendant No. 3. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed the whole of the evidence, both oral and documentary, and I may say at once that after hearing the arguments of both parties I have no hesitation in agreeing with the finding at which he has arrived. The story which is told by the defendant No. 3 and his witnesses is in the highest degree improbable. The defendant No. 1 is a resident of the Kheri district and it would appear that defendant No. 3 has also for a considerable time been residing in the village of Dhauraha in that district, for in both the leases executed in his favour by the defendant No. 1, dated 30th August 1904 and 26th January 1914, he is described as a resident of Dhauraha. Yet we are asked to believe that when nearly two years of the existing lease had still to run, the defendant No. 1 went to a village in the Bulandshahar district for the purpose of entering into the alleged agreement with the defendant No. 3 and of obtaining the paltry sum of Rs. 200 from the defendant No. 3. We are also asked to believe that the plaintiff, who is a Mahajan with full knowledge of this agreement and of the fact that the defendant No. 3 was actually in possession of the property in suit, was foolish enough to advance the large sum of Rs. 3,000 to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. He must have known that it was most unlikely that the defendant No. 3 would willingly give up possession of the property and that he was lending his money on very poor security. It is alleged that the letter and the receipt for Rs. 200 were both written by Ismail Beg, D W No. 1, at the house of Mohammad Usuf Khan, D. W. No. 2, in the village of Bagrasi in the Bulandshahar district. No explanation whatsoever is given why the parties went to the house of Mohammad Usuf Khan for the purpose of having these documents written and executed. Ismail Beg is a retired Sub Postmaster who lives in a house belonging to the brother of defendant No. 3 and Phundan Lal, the only other witness who had been produced in an attempt to prove the incident, is a person who had no business whatsoever at Mohammad Usuf Khan's house but who apparently is under Mohammad Usuf Khan's influence, as he says that he goes every day there to make his Salam. In face of the inherent improbabilities in the story, I am certainly not prepared to accept the evidence of these witnesses as sufficient to prove the execution of the alleged agreement.

There remains the question whether the plaintiff respondent is entitled to get a decree for possession of the land in suit by ejectment of the defendant-appellant. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that as the contest is between two rival tenants, he had jurisdiction to eject the defendant-appellant. The learned Counsel for the appellant argues that as the appellant was in possession of the land in suit by virtue of his lease dated 26th January 1914 and is now in the position of a lessee holding over, he is not a trespasser and he cannot be ejected by a suit in the Civil Court. He argues that proceedings for ejectment should have been taken against him as a tenant in the Revenue Court and he relies on the ruling in Mohammad Ali v. Isa Khan (1). That ruling is authority for the view that a landlord who desires to eject a thekadar on the expiration of his tenancy must proceed by the issue of a notice of ejectment under section 55 of the Oudh Rent Act. The argument is that if the landlord could not eject the defendant-appellant, except by proceedings under the Oudh Rent Act, the plaintiff-respondent who gets his title from the landlord cannot, merely by virtue of the lease granted to him, assert that the defendant-appellant is a trespasser and sue for his ejectment in the Civil Court. In reply to this argument the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent urges that he was not entitled to sue for ejectment in the Revenue Court, that as the appellant by his own action in taking a further lease has determined the lease of the 26th January 1914, he cannot now plead that he is holding over under that lease and as the plaintiff's lease is of an earlier date, he (the plaintiff) is entitled to get possession, and he further urges that he is in reality a mortgagee and as such is entitled to bring his suit in the Civil Court. The plaintiff respondent has himself pleaded that the lease granted to the defendant-appellant on the 1st of August 1916 was an invalid lease, and I have already held that as a prior lease had been granted to the plaintiff-respondent, the lease of the 1st of August 1916 is void and ineffectual. That being so, it follows that the defendant-appellant is not holding under the new lease of the 1st of August 1916, but is in possession by virtue of the lease of the 26th of January 1914, and until the defendant-appellant voluntarily relinquishes the property leased or is ejected by due process of the Revenue Court, the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to take possession. And even if it be accepted that the document on which the plaintiff-respondent has based his suit is in reality a mortgage and not a lease, that document is in all essentials similar to the document by virtue of which the defendant appellant is in possession and in this view of the case the plaintiff-respondent ought to have brought a suit for redemption of the prior mortgage. The suit as brought is a suit for ejectment of a trespasser, and in no view of the case can it be held that the defendant-appellant is a trespasser. Had a suit for redemption been brought, the defendant-appellant might possibly have met the claim on other grounds, which in the present suit it was not open to him to argue. I may note that the plaintiff brought his suit as a lessee and not as a mortgagee and the plea that he is in reality a mortgagee has only been raised in the last stage of the case. In any view of the case it is clear that the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to a decree against the appellant in the present suit.

It remains to consider whether the plaintiff-respondent is entitled in the present suit to any relief against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by whom he was granted the lease of the 22nd November 1915. In his plaint, he has asked for an alternative relief against these defendants. It was their duty to put him in possession of the property leased [section 108 A (b) of the Transfer of Property Act], and it seems to me that the lease granted to him did not entitle him to sue for the ejectment of the appellant in the Revenue Court. That being so and as the defendants Nos 1 and 2 have failed to give possession to the plaintiff, the latter is, in my opinion, entitled to recover the money advanced by him with reasonable interest thereon from the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The result is, that I allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Court. The plaintiff-respondent will be given a decree against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the sum of Rs. 3,000 with interest thereon at 1 per cent. per mensem from the 22nd November 1915 to the date of payment. He will also be allowed his costs in both Courts against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The suit against defendant No. 3 appellant will stand dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Khulna, dated the 22nd of December 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Additional Court at that place, dated the 31st of August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerburtty (with him Babu Bireswar Bagchi), for the Appellant, submitted that the Courts below had erred in not allowing plaintiff a decree for the full amount of rent claimed by him. The previous decree for rent obtained by the plaintiff against the predecessor-in-interest of the present defendant settled the rent of the jama and that decree was binding upon this defendant. The previous decree for rent operated as res judicata, and the question of the amount of rent could not be re-agitated now. The Courts below said that the defendant had no notice of the solenamah, but the question of notice could not arise at all because the previous decree operated as a res judicata. The defendant as auction-purchaser must have notice of the previous compromise decree. The contention of the defendant that the consent decree was not operative because the Pleader who had acted in that case had no authority to sign the compromise on behalf of all the co-sharers was baseless, because the compromise had been subsequently ratified by all the co-sharers.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babus Khitish Chandra Sen, Probhat Chandra Dutt and Anilendra Nath Roy Chowdhury), for the Respondents, contended that the solenamah in the previous rent suit was beyond the scope of that suit and so it was inoperative without registration, and the defendant who had no notice of the terms of that compromise could not be held bound by its terms. The solenamah was not binding, firstly, because it had not been registered as required by section 17 of the Registration Act, and, secondly, because it had not been made with the consent and authority of all the co-sharers. As a matter of fact one of the co-sharers did not give authority to the Pleader, who signed the solenamah, to compromise on his behalf. The defendant was a purchaser at a sale in execution of a rent decree, and the sale proclamation did not give any of the details of the terms of the solenamah, which should be regarded as a material omission. Under the above circumstances the Court of Appeal below rightly held that the defendant was not bound by the terms of the compromise.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerburtty, for the Appellant, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Khulna, dated the 22nd December 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover rent. Originally the plaintiff was entitled to a one-fifth share of a certain estate in which the predecessor of the contesting defendant held a tenure. Whilst that condition of affairs existed, the plaintiff brought a suit for his share of the rent, estimating the area of the estate as being about 500 bighas. The result of that suit was that there was a compromise and the compromise was filed in Court. Under the terms of that compromise, the rent was settled at 13 annas 12½ gandas per bigha and the total rent was fixed at Rs. 68 odd. A decree was drawn up in accordance with the terms of the compromise in these terms: "It is ordered that a decree be passed for Rs. 372-11-3 against the tenant-defendant and that the annual rental be fixed at Rs. 68 12-3 in accordance with the solenamah." That seems to have been clearly within the scope of the suit and that decree was an adjudication between the parties—it does not matter whether it was made by consent or otherwise—that the rent at which the tenant held was the sum of Rs. 68 odd.

It is not open to any of the parties to that decree or persons claiming under them to question that amount. That decree does not require registration under section 17 of the Indian Registration Act. The rights of the plaintiff do not rest in this case on the solenamah which is an unregistered document, but they rest on the adjudication—no doubt by consent—in the decree fixing the rent at Rs. 68-12-3. Subsequently, the estate was partitioned by the Collector. The tenure held by the defendant's predecessor was found to be 1,230 bighas and the portion of the tenure which fell to the plaintiff's lot was 566 bighas. The plaintiff subsequently brought to sale the interest of the tenant in execution of a rent decree and the defendant purchased that interest of the tenant. The sale proclamation gave the rent as Rs. 68-12-3. The plaintiff then brought the present suit against the purchaser—the present defendant—for rent, alleging that the rent had been settled by the compromise decree. The case made by the defendant was that he was not bound by the terms of the compromise. Obviously he is bound by the terms of the compromise, if he had notice of it and he is bound by the decree, whether he had or had no notice. This matter in the present case rests on the decree because a party who is privy to a decree is clearly bound whether he had or had not notice. The doctrine of res judicata clearly does not depend on whether the party had or had not notice. I think in this case the defendant is in fact bound by the consent decree. Moreover, all the probabilities of the case show that he must have known all about this, because the sale proclamation gives the rent as mentioned in the consent decree and everything suggests that enquiries were made by the intending purchaser as to how that sum came to find its place in the sale proclamation.

Two other points were raised. One is that the solenamah on which the compromise decree was based was signed by a Pleader, and it is not proved that one of the co-sharers had given authority to the Pleader, to compromise on his behalf. The learned Judge says that this co sharer never disputed the document. He might have given his reasons more fully. This compromise was entered into in 1897. It has been acted on and adopted ever since and whether the Pleader had instruction or not actually before the compromise was entered into, there can not be any doubt that the learned Judge was warranted in coming to the conclusion that either the Pleader had instruction or that his act was subsequently ratified by the co-sharer.

The other point dealt with by the learned Judge was that there was an omission in the sale proclamation in not giving the details of the compromise decree, but it is not shown that it was a material omission. The proclamation gives the amount of the rent, and it is not for every omission in the proclamation of sale that the sale is liable to be set aside. It is not shown in the present case that the omission was a material one and it is not shown that the present defendant—the purchaser—had not, in fact, notice of all the details relating to the proclamation.

I think we ought to set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court and in lieu thereof decree the plaintiff's suit in full with costs both here and in the lower Courts. Let the case be remitted to the Court of first instance for the ascertainment of the actual amount due to the plaintiff. Only the tenant-defendant is liable to pay the costs.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Appeal from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd April 1915.

Mr. G. P. Dick (Standing Counsel), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Hasnu, Musalman, aged 25 years, has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Karnia Dhangar, both the assessors considering his guilt established.

Karnia belonged to Mouza Aundha and on the afternoon of Sunday the 20th December last was grazing his goats in the adjoining village of Tironja. He was undoubtedly beaten to death that afternoon, though his body was not found till the next morning. The first information (Exhibit P.-1) was laid by the kotwar of Aundha (P. W. No. 11) at Warora, 20 miles distant, on the evening of the 21st December. The Circle Inspector (P. W. No. 19) and the Sub Inspector (P. W. No. 18) started at once for the spot, which they reached before dawn on the 22nd December. That evening they received information from Arkia Gond (P. W. No. 6) which led to Hasnu being arrested just two days later at Ratnapur, where he was found to have Rs. 17 odd on his person. At the same time Arkia was arrested at Tironja: he was sent next day to Warora for remand, but no order seems to have been passed regarding him till the 31st December when the Tahsildar, a Magistrate of the 2nd class, by warrant addressed to the local Sub-Inspector, ordered his detention in custody till the 4th January when he was to be produced before the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Warora. Meanwhile on the 28th December Hasnu had been produced before the last mentioned Magistrate at Nimdala, 19 miles from Warora, where he made a confession (Exhibit P.-7). In a note recorded on the back of his memorandum in English of the confession, the Sub Divisional Magistrate traced the movements of the Police with Hasnu from arrest to production before him. It seems that Hasnu had been brought via Chanda and Warora and at the latter place had been remanded by the Tahsildar but sent on to have his confession recorded. The Tahsildar acted so far in accordance with the standing order in paragraph 1, part II, of Criminal Circular No. 17, but the Police who had taken part in the investigation were improperly allowed to form part of the escort which conducted Hasnu from Warora to Nimdala, and we must here express a hope that the District Magistrate will take steps to prevent recurrence of such an irregularity.

The Magistrate who recorded Hasnu's confession began the commitment inquiry on the 4th January and concluded it on the 10th February. He discharged Arkia for reasons which he stated as follows :—

"None of the deceased's property was found on him and the axe he had in his hand all that day is free of blood. He no doubt was with Hasnu the whole day, because they are both servants of Paighambar. There is no evidence he was with Hasnu when the murder was committed. He says he stayed behind for a call of nature and reached the scene of murder as soon as he could after hearing the dying man's cry as did Gania. This is just possible."

Now Hasnu in his confession of the 28th December, which when read again to him on the 8th February he had admitted to be true, stated that Arkia committed the murder, while Gania Govari had deposed before the Committing Magistrate that he ran up on hearing a cry for help and found Karnia dying with both Hasnu and Arkia beside him. In such circumstances the Magistrate would, in our opinion, have done better to commit both the accused.

Examined in the Sessions Court Hasnu reported the story of the murder and the disposal of the dead man's property which he told on the 28th December and 8th February. In his grounds of appeal to this Court, however, he denies all knowledge of the murder and alleges that the gold earrings which he got converted into a ring and then sold at Warora on the 23rd and 24th December, as related by Shamsher Khan, Sribari and Ragho (P. W. Nos. 12-14), were handed over to him by Arkia and Gania (P. Ws. Nos. 6 and 5). He describes Arkia and Gania as his servants, but they are not really so. Arkia is a field-servant employed by Paighambar Khan with whom Hasnu his son-in law lives. Gania is a grazier who looks after the goats of the patel and others. The appellant does not explain why Arkia and Gania together made over the earrings to him, or why if they did so he took the unusual course of first converting them into a ring and then selling the ring.

Both the assessors as well as the Sessions Judge believed Gania (P. W. No. 5), and it is noteworthy that both Hasnu and Arkia have all along described him as coming last to the scene of the murder, while there is no suggestion that Gania had an axe with him, though each of the others admittedly carried such a weapon. This witness, moreover, told his story to the Police the day after their arrival, i. e., before Hasnu was arrested and the murdered man's earrings traced. In the Sessions Court he improved on his deposition before the Committing Magistrate by stating that he saw a blow struck as he ran up: this addition may be untrue, and his evidence must also be discounted on account of his failure to report to the village authorities at once; nevertheless we agree with the Sessions Judge and the assessors in accepting his story as in the main trustworthy. There seems to be no adequate reason for this man to be made a party to the murder, especially when so little was to be got by it, though Hasnu and Arkia were sufficiently connected to make a conspiracy between them alone intelligible. That Karnia was with Hasnu and Arkia on the afternoon of the murder is shown by independent and untainted evidence, namely that of Tania, Kanba and Goma (P. Ws. Nos. 2—4).

It is clear then that both Hasnu and Arkia, each with an axe in his hand, were besides the murdered man immediately after the fatal blows were struck and while he was still alive. One of these axes (art. in evidence H) is reported by the Imperial Serologist to be stained with human blood. The report is defective in that it does not state where the stains were detected, but from the evidence of the mukaddam (P. W. No. 17) we gather that one was on the blade and two on the handle of H on the 23rd December. The appellant has wavered as to whether H is the axe he carried on the 20th December, but looking to all the evidence including Arkia's, we think it must have been. The mukaddam shows that Arkia gave up the other axe (K) as his first and that H was found later. The Circle Inspector (P. W. No. 19) also deposed that the axe first given up was claimed by Arkia and that the one afterwards discovered was stained. The Sessions Judge thought the axe H might have been stained after the murder and before its recovery by the Police, or that the stains referred to by the Imperial Serologist may not be those noticed by the mukaddam and the Circle Inspector: he also suggests in his judgment that the stains might have been caused in the mortuary where Karnia's corpse was examined by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, whose evidence unfortunately could not be obtained at the trial. There is certainly some improbability in the theory that Hasnu left his axe unwashed, if he used it on Karnia, for the prosecution put forward a witness Musammat Maini (P. W. No. 7) to show that he washed himself soon after the murder in a tank never used by bathers. On the whole we consider it safer to ignore the bloodstains for the purpose of deciding whether the appellant is innocent or guilty.

Turning to the appellant's confession, we have no doubt of its truth in so far as it admits disposal by him of the murdered man's ornaments. The question we next have to consider is whether we should nonetheless reject, as the Sessions Judge has done, that part which makes out that Arkia did the killing without the connivance or assistance of the appellant and handed over the proceeds to him as soon as he came up.

RAHMAT ALI v. EMPEROR.

The ordinary rule is that a confession is evidence for the prisoner as well as against him and must be taken altogether. But it is only where no other evidence is forthcoming that this can be pressed to the extent of requiring that no part can be accepted as true without accepting the whole; see Goloke Chunder Chowdhry v. Magistrate of Chittagong (1) and Queen v. Sonaoollah (2). If other evidence incompatible with part of a confession is on record, it may be relied on in preference to that part; see Reg. v. Amrita Govinda (3). Now in the present case we know that although Gania ran to the spot on hearing the victim's cry, he found both Hasnu and Arkia already there. It is, therefore, most unlikely that Hasnu had been following Arkia and only came up after the crime had been committed; also that the earrings had already been made over to Hasnu when Gania arrived. Nor can we believe that Arkia with his master's son-in-law close behind him would have fallen upon Karnia unless he knew for certain that his act was approved. In this connection it has to be remembered that Karnia too had an axe and was not more than 40 years old, also that the medical evidence (Exhibit P 10) shows a great number of blows to have been struck and so favours the hypothesis that the deceased had 2 assailants, not one only. Some weight, too, must be attached to the possession by the appellant of all 3 earrings, though possibly Arkia may have thought such articles would be more safely disposed of by his employer's son-in-law than by himself. The appellant and Arkia had spent the afternoon together cutting down a tree, and so are not likely to have been appreciably apart when both followed Karnia. Each adopts the obvious line of declaring that he lagged behind the other. But we think that the facts all taken together are incompatible with the appellant's story that he had no concern with the murder. If he did not commit it single-handed as alleged by Arkia, he must have joined in planning it and assisted at least by his presence in its commission. In either case we think his conduct to present no such extenuating feature as would justify refusal to confirm the capital sentence passed by the Sessions Judge.

Appeal dismissed.

Extradition Act (XV of 1903), ss. 9, 18—Extradition of fugitive criminal of Chandernagore—Procedure, summary—Treaties of 1815 and 1876—Extradition proceedings, nature of.

The East Indian possessions of France and Britain are entirely excluded from the Treaty arrangements of 1876. In regard to them the arrangement established between the two countries by the Treaty of 1815 is preserved. Consequently the provisions of Chapter II of the Extradition Act have no application to a fugitive criminal of Chandernagore. In accordance with the terms of the Treaty of 1815 procedure for the extradition from British India of a fugitive criminal of Chandernagore is to be summary and no preliminary enquiry is necessary before his extradition. [p. 149, cols. 1 & 2.]

Extradition on any condition is an invasion of the common law right and when there is a Treaty followed by a Statute recognising the Treaty, the procedure must be in accordance with the Treaty and Statute and no further condition can be imposed by the Courts. [p. 149, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Serampore, dated the 6th April 1919.

Babu Manmathanath Mukherji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This Rule raises an interesting question. It was obtained on behalf of one Rahmat Ali, who says that he is a British subject residing at Tilinipara in the district of Hooghly. The necessary facts are as follows:—

On April 4th a Jamadar of the French Police came tothe Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serampur with a 'delegation' from the Juge d' Instruction at Chandernagore. The 'delegation' directed the Jamadar, or Adjutant de Police, to proceed to Telinipara and, with the assistance of the British Police, to arrest Rahmat Ali on a charge of theft. The Magistrate directed the Sub-Inspector of Bhadreswar to assist in arresting Rahmat Ali, and on April 5 the petitioner was arrested and next day he was produced before the Magistrate who remanded him to custody, and ordered a letter to be written to the Bengal Government asking for an extradition warrant. On April 7th the Magistrate wrote a letter to the Bengal Government reporting that the Police had arrested one Rahmat Ali on the requisition of the French authorities at Chandernagore, and saying that the man would be handed over to the French authorities on receipt of the formal sanction of Government to his extradition. On April 8th the Administrator of Chandernagore wrote to the Government of Bengal enclosing a warrant of arrest issued by the Juge d' Instruction against Rahmat Ali and two others, and asking for their extradition.

'On April 14th the Bengal Government sent a copy of the Administrator's letter with the warrant to the District Magistrate of Hooghly, directing him to take the necessary steps for arresting Rahmat Ali and making him over to the authorities at French Chandernagore under proper escort. This letter was forwarded to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Serampore on April 17th. By that time the petitioner had again been remanded to custody, and the date fixed for his production was April 29th. On April 22nd this Rule was issued by us, and in the meantime the petitioner was released on bail under the orders of the Sessions Judge.

The present position then is that the petitioner has been arrested but released on bail, and that the Government of Bengal has directed the Magistrate of Hooghly to make over the petitioner to the French authorities.

It was urged before us that the procedure was not in accordance with the provisions of Act XV of 1903, in particular because there was no enquiry held by the Magistrate of Serampore.

'Cause has been shown by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in a letter, and by Mr. Orr, verbally, on behalf of the Crown. Unfortunately, they do not take up the same line of reasoning. The learned Magistrate contends that his procedure is in accordance with sections 3 and 4 of the Act, while Mr. Orr says that those sections are not applicable to the circumstances.

It will be convenient to deal first with Mr. Orr's arguments, for, if he is right, it will not be necessary to consider the Magistrate's explanation. His argument is based on the first five paragraphs of part I of Mr. Muddiman's book on "The Law of Extradition from and to British India." It is as follows:—A Foreign State as defined by the Indian Extradition Act means a State to which, for the time being, the Extradition Acts 1870 and 1873 apply. Those Acts may be made applicable, by an order in Council, to any State with which an arrangement has been made with respect to the surrender to such State of any fugitive criminals. Such an arrangement was made with France by the Treaty of 1876, and an Order of Council, dated May 16th, 1878, made the Extradition Acts applicable to France. France is, therefore, a Foreign State. But it is argued that the East Indian possessions of France are not a Foreign State because a Treaty was made in regard to them in 1815, and in the Treaty of 1876 there was a clause excluding them from the operation of the later Treaty. The saving clause is the last clause of Article XVI of the Treaty. Mr. Orr urges, in accordance with Mr. Muddiman's view, that the effect of that clause is to place the French possessions in British India entirely outside the Treaty of 1876. The same view is expressed by Sir Francis Piggot at page 187 of his work on Extradition, where he says: "In the Treaty with France, the arrangement established in the East Indian possessions of the two countries by the Treaty of 1815 is preserved." I think that an examination of the Treaty of 1876 shows that view to be correct. Article 1 sets out that the High Contracting Parties make an engagement; then follows an exception for native born and naturalised citizens, then an enumeration of extraditable offences, then a stipulation as to the fugitive being tried for the offence in respect of which he has been surrendered, and then a saving as to political offences. Beginning with Article VI is a series of articles as to the manner in which the extradition shall take place, first on the part of the French Government in France, and then in the dominions of Her Brittanic Majesty, other than the Colonies or Foreign Possessions of Her Majesty. Then Article XVI deals with the manner of proceeding in the Colonies and Foreign Possessions of the two High Contracting Parties, and Consuls and Governors are substituted for Ambassadors and Ministers, but the methods are to be, as nearly as possible, according to the provisions set out in the earlier articles. The last clause of that article, however, runs: "The foregoing stipulations shall not in any way affect the arrangements established in the East Indian possessions of the two countries by the IXth Article of the Treaty of the 7th March 1815."

We have been asked to hold that the meaning of this clause is nothing more than that the reference to the Chief Consular Officer shall not apply in the case of the East Indian Possessions of the two countries. Such a construction is opposed to the plain meaning of the words, and I have no doubt that by that last clause in Article XVI the East Indian Possessions of the two countries are entirely excluded from the Treaty arrangements of 1876.

That being so, the provisions of Chapter II of the Extradition Act have no application here, and we have to turn to Chapter III. Sections 7, 8, 8A contemplate States where there is a Political Agent and therefore cannot apply to Franch Chandernagore. The ninth section, however, is general, it directs that a requisition from a non-Foreign State shall be dealt with in the same manner as a requisition from a Foreign State. This direction seems to obliterate the difference between Foreign and non-Foreign States, but section 18 lays down that nothing in this chapter shall derogate from the provisions of any Treaty for the extradition of offenders, and the procedure provided by any such Treaty shall be followed in any case to which it applies, and the provisions of this Act shall be modified accordingly. The question then is whether Article IX of the Treaty of 1815 is of such a nature as to exclude the East Indian Possessions from the scope of section 9. It is true that the Article has none of the detail to be found in the Treaty of 1876, but that I have no doubts is to be explained by the fact that the two Governments did not intend the procedure to be elaborate; the words are 'shall be delivered up' on the part of the British Government, 'shall be delivered up on demand being made' upon the part of the French Government. I think these words clearly mean that the procedure was to be summary. A comparison of the words in the Treaty of 1815 with the words used in the Treaty of 1802 concluded between Great Britain and France confirms this view, for in the Treaty of 1802 provision is made for a preliminary enquiry on the part of the authorities of the country where the fugitive is residing, and this fact warrants the inference that the omission to provide for such an enquiry in the Treaty of 1815 was intentional. The reasons for a difference in procedure are too obvious to need mentioning. In my opinion, therefore, the procedure that has been adopted in the present instance is in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of 1815. In this view it is unnecessary to deal with the explanation furnished by the Magistrate.

An argument was advanced that even if we hold that extradition proceedings with Chandernagore are governed by the Treaty of 1815, the subject has a right at common law to a preliminary enquiry before surrender. I think this view is fallacious. Extradition under any condition is an invasion of the common law right, and when there is a treaty, followed by a Statute recognising the Treaty, the procedure must be in accordance with the Treaty and Statute and no further condition can be imposed by the Courts.

I think, therefore, that the Rule should be discharged.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree

LACHMI NARAIN AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 103, 190 (1) (a), 200, 537—Search without witnesses, validity of—Complaint, cognisance of—Complainant, failure to examine, whether illegality—Irregularities in procedure—Prejudice to accused—Burden of proof—Opium Act (I of 1878), ss. 9 (c), 14, 20—Illegal possession of opium—Search after sunset without witnesses, validity of—Failure to forward opium seized to nearest Police station, effect of.

A Sub-Inspector of Excise entered the premises of the accused after sunset where he suspected contraband opium had been secreted; after entering the premises he sent for two search witnesses. A search was made and some opium was found. The Sub-Inspector thereupon arrested the accused and took him to the Police station, but conducted the investigation himself and retained the opium found on the premises, which he produced in Court when he made his statement. He submitted a report and charge sheet, and the Deputy Magistrate of the District took cognizance of the case, treating the report of the Excise Sub-Inspector as a Police report, and convicted the accused under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act. On appeal the Sessions Judge upheld the conviction, pointing out that the Excise Sub-Inspector's report was wrongly treated by the Magistrate as a Police report, and that he must have taken cognizance of the case under section 190 (1) (a) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused moved the High Court on revision:

Held, (1) that the proceedings before the Magistrate were irregular, inasmuch as he was not properly in seizin of the case—there was no regular complaint before him, and, even if there was, his omission to examine the complainant on oath as required by section 200 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was an illegality which vitiated the proceedings. [p. 151, col. 1.]

(2) that apart from the foregoing, the conviction could not be maintained by reason of the following serious irregularities committed by the Excise Sub-Inspector, namely:—

(a) his entry of the premises after sunset in contravention of section 14 of the Opium Act; [p. 151, col. 2.]

(c) his keeping the investigation in his own hands and not delivering up the opium found to the nearest Police station, in spite of the peremptory provisions of section 20 of the Opium Act. [p. 152, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dismissing the appeal of the petitioners against the order of the Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Patna City, convicting the petitioners under section 9 (c) of the Opium Act.

Messrs. Younus, P. S. Varma and Rajendra Prasad, for the Petitioners.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners have been convicted under section 9 (c) of Act I of 1878 by the Deputy Magistrate in charge of Patna City and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months. The appeal to the learned Sessions Judge of Patna was dismissed. Shortly stated the facts are as follows:—

On the 27th October 1918, Tirbeni, who is an Excise Sub-Inspector, happened to pass an opium shop in which the petitioners served as salesmen. He entered the shop, checked the opium and found that the opium in the premises tallied with the account-books. He says that he had some suspicion that there might be opium in an adjoining house and in company with another Sub Inspector, who happened to come on the scene, he entered the adjoining house and then sent the other Sub-Inspector, whose name is Waraeat Hussain, to get two search witnesses, and then they went to a particular room, found five cakes of opium weighing two Seers six Chbataks, and arrested one of the petitioners Lachmi Narayan, the other petitioner Paras Singh having run away. He took Lachmi Narain to the Police station, but conducted the investigation himself and submitted a report and a charge sheet upon which the learned Deputy Magistrate took cognizance.

The first question that has been argued before me is that the learned Deputy Magistrate was not properly in seizin of the case. As I have mentioned before, the prosecution was started on the report of Tirbeni and the learned Magistrate expressly states that he took cognizance on the report of Tirbeni, treating that report as a Police report.

This is wrong, as the learned Sessions Judge in his appellate judgment points out. But the learned Sessions Judge, making entirely a new case on behalf of the learned Deputy Magistrate, says that he must have taken cognizance under section 190 (1) (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But it appears that if the Deputy Magistrate took cognizance of this case under section 190 (1) (a) of the Code, he did not in fact examine the complainant as, in my opinion, he was bound to do under section 200 of the Code. It has been urged before me by the learned Government Pleader that omission to examine the complainant on oath is a mere irregularity which does not vitiate the subsequent criminal proceedings. I have dealt with this identical point this morning in Mangu Koeri v. Emperor (1) (Criminal Revision No. 88 of 1919), and I have come to the conclusion that the examination of the complainant on oath is not a mere formality, but a condition precedent which must be strictly complied with. In my opinion the filing of a petition of complaint is the act of the party, and it is incumbent on the Magistrate to show in some way that he intends to proceed with the matter, and the only way in which he can express that intention is by examining the complainant on oath. If authority is needed for the proposition, it will be found in the latest decision of this Court reported as Jhuna Lal Sahu v. Emperor (2). As a single Judge I am bound by the decision of this Court and agreeing with that decision I hold that the learned Deputy Magistrate was not properly in seizin of the case and that, therefore, all proceedings must be set aside.

But I do not rest my judgment on my view of law in this matter, because I am clearly of opinion that on facts there should not have been a conviction. The whole case must rest upon the evidence of the two Excise Sub-Inspectors, and it has been shown that they have been guilty of a series of irregularities which, in my judgment, have seriously prejudiced the petitioners. The whole judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is as serious an indictment of the methods adopted by Tirbeni as I have seen in the course of my experience and for the reasons which I shall presently give, it was, in my opinion, for the prosecution to show that having regard to the serious irregularities the accused were not prejudiced and that it was not for the accused to show that they were prejudiced.

In the first place, in contravention of the provisions of section 14 of the Opium Act the Sub-Inspector entered the premises after sunset, which he had no right to do. In the second place, in contravention of section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code he entered the premises without any search witnesses. The learned Sessions Judge himself says that unless the accused can show how he has been prejudiced by these irregularities, the conviction should stand. In my opinion these are statutory safeguards for the protection of accused persons so that it may not be in the power of Excise Officers or, for the matter of that, in the power of Police Officers to smuggle an article into a house and bolster up a false case against the persons with whom they may be on terms of enmity. It is with some object that the Legislature has provided the safeguards and when they are deliberately broken it is, in my opinion, not for the accused to show that they have been prejudiced. The prejudice is, in my opinion, on the face of the record. They should not have entered the premises without search witnesses, the object being that it may not be in their power to smuggle articles into the house and bolster up a false case against them.

But I am not setting aside the conviction on this technical ground. I have got to examine whether the evidence on which the petitioners have been convicted is evidence which should have been relied upon by the Courts below. No doubt they have been guilty of very serious irregularities, as I have mentioned above, but that is not all. Section 20 of the Opium Act provides that "Every person arrested, and thing seized, under section 14 or section 15, shall be forwarded without delay to the officer in charge of the nearest Police station; and every person arrested and thing seized under section 19 shall be forwarded without delay to the officer by whom the warrant was issued.

"Every officer to whom any person or thing is forwarded under this section shall, with all convenient despatch, take such measures as may be necessary for the disposal according to law of such person or thing". The provision as contained in section 20 of the Opium Act is peremptory and it gave no option to the Excise Sub-Inspector to keep investigation in his own hand, or to keep the things seized in his custody. The object of the section is plain. The object is that it may not be in his power to produce false evidence afterwards against the accused persons. But in this case he did not forward the opium seized to the nearest Police station either without delay or at all. He did not produce the opium seized until he gave his evidence in Court. Nor is this all. He kept investigation in his own hand, took a recognition bond from Lachmi Narain, whom he arrested, and which recognition bond contained a full confession of the guilt of Lachmi Narain. It has been found by the Court below that the thumb impression purporting to be the thumb impression of Lachmi Narain in the recognition bond in fact is not his thumb impression. The conclusion is that the document has been forged by somebody and as it has been produced by Tirbeni for the purpose of securing the conviction of the petitioners, very grave suspicion must attach to the part played by Tirbeni in the matter of arrest of the petitioners.

And yet the petitioners have been convicted on an admission alleged to have been made by Lachmi Narain to Tirbeni. It seems to me that it is impossible to rely upon the evidence of Tirbeni, having regard to the fact that the learned Sessions Judge has himself recorded a finding that the document produced by Tirbeni is not the document to which Lachmi Narain affixed his thumb impression. That being so, in my opinion the conviction must fail, both on facts and on law.

I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and the sentence passed on the petitioners.

Sentence set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 423—Appeal—Appellant, absence of, effect of—Procedure—Appellate Court, duty of.

In dealing with the petition of appeal of a person convicted of a criminal offence, the Appellate Court is bound, in all cases where the appellant is not represented personally or by Pleader, to peruse the petition of appeal and the copy of the judgment accompanying it, and determine upon such perusal whether the appeal should be admitted or summarily rejected, and if the appeal is admitted, to consider whether there is any ground for interfering with the conviction or sentence It is illegal to record an order dismissing an appeal "in default," as such an order is not contemplated by the provisions of section 423 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 153, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The accused-applicants were charged in this case for committing offences under sections 426 and 447 of the Indian Penal Code. The trying Magistrate convicted them. They appealed to the District Magistrate, who, without saying whether the appeal was admitted or not, directed notice to issue to the complainants and fixed the 18th December 1918 for the hearing of the appeal, at a place called Ram Ganj. The appeal was, however, taken up for hearing at a place called Saifabad, which is about four miles from Ram Ganj. The accused persons were not present there and were not represented. The complainants were present. The learned District Magistrate, without considering the petition of appeal or the judgment of the trial Court, dismissed the appeal "in default." On the next day he was moved to restore the appeal but he refused to re-hear the appeal, observing that as a matter of fact he had reason to believe that the accused persons were present in Saifabad on the previous afternoon and that they were not represented because they did not pay their Pleader his full fee.

It does not appear whether the statement that the accused persons were present on the previous day in Saifabad is based on a surmise or on an allegation made by the complainants or some one else. There is no evidence on the record to show that the accused persons had deliberately absented themselves. In any case even if the accused persons were absent, it was the duty of the learned District Magistrate to have considered the petition of appeal and the judgment of the trying Court and to have either summarily rejected the appeal, if it had not till then been admitted, in case that was his view, or to have gone into the evidence and considered the case on the merits. His order merely states that the appeal was dismissed for default. But such an order is not contemplated by section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

As pointed out in Koura v. Queen-Empress (1) and Queen-Empress v. Pohpi (2), the Appellate Court is bound in all cases, where the appellant is not represented personally or by Pleader, to peruse the petition of appeal and the copy of judgment accompanying it and determine upon such perusal whether the appeal is to be admitted or summarily rejected, and if it decides to admit the appeal, to consider whether there is any ground for interfering with the conviction or sentence. As the order of the learned District Magistrate does not indicate that this had been done, this application is allowed and the case sent back to the Court below with a direction to restore the appeal under its original number and to dispose of it after hearing the Counsel for the accused or the accused, if they appear, in the manner required by law.

Opium Act (I of 1878), ss 9 (c), (e), 14—Illegality in exercise of right of search, whether invalidates conviction.

Mere illegality in the exercise of the right of search under the Opium Act is not in itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a conviction under the Act. [p. 154, col. 2; p. 155, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Muzafferpur, dated the 27th May 1919, affirming in appeal the conviction of the petitioners by the Deputy Magistrate, Motihari, under section 9 (c), (e) of the Opium Act I of 1878, by his order dated the 21st March 1919.

FACTS.—This case was originally heard by Atkinson, J., who in view of the decision of Das, J., in Criminal Revision No. 120 of 1919 Lachmi Narain v Emperor (1)] referred the case to the Divisional Bench by the following order, which fully states the facts: "The petitioners in this application in criminal revision were convicted of offences under section 9, sub-sections (c), (e) of the Opium Act of 1878. The learned Deputy Magistrate of Motihari, Mr. Ritchie, convicted both the accused and sentenced them to one year's rigorous imprisonment coupled with a fine of Rs. 200 each. The order of Mr. Ritchie was dated the 22nd March 1919.

The accused appealed and the appeal came before the learned Sessions Judge of Muzafferpur. The learned Sessions Judge affirmed the conviction of both the accused and imposed a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment upon each of the accused and a fine of Rs. 200 upon the petitioner Lalu Pandit and a fine of Rs. 25 upon the petitioner Ali Raza.

When Mr. Justice Jawala Prasad and myself were sitting as the Criminal Bench of this Court, we allowed notice to issue on the petitioners' petition herein for the purpose of showing cause why the order of the learned Sessions Judge in appeal should not be set aside, and the ground on which we were pleased to allow notice to issue was because it was stated to us that the provisions of section 14 of the Opium Act of 1878 had not been complied with by the authorities charged with the duty of enforcing the provisions of the Opium Act and that the search contemplated by section 14 of the Opium Act had not been duly and regularly made in accordance with the requirements of the Act, inasmuch as the search that was made in this particular case was effected at hours other than between sunrise and sunset; and consequently we were of opinion, having regard to the ruling of my learned brother Das, J., in Criminal Revision No. 120 of 1919 [Lachmi Narain v. Emperor (1)] that notice should issue for the purpose of testing the validity of the conviction of the accused.

Had it not been for the decision of my learned brother Das, J., I would have little hesitation in disposing of this case myself but out of respect for the authority which I entertain for the opinion of my brother Das, J., I think it desirable that this case should be disposed of by a Division Bench of this Court.

Mr. Justice Das laid down, in the criminal revision application to which I have referred, that if the authorities charged with administration of the Opium Act are guilty of any illegality in exercise of the right of search conferred upon them by the provisions of section 14 of the Opium Act that such illegality per se renders it impossible, as a proposition of law, to bring an offender against the provisions of the Opium Act to justice in respect of a crime committed and substantiated by clear and convincing evidence aliunde, and that in such case, and in such event, the accused must be acquitted of the established crime which he has committed.

I cannot subscribe to the expression of this dictum, as a proposition of law, laid down by my learned brother and it seems to me to be in conflict with general legal principles and with the established current of recent authority in this country.

The rulings reported as Emperor v. Allahdad Khan (2), Emperor v. Madho Dhobi (3) and Emperor v. Ravalu Kasigadu (4) lead to the conclusion that mere illegality committed in the exercise of a right of search does not of necessity destroy the fact of criminality, if a crime be proved otherwise to have been committed by a person against whom a crime is charged under the Opium Act or any kindred Act.

If the right of search be illegally performed and executed, this may constitute a civil injury for which damages may be recovered, but it cannot, in my opinion, wholly destroy or render nugatory the act or fact of criminality if a crime be otherwise proved to have been committed.

In my opinion it is, therefore, desirable that the law should be conclusively decided and settled on this point in this Province, and consequently at the wish of the parties I transfer this case to be decided by the appropriate Bench of this Court".

Mr. S. P. Varma, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad, Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an application in revision by two persons Lalu Pandit and Ali Raza, who have been convicted of offences under section 9, sub-sections (c) and (e) of the Opium Act, Act I of 1878, and sentenced respectively to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, or in default one month's further rigorous imprisonment and three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25, or in default two weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

The only point which is urged before us is that the conviction is illegal because the provisions of section 14 of the Opium Act have not been complied with in this case, and reliance is placed upon an expression of opinion by Mr. Justice Das in an unreported* case in this Court. On examining this judgment, however, it appears that this is not the basis of Mr. Justice Das' decision and the decisions of other High Courts in India appear to be against the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners. The matter has been fully considered in Emperor v. Allahdad Khan (2), Emperor v. Madho Dhobi (3), Emperor v. Ravalu Kesigadu (4) and Emperor v. Vinayak Damodar Savarkar (5), and these decisions are clear authority for the view that mere Criminal trial—Conviction—Proof—Moral conviction, whether sufficient.

A finding based on a theory not merely unsupported by, but opposed to, the direct evidence available is bad in law. Similarly a moral conviction of guilt is no sufficient foundation for a verdict of guilty, unless it is based on substantial facts which lead to no other reasonable conclusion than that the person charged is guilty. [p. 156, cols. 1 & 2]

Queen v. Sorob Roy, 5 W. R 28 Cr, approved.

Appeal from the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Wardha, dated the 24th May 1915, in Sessions Trial No. 13 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Gulzar Shah, a Mahomedan aged about 40, along with Godria Kunbi, aged about 20, was tried by the Additional Sessions Judge, Wardha, on a charge of raping Kisni Loharin, aged 25 years. Both were acquitted of that charge, but the appellant alone was convicted of having indecently assaulted Kisni with intent to outrage her modesty and sentenced under section 354, Indian Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

In an exhaustive judgment the learned Judge has given convincing reasons for holding that Kisni's story is untrue. Both the assessors held the same view, and further gave it as their opinion that no indecent assault was committed. In convicting the appellant under section 354 the Additional Sessions Judge has been greatly influenced by the difficulty of explaining, in the defence set up, how an entirely false story came to be told by Kisni to the constable at her village the same night and again to the Sub-Inspector next day at noon.

There can be no doubt that Kisni started from Alipur on the evening of Saturday the 20th March last. She sat with the appellant in his cart while Godria drove. Her account of how she came to do this has been rightly disbelieved. As to Gulzar there is perfectly credible evidence to support his story that his own object was to bring kutar from Eranwari, a village 2 miles from Alipur. Eranwari containe a shrine of the goddess Debi, and Gulzar says that Kisni took a lift in his cart to go there. No evidence whatever is forthcoming to show that Kisni reached Eranwari that evening. On the other hand, Walia Khatik and Aba Simpi (P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 2) support Kisni in her story that she returned to Alipur with them from a spot only 1¼ miles from that village. Aba went to that spot on hearing a woman's cry for help, but saw no act amounting to an offence being committed: both Kisni and Gulzar were arranging their clothes and the former alleged that Gulzar had dishonoured her majhi izzat ghetli: whereupon he scolded Gulzar, who without speaking got in to his cart and drove on with Godria towards Eranwari. Walia professes to have seen Gulzar on Kisni, but on this point he is undoubtedly lying: according to him Aba on coming up said nothing to anyone and Gulzar drove off at once towards Eranwari. Neither man lends any support to Kisni's allegation that Godria held her hand while Gulzar had connection with her.

The Additional Sessions Judge has believed Aba's evidence in the main. Nevertheless he has come to a conclusion as to what happened in the cart, which is not supported by Aba's account of how Kisni described the incident immediately after its occurrence. According to that account Gulzar dragged Kisni out of the cart. The learned Judge's finding is:—

"Gulzar began taking liberties with Kisni. She resented it, not because her morals were all correct or because she was unaccustomed to such treatment, but because there was another man in the cart. Even depraved women have the ideas of decency. Gulzar, knowing her past history, did not expect an opposition from her and counted too much upon her loose character. Kisni, not liking the liberties which Gulzar was taking, got down. He too got down after her and began to lay his hands on her. She raised a cry and Walia and Aba arrived. Gulzar does not appear to have done anything more than this or gone beyond an ordinary indecent assault."

Now even Kisni herself did not suggest at the trial that any liberty was taken with her in the cart beyond preventing her from getting out. She deposed that she jumped out and was followed by Gulzar. That any violence was used or impropriety attempted in the cart seems to me most improbable, in view of the fact found by the Judge that Godria was there and that by mere accident, not by design connected with any evil intention of Gulzar towards Kisni. If a finding not supported by positive evidence is to be adopted, it may very plausibly be urged that Walia, in his search for his lost sheep, came suddenly on Kisni and Gulzar in a compromising position and that Kisni invented her story to excuse herself. That Walia and Kisni are anything but strangers to each other is shown by Aba and believed by the Additional Sessions Judge

Having given all the evidence my careful consideration, I conclude that it would be unsafe to uphold the conviction under section 354, Indian Penal Code, based as it is on a theory not merely unsupported by, but opposed to, the direct evidence available. The Additional Sessions Judge seems to have acted upon moral conviction that the appellant must have done something improper and thus to have been led into punishing him for a definite offence without being really able to indicate a definite act established by satisfactory evidence and constituting that offence. As remarked by Macpherson and Glover, JJ., in Queen v. Sorob Roy (1), a moral conviction of guilt is no sufficient foundation for a verdict of guilty, unless it is based on substantial facts which lead to no other reasonable conclusion than that the person charged is guilty.

The appellant is accordingly acquitted, and will forthwith be set at liberty.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal trial—Defence witnesses, credibility of—Insinuation as to relation with accused unsupported by record, value of—Court, duty of.

The mere fact that some of the witnesses for the defence are fellow-castemen of the accused is no ground for discrediting their evidence. [p. 158, col.1.]

A Court ought not to permit the making of insinuations by the Police as to the defence witnesses being related to the accused, especially when there is nothing on the record to support such insinuation, and the witnesses have not been questioned with reference thereto. [p. 158, col 1.]

Application against the order of the District Magistrate, Sultanpur, dated the 24th February 1919, upholding that of the Deputy Magistrate, 1st Class, Sultanpur, dated the 15th November 1919.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Rameshar, has been bound over to be of good behaviour for a period of one year under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The charge against him is that he habitually commits thefts and house-breaking. He has had no previous conviction. His history sheet was started in 1913 but was closed soon afterwards.

In July 1917 the brother and the uncle of Rameshar filed a complaint against two constables, stating that the said constables had come to their house to enquire where Rameshar was and that on their telling them that he had gone to another village they abused them, tied their hands behind their backs and took them to the Police station under confinement. This charge was subsequently withdrawn. The history sheet of Rameshar was started afresh three months before the present trial began. On the 12th September 1918 he was arrested under section 55 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the next day he was produced before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who, acting on a report made by the Police, passed an order under section 112 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requiring him to show cause why he should not be bound over to be of good behaviour for a period of one year. No time was allowed to him to show cause against the proceeding or to make an adequate arrangement for his defence. The trial began at once with the examination of the Sub-Inspector and was continued on the next day at a place where the Magistrate was in camp, when the remaining witnesses for the prosecution were examined. The Pleader for Rameshar was, however, unable to be present and, beyond such questions as the applicant had himself chosen to put, no proper cross-examination of those witnesses took place. A date was then fixed for the examination of the witnesses for the defence.

Meanwhile, Jokhan stood surety for the appearance of the applicant, who was thereupon released from custody. On the 24th September 1918 the applicant was asked by the District Magistrate whether he was willing to be recruited for field service and told that if he was ready, the case would be withdrawn. But the applicant refused to go. On the same day Jokhan filed an application withdrawing his suretyship. The applicant was thereupon remanded to custody and the prosecution directed to proceed. Dwarka Dube subsequently offered to stand bail for the applicant. His surety bond was accepted and the applicant was released, but about a month later Dwarka also withdrew his bail and the applicant was again remanded to custody. On the same day another person named Babu Chaube offered to stand bail for the applicant. He too withdrew a week later. Rae Shambhu Nath, the Sub-Government Pleader of Sultanpur, then offered to stand bail for him and he was released.

The learned Counsel for the applicant has referred to these incidents to show how far his client was hampered in his defence. In fact he suggests that the witnesses for the prosecution, who were examined on the 14th September 1918, were examined in the morning, so that it was not possible for the Pleader for the accused to have been present at the time of the examination of those witnesses. The evidence for the prosecution was completed within a day of the service of the notice.

Except Khunkhun Tewari, not one of the witnesses produced for the prosecution is a resident of Gobindpur where the applicant resides. There has been an ill-feeling for some time between the applicant and Khunkhun Tewari. A theft was committed at the house of Khunkhun in Magh last, of which a report was made to the Police. Khunkhun suspected the applicant. The house of the applicant was searched but nothing incriminating was found. The applicant stated that he had been named out of enmity and asked for the prosecution of Khunkhun under sections 182/211 of the Indian Penal Code, but his application was disallowed. Khunkhun now states that his wife had seen her stolen box being burnt in the house of Musammat Ramjhari and that the applicant was present in her house at the time But his wife has not been produced and no value can be attached to his statement.

The other witnesses for the prosecution are residents of other villages. Their evidence is of little value, when it is remembered that the witnesses belonging to the village tell a different tale, and the Police had decided to close the history sheet of Rameshar as far back as 1914, shortly after it was opened. Balli, a cultivator of Gobindpur and a co-sharer in Muhammadpur, states that he lived at the distance of one bigha from the house of the applicant and knew him from 20 or 25 years, that he cultivated land and had three ploughs and that his character was good. Sarju Prasad, the headman of Gobindpur, deposes that the applicant cultivated land and had three ploughs and was of good character, that he heard no complaints against him and that the Sub-Inspector made no enquiry into the village about his character. Bhaudat, another cultivator of the village paying Rs. 100 per year, similarly gives the applicant a good character. Sampat Lal, the Patwari of the village, says the same. Bisheshar, Ramrup and Kanhaiya, co-sharers of Gobindpur, depose that the applicant was of good character and that they never heard any complaints against him. Three residents of adjoining villages, one of whom pays a land-revenue of Rs. 150 per year, give similar evidence.

The Circle-Inspector told the District Magistrate that six of the defence witnesses were related to the applicant, but it does not appear whether his statement was based on personal knowledge or on a result of an enquiry made privately by him. If it was based on the latter, it is surprising that no question was put with reference thereto to the witnesses when they were under cross-examination. He further stated that the applicant helped several influential Kayasthas in the Zamindari affairs, in consequence of which pressure was brought to bear upon Sarju Prasad, the headman of Gobindpur, who was a Kayastha himself, to give evidence in support of the defence, but no question was put to the Patwari to ascertain how many Kayastha Zamindars were there in the village and a general insinuation of that character ought not to have been allowed to be introduced into the evidence, particularly during the hearing of the appeal, based not on personal knowledge but on the enquiries which the witness is alleged to have made. As pointed out in Miharban Singh v. Emperor(1) and Gur Bakhsh Singh v. Emperor (2), the evidence of persons produced in defence is not to be discredited merely because some of the witnesses produced are fellow-castemen of the accused. There is nothing to show that they were related to the applicant. The circumstances in which the history sheet of the applicant was re opened before the trial began may have had no connection with the offer made to the applicant during the course of the trial that the prosecution would be withdrawn, if he was willing to be recruited for field service. But the evidence adduced for the prosecution is far from convincing and no sufficient ground for taking proceeding under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure has been made out.

The application is, therefore, allowed, the order of the Courts below is set aside and the security bond filed, if any, will be discharged.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 117 (4) —Joint enquiry, whether permissible—Prejudice to accused.

Although in cases of joint inquiries there is a danger of one accused being prejudiced through the evidence against another, which does not directly affect him, being on the record, the law nevertheless allows joint inquiries under section 117, clause (4), of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate, Fatehpur, dated the 17th June 1919.

Mr. S. C. Mukerji, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by one Sheo Sahai for revision of an order of a Magistrate of the first class binding him over under section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The order was upheld in appeal by the District Magistrate of Fatehpur. The learned Advocate for the petitioner complains that his client has been tried jointly with one Attal Singh; that legally no case has been made out under section 117, clause 4, of the Code of Criminal Procedure justifying such joint trial, as it has not been shown that Attal Singh and the petitioner have been associated together in the matter under enquiry. It is further argued that even if on a strictly technical interpretation of the section the joint trial was legal, nevertheless the applicant has been greatly prejudiced in consequence of the evidence of five witnesses who gave evidence against Attal Singh alone. It is quite true, as Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji remarks, that in cases of joint enquiry there is danger of one accused being prejudiced through the evidence against another accused, which does not directly affect him, being on the record. The law, however, does allow joint trial under section 117, clause 4, of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and I am not prepared to say that the trial Court and the District Magistrate were wrong in their appreciation of the evidence before them. I, therefore, dismiss this application.

Application dismissed.

Appeal from the judgment and finding of the District Magistrate of Narsingpur, dated the 22nd June 1915.

Mr. G. P. Dick (Standing Counsel), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Standing Counsel has in this case been asked to argue the question whether the trial was legal with reference to the terms of section 234, Criminal Procedure Code. The appellant has been charged in the same trial and convicted in the same trial of two offences, one being under section 379, Indian Penal Code, and the other being under section 380, Indian Penal Code. Under section 234, Criminal Procedure Code, two offences are of the same kind when they are punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code. Offences under section 379 and 380 do not come under this description: they are not punishable with the same punishment under the same section. The learned District Magistrate has adopted a definition of his own, that offences are of the same kind when they are both cattle thefts of cattle stolen in the same district within the space of a month and sold at the same cattle market. This definition cannot take the place of that given in the Criminal Procedure Code.

None of the cases cited by the learned Standing Counsel are relevant, except the case of Bal Gangadhar Tilak, In re (1). The following remarks at page 238* may be quoted: "If the exceptions are mutually exclusive, the provisions of sections 236 or 237 could never be invoked to prevent a miscarriage of justice arising from a failure to make good all the details of a charge joined with two other charges under section 234.

"For example, if A were charged with three thefts in buildings within the year and the evidence established that in one case the theft was committed on the roof and not in the building, the accused could not be convicted of simple theft under the powers conferred by section 237, because the applicability of section 236 would be negatived by the mere fact of the joint trial under section 234. We find it difficult to believe that the Legislature intended that a joint trial of three offences under section 234 should prevent the prosecution from establishing at the same trial the minor or alternative degrees of criminality involved in the acts complained of."

Supposing the above remarks to express a correct view of the law, they do not apply in the present case. There is here no question, in regard of either offence, of a conviction of a minor or alternative offence to that charged. It is not a question of two charges under section 380, and a conviction for one offence under section 380 and for the other under section 379. But as regards one offence the accused has been charged under section 380 and convicted under that section, while as regards the other, he has been charged and convicted under section 379. He has not been convicted under section 379, though charged under section 380. And in neither case was he charged in the alternative under section 379 or 380. Thus neither section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, nor section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, can be read with section 234, Criminal Procedure Code, in this case.

The accused has been charged and tried in the same trial for two offences not of the same kind, and I cannot distinguish this case from that in Emperor v. Bisahu Panka (2), in which it was held that the accused could not be charged with and tried at one trial for three offences respectively under sections 380, 454 and 457 of the Penal Code, and that with reference to Subrahmania Ayyar v. Emperor (3) the whole trial was vitiated. I have, therefore, no alternative but to set aside the convictions and sentences, and to order a re trial, which must be by the District Magistrate, as there is no other Magistrate in the District with section 30 powers. In retrying the case the District Magistrate may well record the evidence in somewhat greater length and detail. Also I consider the evidence as to previous conviction extremely unsatisfactory. Even if finger prints are not available some more recent evidence than that produced is surely available, and some enquiry seems desirable as to whether the accused was really convicted of rape as he says, and whether the person convicted of rape was the same person as was convicted in the other cases. The convictions are set aside and a retrial ordered.

Retrial ordered.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133, 137—Removal of obstruction—Bona fide claim of right—Order directing institution of Civil suit within certain period, legality of—Evidence not taken, effect of.

In a proceeding under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, for the removal of an obstruction from a riverside ghat as being part of public way, the second party claimed the ghat as his private property, and the Magistrate, while declaring the good faith of the second party's claim, directed without taking any evidence that unless the second party sought to establish his right in the Civil Court within six months, his bona fides would be questioned again by the Magistrate:

Held, that the Magistrate's conditional order was bad in form and that he should not have made it without taking evidence from one side or the other.

Rule against the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Barrackpur.

ORDER.—This Rule relates to an order made in proceedings initiated under section 133 of the Criminal Procedure Code. By a conditional order made under that section, the petitioner was directed to remove an obstruction from a riverside ghat as being part of a public way. In showing cause against the order under section 137, the petitioner claimed that the ghat was his private property and denied that the public had a right of way over it. The question so raised was a question of title and, therefore, as the Magistrate very properly recognised, the further question arose whether the petitioner's claim was a bona fide claim or whether it was in the usual phrase "a mere pretence to oust the Magistrate's jurisdiction". He decided that further question, however, as a preliminary question without going into evidence. His conclusion was in favour of the petitioner's good faith, and he made an order so declaring and further directing that unless the second party sought to establish his right in the civil Court within six months, "his bona fides will be questioned again by this Court."

The petitioner does not complain of this order so far as it upholds his good faith, but he objects to so much of the order as throws upon him the burden of establishing his claim in the Civil Court.

In our opinion, regard being had to the circumstances, the Magistrate should not have made this order in the form which he made it without taking such evidence as might be adduced before him by one side or the other.

We, therefore, set aside the order and remit the case to the Magistrate to be taken up from the point at which it stood before the order was made, and disposed of in accordance with law.

Order set aside.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 11th and 12th February 1918 and having been posted to be spoken to on the 14th February 1918, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the District Judge of Cuddapah in a suit brought by the plaintiffs, who were the registered holders of the Karnam's office in this particular Inam village, to recover from the Shrotriemdars certain lands which, they contend, were emoluments of the Karnam's office. The District Judge has found, and his finding has not been and could not be seriously disputed, that these lands were Karnam's Inam and that they were excluded from the Shrotriem lands when the Shrotriem Inam was confirmed by the Inam Commission. Prima facie, the title to these lands was undoubtedly before the enfranchisement in the holders of the Karnam's office for the time being. The Karnam's office was a hereditary office, and these lands were annexed to the office for its emoluments and the holders of the office for the time being were entitled to them. The District Judge has, however, found in this case that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation on the ground that these lands have, for a very long time, been in possession of the Shrotriemdars. On the other side, reliance is placed upon the fact that the Shrotriemdars have all along been making payments of Rs. 25 annually to the Karnam in office, and the Shrotriemdars have not proved by affirmative evidence that they were trespassers and in possession as such. Having regard to the fact that this was a Karnam's Inam and to the annual payments to the Karnam for the time being and to the fact that they might very well have got into possession by some arrangement as to management owing to the incapacity of the Karnam, we think that the District Judge has placed the onus on the wrong side, and that the onus is strongly upon the Shrotriemdars to show that their possession was not permissive but adverse and they failed to discharge that onus. It is not necessary to rely on the oral evidence on either side which, in a case like this, is often exceedingly inconclusive. There is a document, Exhibit P1, which throws considerable light upon this case. It is an order by the Settlement Officer for the enfranchisement of the Karnam's Inam, and it affords evidence of certain transactions of which other evidence is not forthcoming. It is found by the Settlement Officer that, for 21 years from 1877 to 1898, Narasinga Row was the Karnam, that, under Regulation VI of 1831, he sued the Shrotriemdars for possession of these very lands and that he obtained a consent judgment in a summary suit in a Revenue Court. It is said that this was never executed because all the Shrotriemdars were not parties, but the fact that many of them consented to the restoration of the lands goes far to support the case for the plaintiffs that their occupation was permissive. We have been referred to Exhibits K and L, but they do not help us. Exhibit K is simply a takid from the Tahsildar to the Shrotriemdars telling them to see that the Karnam, who had acted during the suspension of the holder of the office, should be paid by the principal Karnam for his work out of the Inam Taram. Similarly Exhibit L is a receipt given by the acting Karnam to the Karnam for such a payment. It is said on the other side that it is unlikely, if there had really been a lease and if the possession had been permissive, the Shrotriemdars would have been allowed to continue in possession for such a small payment as Rs. 25 annually. There is no doubt some force in this contention, but the facts of the case are very obscure, and, as we have said, we do not think that this is sufficient to rebut the inference which arises from some of the outstanding facts that the defendants' possession was permissive.

The other question is that of misjoinder or non-joinder. It is said that this suit ought to have been brought by the mother of the plaintiffs, who was the daughter of Narasinga Row, the last Karnam. That is a complete misconception. The office under the Madras Regulation II of 1894 devolves upon the next male heirs. Therefore this woman, the plaintiffs' mother, never succeeded to the office. At the time of the enfranchisement, the plaintiffs were minors, but the office had been registered in their names, omitting their elder brother, who was entitled to some other Karnam's office and was held not capable of holding two Karnam's offices at the same time. The plaintiffs were minors and the effect of the registry was only to keep alive their claims to the office as soon as either of them became capable of filling it. In these circumstances the Karnam's Inam was enfranchised, but it was in their favour. As we have said, up to the time of enfranchisement, the lands were annexed to the Karnam's office and enjoyed by the holder of the office for the time being, who was the only person who had any right to them. In a Full Bench case in Pingala Lakshmipati v. Bommireddipalli Chalamayya(1) overruling several other cases, and following the judgment of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (2), it was held that "the enfranchisement disannexes the Inam from the office, converts it into ordinary property and releases the reversionary rights of the Crown in the Inam, but does not confer on the persons named in the title deed any right in derogation of those possessed by other persons in the Inam at the time of the enfranchisement." Applying that to this case, the result is that the land which had been an endowment of a hereditary office came to be held by the family which was entitled to the office. The registered holders of the Inam were plaintiffs and there can be no doubt that they would have been entitled to sue to recover the Inam before the enfranchisement. We do not think that they ceased by virtue of the enfranchisement to represent the Inam for the purpose of recovering it. As we hold that the possession was permissive on the date of the suit, there will be no question of limitation. As regards the question of mesne profits, Mr. Venkatarama Aiyar has pointed out that, on the date of the enfranchisement, the plaintiffs' elder brother was a major and would have been entitled to sue to recover the Inam and also to recover mesne profits, and that so far as mesne profits are concerned, time should be considered to have run as against him and against the plaintiffs also, and, therefore, their claim for mesne profits must be considered to be barred except as to three years before the suit. We accordingly give judgment for possession with mesne profits for three years before suit and subsequent mesne profits until delivery of possession.

As there is no finding on the 5th issue we have decided to call for a finding on that issue on the evidence on record, and also for a finding as to the rate of mesne profits as to which fresh evidence may be taken. Findings should be submitted in two months. Seven days are allowed for objections.

In compliance with the above order in the judgment, the District Judge of Cuddapah submitted the following

FINDING.—I am directed to record a finding on the evidence on record on the fifth issue: "Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the madava rights claimed in the plaint schedule for the plaint lands or any of them" and also on the issue "What is the rate of mesne profits to which the plaintiffs are entitled per year." On this issue the parties were allowed to adduce further evidence.

(1) 30 M. 434; 17 M. L. J. 101 (F. B.); 2 M. L. T. 101.
(2) 26 M. 339.

2. The issue as to mesne profits can be easily disposed of. Plaintiff witness No. 5, the 2nd plaintiff's uncle, says that during the three years before suit and the three years after the institution of the suit, the net income of the lands has been Rs. 75-0-0 per annum. The 1st defendant, in the witness-box, says the net income has been about Rs. 70 to 75, not more than Rs. 75. There is no more evidence. I find that the rate of mesne profits to which the plaintiffs are entitled per year is Rs. 75.

3. The other question is not so easy. The madava right is claimed only for item No. 8, i.e., wet Paimash number 17. The plaintiffs aver that this land is entitled to irrigation, under the Dasabandham channel. The defendants now admit this, though nothing is said about this in the written statements. But the plaintiffs in their schedule have described the channel as No. 3 channel and the defendants in their written statements deny that plaintiffs are entitled to any right in that channel, and some of the defendants specifically say that No. 3 channel is a private channel belonging to the Shrotriemdar. Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 say that there are two channels for the wet Inams, namely, Dasabandham channel and their own channel, and the Dasabandham channel ceased to flow, and, therefore, the defendants alone are entitled to the private channel.

4. The question, therefore, seems to be whether the No. 3 channel is a private channel of the Shrotriemdars or whether it is the Dasabandham channel.

5. I do not think the documentary evidence throws much light on this question. It shows that the land is double crop wet, but it does not show that the source of irrigation is No. 3 channel. Exhibit I requires some consideration. This is a maintenance deed and it shows that Vengamagari Madi, the Paimash number in question, is under No. 3 channel. But the defendants point out that the land referred to in Exhibit I is dry land and they say that the grant of the madava right in that case was a mere matter of grace in favour of a relation. They also point out that the source of irrigation for the wet land referred to in Exhibit I is the river channel and they want me, therefore to infer that the river channel is the Dasabandham channel as distinct from the No. 3 channel. But I do not think it is safe to draw that inference. It cannot be presumed that the river channel is the Dasabandham channel.

6. The defendants rely upon Exhibit XIV, an endorsement given by the Tahsildar stating that the Dasabandham channel is in a ruined condition, but that endorsement is scarcely sufficient by itself. The facts contained therein should be properly proved. Moreover, that Dasabandham channel is one that feeds the blacksmith Inam lands and may be a different channel.

It is necessary, therefore, to examine the oral evidence to determine the question. The parties do not seem to have made a real effort to thresh out this question properly. P. W. No. 1 in examination in-chief says that the Dasabandham channel irrigates the wet land. In cross-examination he says that this channel is otherwise known as No. 3 channel. He is the only witness on the side of the plaintiffs who speaks about this matter.

8. Defendants' witness No. 1 is 1st defendant. He says that the channel which now runs through the Shrotriem is their own channel and not a Dasabandham channel. In November 1903 the Dasabandham channel, he says, became ruined and silted up on account of floods and is not in use now. Then he refers to Exhibit XIV. With regard to Exhibit I he says that number 77 therein is a mistake for 73.

9. In cross-examination he says that the Shrotriemdars were given Dasabandham Inam by the Sircar and they are still enjoying that Inam which was granted for keeping the channel in good repair He says the Sircar gave them notice to repair the channel and they spent about Rs. 2,000 but the repairs are not complete, but the Inam has not been resumed. He says the Dasabandham channel is in the river itself and the private channel starts from the bank of the river, and that is how it was not silted up at the time of the flood.

10. There is no other evidence on this subject.

11. The plaintiffs claim madava right in No. 3 channel only for item No. 8. They assert that No. 3 channel is the same as Dasabandham channel. Exhibits I, IX, X, XI show that in connection with the irrigation of Vengamagari Madi, which is partly wet and partly dry cultivated wet, three channels are mentioned, i. e., No. 3 channel, a river channel, and a Dasabandham channel. But considering the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence it is not possible to say if these are three separate channels or branches of the same channel or the same channel under different names. P. W. No. 1 swears that the Dasabandham channel is otherwise known as the "third channel." The 1st defendant tries to meet this by saying that the Dasabandham channel is out of repair, but I do not think he has proved it properly. The alleged notices issued by Government have not been produced. Under these circumstances, I find that plaintiffs are entitled to the madara right in No. 3 channel as claimed in the plaint for item No. 8 alone.

This appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and allow mesne profits at Rs 75 per annum, and declare that plaintiff is entitled to madara right as regards item No. 8 from channel No. 3. These provisions will be incorporated in our decree.

Respondents will pay the costs throughout.

In a suit by a reversioner on the death of a widow, in which he challenges the binding nature of a decree against the widow, the onus is on him to prove that there has not been a fair trial of the right in suit. [p. 165, col. 1.]

Where a decree is passed against a widow on a ground personal to herself, and which would not have been passed but for an admission made by her, her admission is not binding upon her reversioner. [p. 166, col. 1.]

The withdrawal of an appeal has the effect of making the decree appealed against final. [p. 166, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

SCOTT, C. J.—This is a suit by a reversioner to redeem a mortgage created by a Hindu widow Bai Bonji.

The original mortgage was in 1854. It was for the debts of the husband of Bonji. It was renewed in 1857 for the existing debts and certain further debts contracted by this widow. The latter mortgage is that in question in this suit. It contained among other provisions a Gahan Lahan clause that if the money was not paid within a year, the mortgagee should become the owner.

In 1865 a suit was filed by the widow Bonji to redeem the mortgage. It was dismissed by the Munsif, on the ground that the plaintiff had admitted in 1859, in a deposition given in a suit filed by the mortgagee against a tenant, that the mortgagee had become owner of the property by the operation of the Gahan Lahan clause. For this reason the Munsif did not apply to the case the decision in Ramji v. Chinto (1) decided in the previous year by the Bombay High Court, to the effect that notwithstanding a Gahan Lahan clause the doctrine 'once a mortgage always a mortgage' prevails in this Presidency.

Against the Munsif's decision an appeal was filed, but it was not heard, as before the hearing it was recorded as 'adjusted'. Bonji died in the year 1902. The reversioner sued within twelve years of her death for redemption. The defendant-mortgagee contends that the right of redemption is gone, and relies on the decree in the suit of 1865 in support of the plea of res judicata.

(1) 1 B. H. C. R. 199.

That a decree against a widow in relation to her husband's property may bind reversioners is well established, provided certain conditions exist. The leading case is Katama Natchier v. Raiah of Shivagunga (2). The doctrine applicable to the present suit is to be found at page 603 of that volume in the following passage: "It seems, however, to be necessary, in order to determine the mode in which this appeal ought to be disposed of, to consider the question whether the decree of 1847, if it had become final in Anga Mootoo Natchiar's lifetime, would have bound those claiming the Zemindary in succession to her. And their Lordships are of opinion that, unless it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or, in other words, unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground, it would have been an effectual bar to any new suit in the Zillah Court by any person claiming in succession to Anga Mootoo Natchiar. For assuming her to be entitled to the Zemindary at all, the whole estate would for the time be vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though, in some respects, for a qualified interest; and until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed. The same principle which has prevailed in the Courts of this country as to tenants in tail representing the inheritance, would seem to apply to the case of a Hindu widow; and it is obvious that there would be the greatest possible inconvenience in holding that the succeeding heirs were not bound by a decree fairly and properly obtained against the widow." It would appear from these remarks that the onus is on a reversioner challenging the conclusive nature of the decree against the widow on whose death he claims to prove that there has not been a fair trial of the right in suit. The question arises owing to the appeal filed by the widow, whether the termination of the suit in the manner in which it was disposed of can operate to bind the plaintiff. It is argued that the widow appealed, relying upon the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Ramji v. Chinto (1) and the inconclusive nature of her previous admission, and that, then, without apparent cause she abandoned the appeal. It is contended, as was found by the learned Judge in the trial Court, that Bonji cannot reasonably be said to have fairly and honestly contested the right and taken the steps necessary to protect the estate of which she was in charge for the time being as a Hindu widow. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has, however, considered the effect of the withdrawal of the appeal, and his finding is expressed in the following paragraph:— "There was no allegation in the pleadings that the withdrawal of the appeal was due to fraud, collusion, or compromise, and there is no legal proof either. It would be profitless to speculate as to the cause of the withdrawal. It was suggested that the first Court having in its judgment stated that Bonji had perjured herself, she must have got frightened lest the Court of Appeal should sanction her prosecution, if it came to hear the appeal. But this is mere conjecture and conjecture, however wellfounded, cannot be accepted as legal proof. It was also suggested that as the property was worth considerably more than the amount raised on it, and as the Munsif's decision was manifestly wrong, Bonji was unlikely to have withdrawn the appeal unless it was made worth her while to do so. But this, again, is mere suspicion which, though it may be well founded, cannot be acted upon. I, therefore, find that it is not shown that the withdrawal of the appeal was due to fraud, collusion, or compromise." He, therefore, held that the withdrawal of the appeal had the effect of making the decree of the first Court final, and as that decree was fairly and properly obtained in a suit contested up to decree, it fulfilled the conditions of the rule laid down in the Shivagunga's case (2) as amplified in the later cases. The later cases material to this point are Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (3), in which the daughter who represented the estate in a litigation had been negligent in applying for leave to appeal in forma pauperis against a decree which had been passed against her, and it was held that the dismissal of her application, with the result that she was unable to appeal at all for want of funds, was binding upon the reversioners. The case can only be put on the ground that the negligence of the person representing the estate may be relied upon by the opposite party for the purpose of barring the right of a reversioner subsequently to agitate the point which it was in the power of the negligent party to have had tried out in appeal. Other and later cases are Ghelabhai v. Bai Javer (4), very similar to the present case, and Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (5), the passage chiefly in point being at page 179*.

Being bound in second appeal to accept the finding of fact of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, which has been above set forth, I am of opinion that on that basis the learned Judge was right in holding that the withdrawal of the appeal has the effect of making the decree of the first Court final. The learned Judge, however, did not decide the case against the plaintiff, for he held that the decree in the Munsif's Court was given against the widow on a ground personal to herself inasmuch as the Munsif would not have so decided but for her admission, and that her admission in the litigation could be no more binding upon the reversioner than an alienation by her of her equity of redemption otherwise than for necessity. The question is whether the learned Judge is right in this conclusion.

In my opinion he is right. The suit was decided by the Munsif on the ground that notwithstanding the decree in Ramji v. Chinto (1), which had established for Gahan Lahan mortgages the principle of 'once a mortgage always a mortgage', the widow Bonji was concluded by an admission in a previous deposition to the effect that the mortgagee had become the full owner by operation of the Gahan Lahan clause. Such a decision cannot be rested on the doctrine of estoppel, for the mere admission of the widow in a deposition raised no estoppel although the Munsif seems to have treated Bonji as estopped from pleading that the equity of redemption remained in her. It was not an estoppel binding on Bonji's representatives, assuming that the reversioners of her husband can in the circumstances be treated as her representatives. The suit was dismissed in consequence of an unguarded statement by Bonji which could affect no one but herself. The plaintiff's case can, therefore, be put at least as high as that of the reversioner in Braja Lal Sen v. Jiban Krishna Roy (6), where a suit by a widow to set aside a sale had been dismissed mainly on the ground that the sale had been confirmed with the consent of the widow given upon receipt of Rs. 2,040 by her and the learned Judges Maclean, C. J., and Banerjee, J., said that having regard to the ground of dismissal, it would not be right to hold it a bar to the reversioners' claim. The only remaining question, therefore, is whether the suit is barred by limitation. Here again I think the learned Judge is right, for if the equity of redemption was only suspended during Bonji's lifetime, the reversioner being within sixty years would, even according to the Limitation Act of 1859, clause 15, be within time.

The decree of the lower Court must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

HAYWARD, J.—The plaintiffs sued defendants to redeem a possessory mortgage, dated 22nd December 1857. It was executed by the widow of the last male holder and contained a "Gahan Lahan" clause providing that the mortgagee should in default of due payment of the loan become owner of the property. It was admitted by the widow on 21st October 1859 in proceedings between the mortgagee and the tenants that the mortgagee had under the "Gahan Lahan" provision become owner of the property. She nevertheless sought some years later to repay the loan Rs. 2,300 and redeem the property valued at Rs. 13,000, but her suit was on the strength of her previous admission dismissed on 31st October 1865. It was, however, conceded in the judgment that otherwise the 'Gahan Lahan" provision would not have had the effect of making the mortgagee the owner of the property in view of the decision in Ramji v. Chinto (1). The widow appealed on the grounds that she was not bound by her admission in other proceedings and that the decision was directly opposed to the ruling in Ramji v. Chinto (1). The appeal was filed on 30th November 1865, but was withdrawn on payment of costs on 23rd January 1866. It was endorsed "adjusted" on 3rd February 1866. No further proceedings were taken and the widow died in 1902. The representatives of the reversioners brought the present proceedings for redemption against the representatives of the mortgagee in 1911. There was no question as to the propriety of the mortgage, nor on the other side was it disputed that the debt had long been liquidated out of the profits of the property. The substantial questions were whether the reversioners were bound by the decree against the widow and whether they were barred by limitation.

The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the reversioners were not bound as there had not been a fair trial of the right of the reversioners within the ruling in the Shivagunga's case (2) in that the widow had compromised the appeal. He thought the widow could not "under the circumstances be reasonably said to have fairly and honestly contested the right and taken the steps necessary to protect the estate of which she was in charge for the time being as a Hindu widow." The District Judge came to the same conclusion but by a more direct route. He considered that "the ground on which Bonji's (the widow's) suit was dismissed was her admission that the breach of the 'Gahan Lahan' clause had made the mortgagee owner" and that it was thus "dismissed on a ground personal to herself," and did not bar the reversioners. He considered that it was "not shown that the withdrawal of the appeal was due to fraud, collusion or compromise" and that "the case must be dealt with as if no appeal had been preferred." He thought that the ruling in the Shivagunga's case (2) did not support the proposition that "where the decree appears to be manifestly wrong, it is the widow's duty to appeal from it, and if she fails to do so, or having appealed fails to press the appeal to a decision, she shall be considered to have failed in her duty to protect the estate and the decree in that case will not bind the reversioners." It would seem, therefore, that he held that there had not been a fair trial of the right of the reversioners quite apart from what happened to the appeal. Both the Subordinate Judge and the District Judge held the reversioners were not barred by limitation.

We have, therefore, these established facts. The loan of Rs. 2,200 on mortgage of property worth Rs. 13,000 was permitted by the widow, on an admission extracted from her in other proceedings in direct opposition to the equitable rule "once a mortgage always a mortgage" recognised in Ramji v. Chinto (1), to result in the enlargement of the mortgagee's interest into full ownership without dispute in appeal. It seems to me impossible for us to say on these established facts that there was no justification for the view that there had been no fair trial of the right of the reversioners within the ruling in the Sivagunga's case (2)—the view held notwithstanding some differences of opinion as to what happened to the appeal by both the lower Courts. It seems to me that this case and indeed every other of this nature must be decided on its own particular merits. The admission of the widow here was apparently without consideration and without legal necessity. It was inconclusive and it would seem to have been insufficient even to bind her own limited interest in the equity of redemption. It was obviously ineffectual to transfer the important interest therein of the reversioners. The behaviour of the widow and the widow's interest were the subjects mentioned in the judgment. There was no reference whatever to the important interest of the reversioners. There was in effect a trial only of the right of the widow. There was not a fair trial, indeed there was no trial of the right of the reversioners. It seems to me that would be sufficient to exclude the trial from the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2) without going further and establishing fraud in the withdrawal of the appeal. It has somewhat similarly been held that suits against the widow for arrears of rent or maintenance chargeable to the estate were personally against the widow and did not involve the rights of the reversioners. There was no necessity, therefore, in those suits to establish fraud. They were Nugendrochunder Ghose v. Sreemutty Kamines

Dossee (7) and Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lall Awusti (8). It has also somewhat similarly been held that suits in which arbitration awards or compromises have been accepted by the widow would, quite apart from the fraud, not bind the reversioners. These have been detailed at pages 92 to 94* of Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (9). These rulings were there held inapplicable (at page 103*) but were not disapproved by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It would seem, therefore, that if there should be no real trial of the rights of the reversioners, it would be unnecessary to establish fraud to exclude the trial from the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2). If there should be a real trial of the rights of the reversioners, the effect would, of course, be nullified by proof of fraud. But there must be a real trial of the rights of the reversioners and there must also be freedom from fraud in order to provoke the rule in the Shivagunga's case (2). Such was not the case here. There was no practical trial of the rights of the reversioners and there was no necessity to establish fraud. This case was, therefore, distinguishable from those of Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (10), Hari Nath Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (3) and Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (5). It has, moreover, to be remembered that, as pointed out in the last mentioned decision, the rule is a special rule applicable to the peculiar position of limited holders under Hindu Law, and not the general and strict rule of res judicata prescribed by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. This special rule has to be applied with due regard to the peculiar precautions necessary in this country to prevent the exercise of pressure over limited female holders to the prejudice of the rights of reversioners. The rule has, therefore, not to be interpreted with reference to the strict rules regarding fraud and irregularities required to invalidate decrees otherwise binding under the general law of procedure.

It seems to me that the question of limitation has also been decided rightly by the lower Courts. The suit by the widow affected only her own right to redeem, and did not, in view of what has been said, affect the right of the reversioners. They had sixty years to redeem under section 15 of Act XIV of 1859, and their right would not have become barred in any case either under that Act or Act IX of 1871 by reason of section 2 of Act XV of 1877. But, as a matter of fact, they brought their suit within twelve years of the death of the widow and within sixty years of the mortgage, and their right to redeem would not, therefore, be barred either by Article 141 or 148 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1908.

Appeal dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 134, 148 —Transfer by trustee or possessory mortgagee, effect of— Consideration—Good faith—Transferee, position of.

In determining whether Article 134 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to a suit for the recovery of immoveable property transferred by a trustee for valuable consideration, the question of good faith is very material, for if the transferee has acquired the property from a trustee in good faith for a valuable consideration without having notice of the trust, he acquires an immediate title to the property under section 64 of the Trusts Act. But if he has not acted in good faith and has paid valuable consideration, he acquires a title after the lapse of the period necessary for extinguishing the rights of the beneficiary to follow the trust property in his hands, and to this class of cases Article 134 applies. To the former class no occasion for applying that Article arises. [p. 170, col. 1.]

MUHAMMAD ABBAS v. NASIBAN.

The transfer by a possessory mortgagee of the mortgaged property as if it were his own stands, however, on a different footing If the transferee has notice that the transferor has no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, he cannot, by reason of any misrepresentation which had not the effect of misleading him or by dint of any collusive misdescription of the interest conveyed, acquire a higher right than that which the transferor actually possessed within his knowledge or curtail the period of limitation provided for a suit for redemption by Article 148, for no secret compact between two persons can affect or alter the law of limitation to the prejudice of a third party. Where the transferee purchases in good faith and for a valuable consideration without having any notice that the transferor had no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, Article 134 protects him from a claim by the mortgagor, unless the mortgagor enforces his right as against such transferee within 12 years from the date of the transfer. [p 170, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 19th October 1918, upholding that of the Munsif, Kaisarganj, dated the 26th March 1918.

Messrs. Ali Mohammad and Mohammad Ayub, for the Appellants.

Pandit Brij Narain Chakbast, for Respondents Nos. 4, 5 and 6.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for the redemption of a half share of grove No. 729, old Khasra. The grove in question belonged to two brothers, Muhammad Husain and Muhammad Abbas. On the 18th October 1880 they mortgaged it with possession by way of conditional sale in favour of Ghasite in lieu of Rs. 275. The grove contained at that time 100 trees (Exhibit 2).

On the 12th July 1882 Muhammad Husain sold the entire grove to Ghasite in lieu of Rs. 400, out of which Rs. 125 were paid in cash by the vendee and Rs. 275 were credited in satisfaction of the previous mortgage of the 18th October 1880 (Exhibit 3). In the sale deed Muhammad Husain described himself as the owner of the entire grove, but the effect of the sale merely was to transfer the equity of redemption in half the grove to the mortgagee. The remaining half share belonging to Muhammad Abbas remained unaffected. Ghasite removed the trees in the grove in his lifetime.

On the 15th April 1895 the heirs of Ghasite, other than Musammat Ghuran who is said to be missing, sold their 14-annas 3-pies share of the land of the grove in question to Samsam Ali, the ancestor of Muzaffar Ali and Iqbal Ali, describing the same as having been purchased by Ghasite under a sale-deed of the 12th July 1882 (Exhibit A 5). Muzaffar Ali and Iqbal Ali have since made simple mortgages of the said land in favour of Dhani Ram, Puttu Lal and Bal Gobind.

Muhammad Abbas has sold half of his interest in the grove in question to Mansab Ali. Muhammad Abbas and Mansab Ali jointly seek to redeem their half share of the grove from the persons in possession, alleging that the value of the trees removed by Ghasite was more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgage money. They also seek to recover Rs. 112 8-0 on account of the balance of the price of the trees cut and removed. Their claim has been dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that it was barred by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Neither of the Courts below has determined whether Samsam Ali had any notice of the mortgage in suit. The mortgage in question was registered. It was referred to in the sale deed executed by Muhammad Husain in favour of Ghasite on the 12th July 1882 as having been satisfied by a set off against the consideration money payable by the vendee (Exhibit 3). A reference is made to that sale-deed in the subsequent conveyance made by the heirs of Ghasite other than Musammat Ghuran in favour of Samsam Ali on the 15th April 1895 (Exhibit A5). Had Samsam Ali taken care to examine the successive title deeds, he would have discovered that Ghasite was originally a mortgagee and that only one of the mortgagors had transferred the equity of redemption to him. Whether these facts would be sufficient to charge him with constructive notice of the right of Muhammad Abbas to redeem the mortgage cannot, however, be determined until an opportunity is given to the parties to produce evidence to show whether the name of Muhammad Abbas was entered in the revenue papers and, if so, in what capacity, and whether any enquiries were made by Samsam Ali at the time of his purchase. The question of good faith is not, as the Courts below suppose, immaterial for the purpose of determining whether Article 134 or Article 148 is applicable to the case.

Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908) allows for a suit to recover possession of immoveable property, conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, a period of 12 years from the date of the transfer. Where the transfer is made by a trustee for a valuable consideration, the question of good faith becomes practically material, for as pointed out in Prasanna Venkatachella Reddiar v. Collector of Trichinopoly (1), if the transferee has acquired the property from a trustee in good faith for a valuable consideration without having a notice of the trust, he acquires an immediate title to the property under section 64 of the Indian Trusts Act, but if he has not acted in good faith and has paid valuable consideration, he acquires a good title after the lapse of the period necessary for extinguishing the right of the beneficiary to follow the trust property in his hands. Article 134 is intended to apply only to the later class of cases. To the former class no occasion for applying it can arise.

The transfer by a possessory mortgagee of the mortgaged property as if it were his own stands, however, on a different footing. If the transferee has notice that the transferor has no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, he cannot, by reason of any misrepresentation which had not the effect of misleading him or by dint of any collusive misdescription of the interest conveyed, acquire a higher right than that which the transferor actually possessed within his knowledge or curtail the period of limitation provided for a suit for redemption by Article 148, for no secret compact between two persons can affect to alter the law of limitation to the prejudice of a third party. Where the transferee purchases in good faith and for a valuable consideration without having any notice that the transferor had no higher interest than that of a mortgagee, Article 134 protects him from a claim by the mortgagor, unless the mortgagor enforces his right as against such transferee within 12 years from the date of the transfer.

There is no distinction in principle between a person purchasing a mortgage as a mortgage, that is, with a distinct understanding that it was nothing more than a mortgage, and another who acquires a mortgage, knowing that it was a mortgage but giving it a false description in order to serve some ulterior end. As observed in Mahabir Singh v. Rana Sheoraj Singh (2) and Ramchandra Vithal Rajadhiksha v. Sheikh Mohidin (3), when the purchaser from the mortgagee is under the belief that he is purchasing an absolute title, there must be an enjoyment of possession for the statutory period to validate his purchase as against the original mortgagor. Where he has notice, the Court will not help him to perpetuate a fraud.

On behalf of the contesting defendant-respondent reliance is placed on the decision in Dal Singh v. Gur Prasad (4), but the finding in that case was that the transferee believed that he was purchasing an absolute interest. Article 134 of Act IX of 1871 provided that a suit to recover possession of immoveable property conveyed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards purchased by the trustee or mortgagee in good faith and for value could not be brought after the lapse of 12 years from the date of the transfer; but as the reference to "good faith" was strictly inapplicable to cases of transfers by trustees it was omitted from the succeeding Limitation Acts. In Drigpal Singh v. Kallu (5) it was held that a person who purchased with full knowledge that his vendor's title was merely that of a mortgagee was not entitled to the benefit of Article 134.

As the Courts below have not decided the question of good faith and the other issues raised in the case, the appeal is allowed with costs and the suit remanded to the Court of first instance with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it in the manner required by law.

Case remanded.

GADIRAJU SOMARAJU v. DANDU VENKIAH.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1838 OF 1917.

October 24, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Spencer.

GADIRAJU SOMARAJU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

DANDU VENKIAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 4 AND 6 TO 8—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 125—Alienation by Hindu widow—Reversioners, right of suit of—Limitation—Compromise by female owner, whether amounts to alienation.

There is only one cause of action for a declaratory suit for all reversioners, next and remote, and when that cause of action once becomes barred under Article 125 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, by the failure to bring a suit by any of the reversioners within the period fixed by that Article, no reversioner, whether in existence or not at the date of the alienation, can afterwards bring such a suit. [p. 172, col. 2; p. 173, col. 1]

The compromise of a litigation entered into by a female owner, with rights over property, her title to which is disputed by the opposite party, the compromise recognising the disputant's title to the property, does not amount to an alienation of the property in the disputant's favour by her and the disputant does not hold the property thereafter under any new title derived from, or created by her. [p. 173, col. 2]

The daughter of a Hindu widow brought a suit to set aside an alienation by her mother and the suit was compromised. Subsequently, the reversioners brought a suit impeaching the same alienation:

Held, that the period of limitation for such a suit was that prescribed by Article 125 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and that as the compromise by the daughter did not amount to a fresh alienation, no fresh cause of action accrued to the reversioners. [p. 173, col. 1; p. 174, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge at Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 106 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Kovvur at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 1126 of 1912.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Appellants.—The suit is not barred. Computing time from the date of the first alienation in 1893 by the mother, Venkayya, the claim is, no doubt, barred. But the daughther of Venkayya brought a suit in 1901 and compromised it. The compromise was embodied in the decree that was passed. Under that decree she recognised the right of Chandra Raju, the alienee to the property. This must be treated as a fresh alienation by the daughter giving a new cause of action to the reversioners. And these latter have 12 years from the date of this fresh alienation to bring a declaratory suit. Akkineri Sreeramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1).

Under the terms of the compromise Exhibit I, the alienee, Chandra Raju must be deemed to have abandoned his title under the original alienation by the mother and got a fresh title under the compromise by the daughter, i.e., the mother of the plaintiffs.

Mr. P Narayanamurthy, for the Respondents.—There is only one cause of action for all reversioners, near and remote. There was only one alienation by the plaintiffs' grandmother, Venkayya, and that has to be got rid of. The compromise in the suit by the plaintiffs' mother only ratified the action of her mother, the alienor. That will not amount to a fresh alienation so as to enlarge the limitation period. Even a suit to declare that compromise invalid on the ground of fraud would be barred under the six years' rule. The plaintiffs' only cause of action is to declare Venkaya's alienation illegal. See Full Bench decision in Challagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (2). In Akkineri Seerramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1) it was not expressly stated that the withdrawal of the suit in that case was a new alienation. It was only understood as a confirmation of the earlier alienation. In Timmaji Amma Garu v. Subbarau (3), where a limited owner compromised a similar suit recognizing the disputant's title, it was held that the effect of the compromise was not to make the disputant hold the property under a new title derived from the plaintiff. See also Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (4).

GADIRAJU SOMARAJU v. DANDU VENKIAH.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. They and the 6th defendant are the sons of the 7th defendant, who is the daughter of one Soma Raju, who died about 30 years ago leaving a widow Venkayya as his heir with the limited powers of a Hindu female heir. She died in 1901, having alienated the plaint properties in 1893 to one Chandra Raju, whose widow is the 1st defendant under whom the defendants Nos. 2 to 5 claim. The plaintiffs' mother (the 7th defendant) as the next reversionary heir brought a suit in 1901 very soon after her mother's death to set aside the alienation by her mother in favour of Chandra Raju. She, however, compromised that suit by the compromise agreement set out in the decree, Exhibit I, dated August 1902. Under that compromise, Chandra Raju was to enjoy the alienated lands as of right (and there were other terms not necessary to be mentioned in detail), the 7th defendant receiving Rs. 165-5-0 to compensate her for the costs of the suit and for giving up her claim to the possession of the lands.

This decree, as I said before, was in 1902, when one of the 7th defendant's sons (the 6th defendant) was about 20 years old, his younger brothers, the plaintiffs, being then minors. The present suit was brought in 1912 for two reliefs: (1) that the plaintiffs' maternal grandmother's (Venkayya's) alienation of the plaint properties to Chandra Raju in 1893 might be declared invalid against the plaintiffs' and the 6th defendant's reversionary rights; (2) that the plaintiffs' mother's (the 7th defendant's) alienation by the compromise, Exhibit I, of 1902 of the plaint properties might also be declared not binding upon the plaintiffs and the 6th defendant.

The lower Courts dismissed the plaintiffs' suit, the lower Appellate Court basing its decision solely on the point of limitation, which it decided against the plaintiffs on the ground that the 6th defendant could and ought to have brought a suit of this nature on behalf of himself and the plaintiffs within 6 years from August 1902, when his mother (the 7th defendant) entered into the compromise, Exhibit I. He relied upon the decision in Krishnier v. Lakshmiammal (5) in support of this opinion. The learned Subordinate Judge's reference to 6 years as the period of limitation is probably based upon the dictum in Narayana Aiyar v. Rama Aiyar (6), where it was held that Article 125 providing a limitation period of twelve years did not apply to a suit brought by a remoter presumptive reversioner after the death of the alienating female, his right to bring such a suit being based on the circumstance that the collusion or negligence of the next living female reversionary heir with limited interest had precluded the latter from bringing the suit. It was further held in that case that Article 120 applied to such a suit and that the period of 6 years provided for in that article was to be calculated from when the next female reversioner precluded herself by her laches or conduct from herself bringing such a suit at the time when the remoter reversioner brought it. But the view above propounded in Narayana Aiyar v. Rama Aiyar (6), following Krishnier v. Lekshmiammal (5), proceeds on the footing that each successive reversioner or set of reversioners has got a separate cause of action which arises when the preceding reversioner (or set of reversioners standing in the same degree) has (or have) lost his (or their) rights by laches or conduct to bring the suit. This view, however, which was held until 1917, [See Venkata Row v. Tuljaram Row (7)] has now been overruled by the decision of the Full Bench of five Judges reported in Chullagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (2). That Full Bench decision held that there is only one cause of action for a declaratory suit for all reversioners, next and remote, and that when that cause of action once becomes barred under Article 125 by the failure to bring a suit by any of the reversioners within the period fixed by Article 125, no reversioner (whether in existence or not at the date of the alienation) can afterwards bring such a suit. The Subordinate Judge should, therefore, have relied upon Article 125, and not on Article 120 on the question of limitation, so far as the relief related to the declaration of the invalidity of the plaintiffs' grandmother's alienation.

It is, however, argued by the learned Vakil who appeared for the appellants that it is only the alienation by the plaintiffs' grandmother Venkayya in 1893 that could not be questioned by the plaintiffs because it was barred by limitation, but that they could question the alienation made by the plaintiffs' mother, the 7th defendant through the compromise Exhibit I, that alienation being a new alienation of 1902 (though by way of confirmation of the alienation of 1893 made by plaintiffs' grandmother) and that they have got 12 years from the date of this fresh alienation, i.e., from 1902, to bring a suit to declare that alienation invalid as against the plaintiffs and the 6th defendant.

The question thus raised is rather a difficult one to decide. The appellants' Vakil relied on the case reported in Akkineri Sreeramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1) as in his favour. There the widow made the alienation in 1874. The daughters sued in 1892 to set aside that alienation, evidently during the widow's lifetime. They then withdrew that suit "on the ground that the alienation was valid." Their sons then brought the suit [decided as Akkineri Sreeramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1)] in the year 1893 to declare that both the alienation of 1874, and what they called "the alienation made by way of confirmation" by their mothers (defendants Nos. 3 and 4 in the suit) in 1892 through their withdrawal of the suit of 1892 were not binding on the plaintiffs. The learned Judges (Bhashyam Aiyangar and Moore, JJ.) held that so far as the claim related to the relief of a declaration that the widow's alienation of 1874 was bad, the suit was barred, but that, in respect of the claim based on the withdrawal by the plaintiffs' mothers (defendants Nos. 3 and 4) of the suit of 1892 the suit brought in 1893 was not barred. The judgment of the learned Judges is (if I may say so with respect) rather too brief and hence, naturally there is some obscurity as to the precise propositions of law laid down therein. The judgment does not definitely state that the withdrawal of the plaintiffs' mother's suit is, in the eye of the law, a new alienation made by the plaintiffs' mother, as alleged by the plaintiffs. It merely recites the prayer in the plaint which treats such withdrawal as a substantive new alienation. At the end of the judgment, such withdrawal is referred to as "a confirmation of the alienation of 1874," and it is stated that such "confirmation gives a fresh cause of action" and hence the claim for the relief based on that cause of action was not barred. As the suit was brought in 1893 (the next year after the so-called "confirmation"), the suit was rightly held not to be barred, but the learned Judges do not state what Article of the Limitation Act applied to the claim for such relief. If the learned Judges really intended to lay down that the withdrawal of a declaratory suit brought by presumptive reversioners is, in the eye of the law, a substantive alienation by them of the properties already alienated by the widow, I dissent with great respect. In Timmaji Amma Garu v. Subbaraju (3) Miller and Munro, JJ., held that the compromise of a litigation entered into by a female owner with limited rights in respect of a property, her title to which was disputed by the opposite party, the compromise recognising the disputant's title to the property, did not amount to an alienation of the property in the disputant's favour by her and that the disputant did not hold the property thereafter under any new title derived from or created by her. Of course, such a compromise might be attacked in a proper suit brought by a person interested on the ground that it was fraudulent or collusive, but such a suit would not be a suit to set aside the alienation by a female owner with limited rights, to which Article 125 would apply. The correctness of the decision in Akkineri Sreeramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1) can of course be upheld, if it merely decided that the claim held in that decision not to be barred by limitation was a claim merely for declaring void as against the plaintiffs (by reason of fraud or collusion) the withdrawal of the previous suit brought by the plaintiffs' mother in that case. In Narayana Aiyar v. Rama Aiyar (6) the opinion was expressed that the Article of the Limitation Act applicable to such a suit by a reversioner who is not the next reversioner was six years under Article 120, the term to be calculated from when the plaintiff's right accrued. In Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council state that a compromise which recognises the title of the disputant does not confer a new distinct title on the disputant, but is merely an acknowledgment of and a definition of the disputant's title and does not, therefore, amount to a new alienation in favour of the disputant. The appellants' learned Vakil, however, sought to distinguish these decisions on the ground that the terms of the compromise Exhibit I in the present case indicated an abandonment by Chandra Raju of his title under the alienation of 1893 (made by the plaintiffs' grandmother) and the obtaining of a fresh title under a fresh alienation of 1902 made by the plaintiffs' mother (7th defendant). After anxious consideration of the terms of Exhibit I, I have come to the conclusion that this contention cannot prevail. I can find no expression in Exhibit I indicating that Chandra Raju relinquished his title obtained under the alienation of 1893 (which, according to his contention in that suit, was binding on the reversioners), nor anything to show that he acknowledged that the plaintiffs' mother was then entitled to make a fresh alienation ignoring the plaintiffs' grandmother's alienation or to give him a fresh title in supersession of the title which he claimed to have obtained under the alienation of 1893. The mere fact that he paid some money to obtain the acknowledgment by the plaintiffs' mother (7th defendant) of the validity of his title to the plaint lands and house created under the document of 1893 does not, in my opinion, amount to any such relinquishment of the title which he claimed in that suit under the document of 1893. The test to see whether the compromise itself amounted to an alienation is to find out whether the property alleged to have been alienated by the compromise was one not claimed by the disputant as held by him on an existing title, created prior to the compromise, but was property to which he could have derived his title for the first time (according to the pleadings in the case or according to any admissions in the compromise itself) only under the compromise and on the date of the compromise. Several cases of the Allahabad and Patna High Courts were quoted by the appellants' learned Vakil, but the decisions in most of them depended on the particular facts which were held to have shown an intention on the part of the female heir to make a first or fresh alienation through the instrumentality of a nominal compromise, a nominal arbitration or some such bogus proceeding. There are, no doubt, some cases in which language of a wider character has been employed apparently supporting the appellants' contention, but I feel myself bound by the decisions of this Court and of the Privy Council to apply the test I have above indicated as the correct one; and so applying that test, I am satisfied that there was no new alienation intended or effected under Exhibit I.

Even if the claim in the plaint in this suit to obtain the relief of a declaration as to the invalidity of this new alleged alienation of 1902 is amended as one to declare the compromise agreement invalid against the plaintiffs and the 6th defendant on the ground of fraud or coercion practised upon the 7th defendant (see paragraph 7 of the plaint), the claim for such a relief is barred under the 6 years' rule.

In the result, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—In Bangarayudu v. Perayya Sastry (8) to which decision I was a party, it was observed that, in some instances, compromises by a limited owner may amount to family settlements, while in other cases, they cannot be placed on a higher footing than alienations, and a number of decisions were quoted to illustrate both classes of transactions. No doubt it is true that there is no well-marked line of demarcation between the class of transactions which are compromises in the nature of family settlements and the class of compromises which are alienations. The recent Privy Council decision in Amrit Narayan Singh v. Gaya Singh (9) does not throw much light on the subject, as the compromise and the reference to arbitration during the widow's life in that case was made by the minor reversioner's father purporting to act on behalf of his wife and his infant son. In an earlier Privy Council case in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (4) their Lordships applied the test, to a transaction challenged by reversioners as an alienation, of seeing whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or not, and in Ranga Row v. Ranganayaki Ammal (10) Phillips, J., on the same principle examined the facts to see whether the widow's action had, as a necessary result, the transfer of the property or whether she materially contributed by her action to the transfer, and he decided that the mere withdrawal of her defence in the suit would not amount to such an act of transfer. So in the present case, the plaintiffs' mother G. Venkayya brought a suit to declare the alienation made by their grandmother A. Venkayya to be invalid. When the former withdrew her claim to the lands under the terms of the compromise, she did not purport to transfer any further interest in the suit property beyond what their grandmother A. Venkayya had already alienated. The decision in Akkineri Sreeramulu v. Mullapudi Ramayya (1) was strongly relied upon by the appellants' Vakil as an authority for holding that a fresh cause of action would arise upon a compromise of the suit by the plaintiffs' mother G. Venkayya. The learned Judges who decided that case did not expressly state what kind of action the withdrawal of the previous suit without leave to sue again would give rise to. If they had in contemplation a suit by the daughters' sons to set aside the decree in the former suit as having been arrived at by fraud and collusion on the part of their mothers, for which the limitation period would be 6 years under Article 120 of the Limitation Act, the statement that the withdrawal of the suit of 1892 gave rise to a fresh cause of action and that the suit of 1893 was not barred by limitation is quite intelligible; and I think that this is what was intended, as I find that one of the defences to the suit was a denial that there had been any collusion. But if it was intended that the second suit in that case should be treated as one governed by Article 125, then I should be inclined to respectfully doubt the correctness of that decision, and I would follow the decision in Timmaji Amma Garu v. Subbarayu (3), which laid down that a widow entering into a compromise with a person, who disputes her right to property, when she merely undertakes to make no further claim to the property, does not thereby alienate the property and the property is not in consequence held under any title derived from her. In the case now before us, the suit was not instituted within six years of the compromise of the earlier suit.

I agree with my learned brother that the suit is time-barred and that this second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION No. 150 OF 1911.

February 17, 1919.

Present: - Mr. Justice Rankin.

Re RAI MOHAN SHAW AND OTHERS.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 9 (b), 55, 56 Insolvency proceedings—Mortgage by insolvent on eve of bankruptcy, validity of—Good faith —Intention to delay or defeat creditors, absence of—Mortgage, whether act of insolvency—Preference to mortgagee.

The Official Assignee in an insolvency applied to have it declared that a mortgage executed by the insolvent on the eve of his bankruptcy was inoperative as against him. The mortgage was executed by the insolvent's son and wife in addition to himself, the wife and son joining as they also mortgaged their interest in the mortgaged property. It purported to secure an antecedent debt, which was established, as also a new advance:

Held, (1) that the matter was properly brought forward by way of motion in the bankruptcy, as the Official Assignee claimed to set aside the mortgage affecting the property of the insolvent and this was a claim on a title higher than that of the insolvent; [p. 176, col 2; p. 177, col. 1.]

(2) that the intention to delay or defeat other creditors not having been established, the mortgage was not an act of insolvency under section 9, subsection (b), of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act; [p. 177, col. 1.]

(3) that as there was no ground for disputing the good faith of either party, the mortgage could not be said to be a voluntary transfer under section 55 of the Act. [p. 177, col. 2.]

(4) that as it was not established that the mortgage was executed with the object of giving the mortgagee a preference over other creditors as contemplated in section 56 of the Act, it could not be said to be inoperative against the Official Assignee. [p. 178, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is a motion to have it declared that two mortgages executed by an insolvent are inoperative as against the Official Assignee. The insolvent in this matter is one Durga Charan Shaw, one of 16 persons against whom an adjudication order was made in this Court as being the partners in certain businesses carried on in Calcutta and at Naraingunge under the styles of Haridas Gopal Kristo and Bhairab Chunder Khetter Mohan. In addition to these businesses it appears that the parties interested therein carried on private money-lending businesses; how many of such businesses there were is not at all clear.

The acts of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication was founded, and of which in these proceedings the adjudication order is conclusive proof, relate to the two Calcutta businesses, and are, shortly, that the munib gomasthas, through whom these were carried on, had departed from their usual place of business on the 23rd June 1911, and that on the same date another gomastha had given a verbal notice of suspension of payment. The petition was filed by a Calcutta creditor on the 26th June 1911, the adjudication order was obtained ex parte on the 5th July. The two mortgages are in fact dated respectively 5th and 8th Assar (Bengali year 1318), dates which I am told correspond to the 20th and 23rd June 1911. They are, therefore, on the very eve of the acts of bankruptcy established. The later mortgage was for Rs. 6,000 and was executed by the insolvent Durga alone. The respondent says that this mortgage has been paid off by a member of the family and that he is no longer concerned. In these circumstances, it has not been enquired into before me and beyond the fact that it was made and was for a fresh advance, I know little or nothing about it. The first mortgage was for Rs. 15,000; it was executed by Durga's wife and son in addition to himself. It purports to secure an antecedent debt Rs 14,034, and a new advance of the balance, Rs 966; it provides for interest at eight annas per cent. per month, the previous rate, according to the evidence, having been nine annas. The wife and son joined for the reason (as stated in the deed) that the mortgagee would not accept a mortgage of the building and tin sheds without the land on which they stand, and the wife and son mortgaged their interest in the Patni right.

Now as to this mortgage two things are clear; the respondent, who carries on a money-lending business, has adduced evidence of the reality of the debt of Rs. 14,034, he has produced his books of account, he has proved the dates and amounts of his advance he has shown payments regularly every year of interest, and the Official Assignee very properly admits that the case must be taken on the footing that the antecedent debt has been established.

I am also satisfied that the further advance was made; the only comment that can be made on the antecedent debt is that the insolvent having paid the interest regularly, the money lent has been outstanding—as regards the bulk of it at least—for some 11 years, a fact which is not very surprising, as it is the business of the respondent to lend money, it no doubt suited him very well to leave it on loan as long as his interest was regularly paid.

In the second place, I have no evidence before me to the effect that the property mortgaged by the wife and son was not their own property or that it belonged in any way to the insolvent. These two considerations are important points in the respondent's favour. Against him on the other hand I must take account of the fact that the insolvent and the respondent were relations, in the sense that the respondent's daughter had married the insolvent's son.

The Official Assignee claims to set aside the mortgage so far as it affects the property of the insolvent, and as this is a clear case of claim by a higher title than the insolvent himself would have possessed, the matter is properly brought forward by way of motion in the bankruptcy.

Now, there are three possible ways in which such a case may be framed: First—The mortgage may be said to be an act of bankruptcy under section 9, sub-section (b), of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909. If so, the title of the Official Assignee would relate back to the transaction by section 57 and unless the respondent could bring himself within section 57 (which is the protecting section), the mortgage would be void as regards the insolvent's property. If it were proved that the property mortgaged by the insolvent was his whole property, the question would arise whether the present advance of Rs. 936 was sufficient to save the transaction. There is, however, no evidence before me that the mortgage comprised the whole of his property; the only evidence is the other way. Even if I bring in the later mortgage of Rs. 6,000, the position is no better; the amount of the present advance then comes to something in the neighbourhood of Rs. 7,000. Treating the mortgage as comprising part only of the debtor's property, the law requires me to find an intention to defeat and delay creditors proved as a matter of fact before I can bring section 9 (b) into force. On the other hand, apart from the question of fraudulent preference which depends upon separate considerations and with which I will deal presently, there is no case here of any other fraud. There is, for example, no evidence whatever that the mortgage was made as a covinous or as a Benami transaction or for the purpose of defeating for the moment some form of execution. Section 9 (b), therefore, adds nothing to the case of the Official Assignee.

Secondly, in my opinion, the same is true of the voluntary transfer section 55, which is relied upon in the Official Assignee's petition. If it were shown that this was a voluntary transfer in the sense that it was not a transfer made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, then the transfer would be void. The protecting section 57 does not apply, but if the transaction was entered into by the transferee in good faith, then section 55 does not avoid it. Here, again, it is sufficient to say that, subject to the question of fraudulent preference, I can see no ground for disputing the good faith of either party, and the voluntary transfer section is not really in point.

Thirdly, the only real issue upon the first mortgage is the issue under section 56, whether the transfer was made by Durga with a view to giving the respondent preference over the other creditors. If this has to be answered in the affirmative, it matters nothing whether the respondent acted in good faith or not. Section 57 does not apply, and sub-section 2 of section 56 does not apply either. The question is as to the dominant view of the insolvent at the time. For reasons which may just possibly be nobody's fault, I am enquiring now as to the insolvent's state of mind in 1911 nearly 8 years ago. There can be no doubt also that the onus of proving this sort of fraud is upon the person alleging it. However often the onus may shift from side to side upon proof of particular facts in the end, I have to be satisfied that the insolvent had this as his dominant view when he granted the mortgage. Now, if the debtor's real object was to procure a further advance for himself, or to satisfy the demands, or escape the pressure of the creditor, or if he had both these objects as the mainspring of his action, then the transaction is not fraudulent preference. The mere proof of a demand by the creditor is not in the least conclusive. A demand may be made, and yet the circumstances of the debtor may be such that the demand cannot be the explanation of the transfer. A debtor with numerous writs already issued against him which he has not attempted to satisfy cannot be supposed to be much influenced by the prospect of another; but if, in fact, it is a demand, or a threat to sue, or a threat of any sort, or a desire to avoid evil consequences to himself, that has brought about the transfer, the suggestion of fraudulent preference is ousted altogether. I am not speaking now of transfers of the whole debtor's property for an antecedent debt, which comes under section 9 (b) and to which different considerations apply. Apart from that class of cases, the creditor is perfectly entitled to press for his debt and to take payment or security for it right up to the time when he has notice of an act of bankruptcy or an adjudication order supervenes. Now, in this case, the fact of the fresh advance, and the fact that the wife and son joined to mortgage their own property, put much difficulty in the way of a case of a fraudulent preference. The fact of the later mortgage for another new advance of Rs. 6,000 (standing as it does by itself and without any evidence to attach it) is much more against such a case than in its favour. It seems to show that Durga was making the usual desperate efforts to struggle on.

I have not got, in this case, any evidence at all of the sort which the Court is accustomed to expect in "fraudulent preference" cases as to other creditors having already instituted suits against, or served process on, the insolvent, or of demands by other creditors. The petitioning creditors' debt was not a judgment debt, and their petition reads as though they had continued dealing with the Calcutta firm right up to the day before the petition.

There is, too, the further fact that Durga at Naraingunge might or might not know immediately how bad the state of the other businesses had become; how sudden or how gradual the collapse was, and what finally precipitated the fall, are matters on which I have no evidence at all. How many of the 16, or perhaps it ought to be 11, partners were actively concerned in supervising the munib gomasthas of the Calcutta businesses I do not know. It was put in cross-examination to the Official Assignee's witness, Haridas Roy Chowdhury, that the Naraingunge business continued in fact sometime after the adjudication order. No confirmation or contradiction was given of the suggested fact and the matter was left there.

Now, in that position, the next thing I have to consider is the evidence under section 36 of Lal Mohan Poddar. Now, Lal Mohan Poddar says, shortly, that at the time of the first advance the bankrupt was in need of money, but he does not accept the statement that the bankrupt was in difficulty. His evidence is as follows:—

"The first talk about the mortgage of the 5th Assar was when we demanded payment of the money due to us. At the time (stopped). That was about a month before the execution of the mortgage. When we demanded for payment, Durga Charan made the proposal. He volunteered it. Up to that date he had never offered to execute a mortgage. Before he made the proposal we had never asked him to execute a mortgage. When we demanded for payment he proposed we should execute a mortgage. He said I want further sum and I propose to execute a mortgage for the whole amount. We refused to advance any further amount without a mortgage."

Later, he said:—

"Durga Charan proposed to execute mortgage. We never wanted the mortgage. It was after we had demanded for payment."

Now, upon that evidence being given, a rather amusing state of things supervenes. On that evidence if it is true, it is, of course, absolutely impossible to base a case of fraudulent preference at all. His case is that the creditor demanded payment from the debtor, that the debtor not only could not pay it but wanted a further loan and, therefore, he proposed that the mortgage should be executed. That is just as many miles away from a possible fraudulent preference case, if that be the truth, as are cases of threats of posting at a club, or of threats of evil consequence from the Criminal Law: but the respondent and his advisers seem to have taken fright at the fact that the witness, when he was cross-examined, was induced to accept the expression "he volunteered it." There can be no doubt whatever what the witness means. He says that the suggestion was produced by two things, the demand for payment and his desire for a further loan. On that evidence, if it stood alone, I should have no hesitation in saying that there was no case of fraudulent preference here. But the respondent, for reasons which I really cannot appreciate, has made up his mind to throw over that witness altogether and to set up another case, namely, that the witness Kailash Chunder Poddar, having discovered that the insolvent firm was not meeting their bills as regularly as they should, went sometime before the mortgage was executed and proceeded to threaten the insolvent. He says that he threatened him with an attachment of his property, that he threatened to ruin him and that he said that he must pay down in cash on the spot and all that sort of thing. I am perfectly satisfied that those picturesque expressions on the part of Kailash Chunder Poddar are absolutely unfounded. I think that the respondent has abandoned what was really good evidence in order to touch up a case which is inconsistent with his original case, in order to touch it up in a way that I cannot accept. In his affidavit Kailash Chunder Poddar says that the respondent, in addition to himself, threatened the insolvent. In his evidence he says that all the threats were made by himself, and in this case I think it extremely unlikely that a person, in the position of Kailash Chunder Poddar, would go and attempt to treat so roughly the insolvent who was a senior member of his master's family, namely, the father-in-law of his master's daughter. I think all that has been trumped up for the purpose of the case upon this motion, and I think that it has been very foolishly trumped up. It has been trumped up entirely because the advisers of the respondent have foolishly taken fright at a phrase or two in the evidence of Lal Mohan Poddar, when his evidence was really perfectly sound and perfectly good from their point of view. The witness Kailash Chunder Poddar also tells me that Lal Mohan Poddar, his master's second son, was crazed. I can see from the notes of his examination that that is utterly untrue, and, therefore, although the Official Assignee seems to me to have come into Court with little or no case, the respondent has done his best to give him a case by throwing over the evidence of Lal Mohan Poddar and setting up an inconsistent case, a case which, as regards many points, I do not believe. That has been my only difficulty in dealing with this matter. I have to consider whether the right view to take is, that there must be something fishy about this transaction or the respondent would never have gone to the extent he has of producing this new kind of evidence and trying to throw over the evidence of his son, and that has given me a great deal of trouble. In the end, I have come to this conclusion. I think that, in enquiring into the state of the debtor's mind, as long as eight years ago, on evidence which relates to a deed where the wife and son joined as well as the insolvent, and where there was a fresh advance, it would be wrong of me, merely because I think that the respondent has foolishly endeavoured to support his case by exaggeration and untrue statements, to fine him to the extent of depriving him of the mortgage for Rs. 15,000. My view of the facts is, that what Lal Mohan Poddar said is perfectly right in substance, with this exception that, as the debt had been outstanding for a long time, I am quite satisfied that the respondent knew that the business of Durga was getting into difficulties. Only on that supposition is there any explanation why a sudden demand, after all those years, for payment of a security should have been made. I think that what has happened is the usual thing that a certain amount of touching up, of manufactured evidence, is brought in into this case by the respondent although he has got a good case, and, therefore, what I am going to do is to find that I am not satisfied that this mortgage was made with the dominant view of preferring the respondent to uphold the mortgage; but to refuse to allow the respondent any costs of this motion.

It only remains to say a single word about the first mortgage. As regards that, before this motion was launched the respondent had by his son told the Official Assignee that that mortgage was paid off and that he claimed no interest in it. That being so, I cannot understand why the Official Assignee should be entitled to a declaration which implies that not only such a thing is true, but also that the other person was asserting the contrary. There may be cases where you require a declaration in order to clear your title to land; in a proper case, it is possible to get that. It could not possibly be said that the respondent here, having stated before the motion was launched that he had nothing to do with that mortgage, should be made to pay the costs of obtaining a declaration with which he had nothing to do What I propose to do on that is this, that I shall recite in my order that the respondent, alleging that he is not now interested in the mortgage by reason of the fact that he has been paid off, the motion is dismissed, but no order as to costs.

Mr. Avetoom.—The Official Assignee to retain his costs of, and incidental to, this application out of the estate?

COURT.—The ordinary practice is that he applies and obtains an order before he starts the motion and that order provides for his costs. If it has not been done, an application may be made later.

Motion dismissed.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 106, 117—Lease, expiry of—Lessor holding over, position of—Notice to quit, whether necessary—Agricultural lease, applicability of s. 106 to.

A lessee, who, after expiry of the term of his lease, holds over with the consent of the lessor, occupies the same character as he did under the expired lease, and has no right to set up any title adverse to that of the lessor and in derogation of the rights of the latter. [p. 181, col. 2; p. 182, col. 1.]

The mere consent of a landlord to a tenant holding over after the expiry of the term of his lease, during the pendency of negotiations for a fresh lease, does not create a contract of tenancy. [p. 182, col. 1.]

Except in so far as its provisions may be made specially applicable by the Local Government to agricultural leases, section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act has no application to such leases. [p. 182, col. 2; p. 183, col. .]

A tenant who holds over against the wishes of the landlord is not entitled to any notice to quit before a suit for ejectment is filed against him. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Muzufferpore, dated the 27th August 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Sitamarhi, dated the 21st December 1916.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the landlord to eject the defendants from the lands in suit, said to consist of 4 bighas of Zerait land.

On 4th March 1898, on behalf of the plaintiff his mother gave to the defendants a lease called Sadhana Patawa Theka of 5 annas 6 gandas 2 cowries 2 karants Pucca Patti bearing Touzi No. 5510/2 in Mouza Tandaspur Joka, Pergana Nezam ud-dinpur Bogra, along with the shares owned by the plaintiff in other Mouzas. The share leased in the Mouza included some lands in the direct possession of the lessor. The lease was for a term of 9 years from 1306 to 1314 F. S. After the expiry of the lease the defendants, upon the requisition of the plaintiff, gave up possession of the leasehold property from the month of Kartick 1315 F. S. with the exception of 4 bighas of the Zerait land in dispute. The plaintiff's case is, as stated in paragraph 5 of the plaint, that the defendants continued in possession and occupation of the land in suit on the pretext of obtaining a fresh lease in respect of the shares in the Mouzas as mentioned in the Sadhana Patawa lease referred to above, and upon that pretext they obtained permission of the plaintiff to continue in possession of the land in suit during the pendency of the negotiations regarding the renewal of the lease in the village. The negotiations, however, fell through. The plaintiff then demanded possession of the land in suit from the defendants, but the defendants declined to give up possession of the land.

In 1911 the plaintiff instituted a suit No. 730 of 1911 for ejectment of the defendants from the lands in suit, upon the ground that the defendants were trespassers upon the lands and that the said lands were the Zerait of the plaintiff.

The defendants in that suit pleaded that they were in possession of the lands in pursuance of an oral agreement arrived at between the parties, whereby the plaintiff had agreed to allow the defendants to hold over the disputed lands on payment of the rents at the rates prevailing in the locality.

That suit was dismissed by the Munsif, who held that the defendants had held the lands as tenants thereof and were not trespassers at all. On appeal the Subordinate Judge upheld the decision, holding that the defendants were holding over the lands with the permission of the plaintiff and were thus licensees in respect of the lands in suit. The status of the defendants was left undetermined. The judgment of the Appellate Court is dated 11th July 1913. The present suit was brought soon after that on the 2nd March 1914, after giving notice to the defendants to quit the lands in suit. The lower Appellate Court has held that the notice was served on the 4th August 1913 and the present suit was filed on the 2nd March 1914, that is after the expiry of six months of the term of the notice.

The defendants denied that the land was the Zerait of the plaintiff and alleged that they were in possession of the same by virtue of an oral agreement with the plaintiff after the expiry of the lease in 1314 F. S, on the condition of their paying the rents at the rates prevailing in the vicinity. The Munsif upheld the plea of the defendants and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge by his judgment, dated the 27th August 1917, reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the suit of the plaintiff, holding that the defendants were tenants holding the lands from year to year and hence the tenancy was terminated by the service of notice to quit given to the defendants by the plaintiff. Aggrieved by the said decision the defendants appealed to this Court. The case was remanded to the lower Appellate Court for determination of the following issues framed by this Court:—

"(1) Are the lands in suit Zerait lands within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and

(2) Was the defendant holding under a lease for a term of years or under a lease from year to year?"

The Court below has now remitted its finding upon the aforesaid issues. As to the first issue the Court below has held that the plaintiff failed to prove the lands in suit to be the Zerait lands as defined in sections 166 and 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As to the 2nd issue the Court below, in agreement with the view taken by the Appellate Court in Suit No. 730 of 1911 already referred to, has held that the defendants were holding over the lands as mere licensees. The finding has been made clear towards the end of the judgment, where it has been clearly held "that there was no formal agreement between the parties after the expiry of the lease in 1314 F. S., but that there might have been some talk about the renewal of the lease with respect to the disputed lands. There is nothing to show that the defendant got any extension of the lease. He was simply holding over the lands pending the completion of the negotiations with the tacit, if not express, permission of the plaintiff." The Court has distinctly held that "the defendants were holding over from year to year."

Under section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as well as under section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, the defendants upon the aforesaid finding would be deemed to have been occupying the lands in dispute upon the same conditions as those contained in the original lease, by virtue of which they were admitted into the occupation of the lands in suit as part and parcel of the share of the plaintiff leased to them in the village in question. Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act says that if a lessee remains in possession of the property leased to him after the termination of the lease and the lessor or his legal representative accepts rent from him or otherwise assents to his continuing in possession, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary the lease shall be considered to have been renewed from year to year or from month to month according to the purpose of the property leased. Section 51 of the Bengal Tenancy Act embodies the principle of section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is obvious that if a lessee holds over after the expiry of the term of his lease with the consent of the lessor, as in this case, he, the lessee, occupies the same character as he did under the expired lease. The status of the defendants in the present case is undisputed to be that of a tenure-holder as defined in section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The share in the village belonging to the plaintiff and formed into a separate Patti was leased to the defendants for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing the lands under cultivation by establishing tenants thereon. The land in suit was described in the lease as Zerait. Whether the defendants are bound by the description, or whether the description would be accepted by a Court as conclusive evidence of the character of the land being Zerait, is immaterial. The description shows at least that the land was in direct possession of the landlord and it has been so recorded in the Survey Record of Rights in which the land has been described as bakasht, i.e., under the direct cultivation of the landlord. The defendants, after the expiry of the term of the lease, had no right to set up any title in these lands adverse to that of the lessor and in derogation of the rights of the latter. The defendants were fully cognizant of their own status. In Suit No. 730 of 1911 all that the plaintiff expressly claimed was that the land in suit was his Zerait. The defendants did not controvert that statement and tacitly accepted it by alleging that they had acquired the right to hold over the land as tenants by virtue of an oral agreement after the expiry of the lease in question. If the defendants can prove that they held over the lands under the oral agreement set up by them, the principle of holding over will not at all affect their title and their case will then come under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act governing the incident of a tenant, whether occupancy or non occupancy. The finding of fact of the Court below has concluded this point. It has been held that the oral agreement set up by the defendants has not been proved; all that has been proved is that the landlord consented to their remaining in possession of the lands during the pendency of the negotiations in respect of the disputed lands, but that consent does not create a contract of tenancy. The consent was with the object of giving them the rights under section 116 by holding over. Accepting the finding of the Court below, we hold that the defendants were tenure-holders in respect of the lands in suit and were not raiyats within the definition of the term in the Bengal Tenancy Act There fore, the contention of the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants that the suit of the plaintiff is barred by the provisions of section 44 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, must fail. That section applies to non-occupancy raiyats, and the defendants not being such raiyats the section has no application to the present case.

It is now unnecessary to consider the objections of the learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the respondent as to the finding on issue No. 1, namely, that the lands in suit are not the Zerait lands within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It would be sufficient to mention that all the objections appear to have been disposed of by the Court below and that there is nothing to show that the view taken by the Court below is not correct. The plaintiff has not been able to prove within section 120 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the land in suit is the Zerait land of the proprietor. No doubt the defendants ought to have denied the character of the land as Zerait in their written statement in Suit No. 730 of 1911. But it is more than doubtful whether the scope of that suit was such as to make the omission of the defendants to make an express denial of the allegation of the plaintiff operate as res judicata on the question as to whether the land is the Zerait of the Malik.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants contends that the defendants cannot be ejected from the lands in question inasmuch as the notice served by the plaintiff was not sufficient in law The lower Appellate Court held in its judgment, dated the 27th August 1917, before the case was remanded for further finding, that the notice was served upon the appellants on the 4th August 1913, and the present suit was brought on the 2nd March 1914, after the expiry of six months, the term of the notice, and hence the notice was sufficient and valid in law. The contention of the learned Vakil is that the appellants were entitled to have six months' notice before the plaintiff could terminate the lease in question. This contention is based upon section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the first place, it is doubtful if section 106 applies to the land which was used by the plaintiff for agricultural purposes, for section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act exempts leases for agricultural purposes from the operation of Chapter V of the Transfer of Property Act in which section 106 happens to be, except in so far as the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council may by notification published in the Local Official Gazette declare all or any of such provisions to be applicable in the case of all or any of agricultural leases. We have not been shown any notification issued by the Government under the latter part of section 117 and hence section 106 does not apply to agricultural leases. Assuming for the sake of argument that the section does apply to agricultural leases, the lease terminated in 1314 F. S. The defendants held over the lands with the consent of the landlord in the succeeding year during the pendency of negotiations for a lease of the share of the plaintiff in the village. The negotiations having fallen through, the plaintiff regarded the continuance of the possession of the defendants as that of a trespasser upon the lands and consequently brought the Suit No. 730 of 1911 referred to above. In that case, as has already been observed, the defendants were held as having been allowed to continue to hold over the lands after the expiry of the lease as mere licensees. The plaintiff did not at all treat the defendants as tenants of the lands. The suit of 1911 is a clear notice of the intention of the plaintiff to evict the defendants from the lands in suit. No fresh tenancy having been created as held by the Court below, it would appear that no notice under section 106 was at all necessary. This view has been taken in two cases, Nandikolla Gopalan v. Manyam Mahalakshmi Amma Zemindarini Garu (1) and Gokul Chand v. Shib Charan (2). The facts of the latter appear to be very similar to those of the present one, where the defendant continued to hold over possession of the house after the expiration of the term of the lease in defiance of the authority of the lessor, and it was held that he was not entitled to a notice to quit under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the present case the plaintiff gave a notice on the 4th August 1913 (corresponding to 17th Srawan 1320) requiring the defendants to quit the lands by the 1st Asin 1321. The suit was brought on the 2nd March 1914. The defendants were, therefore, given sufficient notice in the present case. If the case is governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act applicable to tenure holders, no notice appears to have been prescribed by the said Act; much less a notice of six months, as the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants contends, his clients were entitled to in this case. The contention is, therefore, overruled.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

FOSTER, J.—I concur. In my opinion the defendant has been holding as a tenant of a tenure, as defined in section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. My reasons are that in 1315 F. S. the two parties agreed to the defendant remaining on the land, he having hitherto held it as tenure-holder, and that they were contemplating a renewal of the tenure in respect of that very land. It is quite obvious that neither party contemplated a raiyati settlement. It also seems to me that the settlement was for that year only. There is nothing to show to the contrary, and the parties were expecting a renewal of the tenure. So even if it be considered a new settlement, as the appellant would have held it to be in 1315, it was only a new settlement for one year and it was a settlement of a tenure. That apparently was renewed with the tacit assent of the landlord year by year up to the year 1320. I gather this from the decision of Suit No. 730 of 1911. But what has been the position since 1320? The defendant cannot say for a moment that he held over the land as a raiyat with the assent of the landlord in the years 1321, 1322 and the other succeeding years, year by year; for that is necessary to justify his remaining on the land. If there is no landlord's assent, then the defendant has lost his status. Giving the very best position possible to the defendant, it could only be that of a tenant by sufferance, and that tenancy is terminable at the will of the landlord. I think that the notice issued in August 1913 was sufficient expression of the landlord's will to determine that tenancy. It is quite clear, however, from the record that the defendant has been holding the land against the wishes of the landlord, and his allegations both that he has been given a raiyati settlement and that the landlord had assented to his possession of the land, are untrue and disingenuous.

Landlord and tenant—Adverse possession by tenant—Acquisition of limited interest.

A tenant who occupies land other than that comprised in his tenancy for more than twelve years acquires the limited interest of a tenant in the land by adverse possession.

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 15th of September 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Iswargunj, dated the 24th of July 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sasanka Jibon Roy for Babu Chandra Kanth Ghose (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghose), for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the disputed lands. The lower Court has not given my clients khas possession on the ground that the tenant defendants have been occupying the lands for more than 12 years and that they have acquired a limited interest in the lands by adverse possession. The defendants took advantage of their position as tenants and possessed themselves of lands which belonged to the plaintiffs. If Article 142 of the Limitation Act applies my clients are clearly barred, but I submit that Article 144 applies in a case like this. Here the tenants have committed a tort by trespass and they cannot take advantage of tort and ask the landlord to receive rent from them. The tenants are trespassers; Nuddyarchand Shaha v. Mexjan (1). The tenants cannot without their landlord's consent have occupancy rights and insist that they must possess to the end of their tenures. The tenants cannot take advantage of their own wrong, Krishna Govinda Jawadar v. Banka Behari Shaha (2). The tenants must prove adverse possession. The plaintiffs' rights as landlords are denied here. The landlords had no notice of the adverse possession of the defendants. The plaintiffs came to know of the trespass within 12 years of the suit.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Deputy Registrar, who represented the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant brought this suit for recovery of possession of certain land on establishing her title thereto. Both the Courts below have granted the plaintiff a decree declaring her title but held that she was not entitled to khas possession. The finding is that the defendants, who are tenants of the plaintiff in respect of other lands, have been occupying the land in suit for more than 12 years claiming the right of tenancy thereto. The rulings cited in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, Ishan Chandra Mitter v. Raja Ramranjan Chakarbutty (3), Raktoo Singh v. Sudhram Ahir (4) and Protap Narain Mukerjee v. Biraj Dasi (5), fully support the decisions of the Courts below that on the facts found by them the defendants must be held to have acquired a limited interest in the land by adverse possession.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

EDA PUNNAYYA AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS Nos. 3 AND 5—APPELLANTS

versus

JANGALA KAMA KOTAYYA AND ANOTHER—COUNTER PETITIONERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. XXXII, rr. 3, 4—Minor—Guardian ad litem, whether can be appointed without consent—Guardian not properly appointed—Minor, whether bound by decree—Ex parte decree against minor not properly represented—Application to set aside decree, whether maintainable.

EDA PUNNAYYA v. JANGALA KAMA KOTAYYA.

The appointment of a person as the guardian ad litem of a minor without that person's consent is not a valid appointment. [p. 185; col. 2, p. 186; col. 1]

Where a minor is not properly represented on the record, he cannot be regarded as a party to the proceedings, and the result of such proceedings, therefore, cannot bind him; consequently there can be no question of his having been prevented by sufficient cause from conducting them. If in such a case an ex parte decree is passed against a minor, he cannot apply to set it aside under Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 185, col. 2; p. 186, cols 1 & 2.]

In order to attract the provisions of Order IX rule 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, relating to the setting aside of ex parte decrees, the person seeking the aid of the Court must be a party to the suit. It is of the essence of the rule that the complaint must come from one whose rights could validly be dealt with by the trial Court. [p. 186, col. 2.]

If in consequence of the failure to have a guardian appointed a minor defendant is not properly before the Court, any decree passed against him and any proceedings intended to affect him would be nullities. The minor has in such a case, his remedy against the invalid act of the Court in quite a different proceeding, and not in a proceeding instituted to set aside the decree treating him as if he were properly before the Court. [p. 186, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 376 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 36 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Appellants.—Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, applies to this case. The minor was represented by a guardian and the case was decreed ex parte owing to his absence. The provisions of the rule are attracted.

See Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (1). See also Shroof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (2) and Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (3).

Mr. P. Narayanamurti, for the Respondents.—There has been no valid appointment of a guardian ad litem, because his consent was not taken and he never expressed his willingness to act. The proceedings in the suit do not bind the minors and they are entitled to treat the decree as non existent. The minors cannot be regarded as parties to the suit. It is only a party that can apply to set aside the ex parte decree under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code. See Privy Council decision in Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (4). In Vulia Konikkal Edathil Cheria Pajni Achan v. Maruthu Veera Kaundan (5) the applicability of Order IX, rule 13, was not considered. In Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (3) the decision turned on the negligence of the guardian. The proper course for the minors is to apply to have the decree vacated in appropriate proceedings.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—We take the facts in this case to be that the father of the present appellants was appointed their guardian ad litem, although he had never appeared and consented to his appointment, and that the suit was afterwards decreed against them ex parte. The lower Court has refused to set aside that decree, on the ground that the procedure provided by Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be applied to it.

The appointment of the guardian was certainly bad in the circumstances, and the minors must, therefore, be taken to have been unrepresented. The question is then whether Order IX, rule 13, is applicable. We have been referred to two decisions of this Court and certain decisions of the Allahabad High Court to show that it is. The Allahabad decisions, however, of which the latest is Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (1), were given without reference to the principle which in my opinion governs the case and the judgment of the Judicial Committee to which I shall refer. My learned brother's decision in Shroof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (2) appears to have turned on the invalidity of the guardian's appointment, the application of Order IX, rule 13, not having been disputed and my own decision in Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (3) dealt with the negligence of a regularly appointed guardian and the question whether it could be regarded as "sufficient cause" within the meaning of the rule.

The proper principle to apply, however, is that the minor, if he is not properly represented, cannot be regarded as a party to the proceedings at all, they, therefore, cannot bind him and there can be no question of his having been prevented by any sufficient cause from conducting them. This follows from Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (4), in which it was held that the appointment of a guardian not having been valid, the litigation she had conducted on behalf of the minor was a nullity and the minor was not a party to it for the purpose of section 244 of the former Code. This ground of decision is implied in the lower Court's reference to the possibility that the minors may be entitled to treat the decree passed as not binding on them. Adopting it, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I agree.

I shall, however, add a few words having regard to the citation of a decision to which I was a party, namely, Shroof Sahib v. Raghunatha Sivaji (2). In that case, there was no argument that the procedure prescribed by Order IX, rule 13, was not applicable where the minor was not properly represented; therefore, that decision is not an authority for the proposition contended for on behalf of the appellant.

We must take it that the minor was not properly represented in the suit. The consent of the proposed guardian was not obtained for his appointment and according to principle and the recognised practice of this Court, no guardian can be appointed unless he has expressed his willingness to act. It follows, therefore, that the minor, though co nominee in the array of parties, was not represented and was not consequently a party to the suit. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Rashid un nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (4) lays this down distinctly. The learned Chief Justice and Sadasiva Ayyar, J., have taken the same view in this Court, Vasumarti Payidanna v. Ganti Lakshminarasamma (6). My learned brother's decision in Adayapadi Ramanna Udpa v. Krishna Udpa (3) related not to the question of the want of representation of the minor, but to gross negligence in the conduct of the guardian properly appointed. I do not think that decision is relevant to the present case

Two decisions of the Allahabad High Court have been quoted which prima facie are in favour of appellants' contention. As regards Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (7) I do not find much difficulty. In that case a Court Amin was appointed, without notice to the mother, the natural guardian. The learned Judges held that it was an improper appointment. I do not understand them to have decided that the appointment was invalid In this view, the decision is not inconsistent with the Privy Council decision. But in a later case, Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (1), the learned Judges understood the earlier case to have decided that there was no valid appointment of a guardian and on this construction of their Court's judgment, they held that Order IX, rule 13, was applicable to the case. It may be remarked that the learned Judges relied on the inherent power of the Court to vacate the judgment: when this provision is appealed to, I fail to see why the order should have been set aside under Order IX, rule 13. As in my opinion the view taken in the last mentioned case is not reconcilable with Rashid-un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (4), I am unable to accept it as good law. There can be no question that to attract the provisions of the order relating to the setting aside of ex parte decrees, the person seeking the aid of the Court must be a party to the suit. It is of the essence of Order IX, rule 13, that the complaint must come from one whose rights could validly be dealt with by the trial Court. If in consequence of the failure to have a guardian appointed the minor was not properly before the Court, any decree passed against him and any proceedings intended to affect him would be nullities. He has his remedy against the invalid act of the Court in quite a different proceeding, and not in a proceeding instituted to set aside the decree treating him as if he were properly before the Court. This conclusion follows from the Privy Council decision and from the decision of this Court already quoted by me.

In my opinion the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that in the view of the facts he had expressed, the present application was incompetent. I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch I, Art. 182 (2)—Surety - Execution of decree against surety—Appeal by defendant—Limitation, commencement of.

A decree-holder has, under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, a right to execute his decree against a surety to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided for the execution of decrees. The fact that the defendant appealed, and that the sureties were not parties to the appeal, would make no difference. [p. 187, col. 2; p. 188, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 122 of 1915, reversing the order passed by the Subordinate Judge, Sirsi, in Miscellaneous Application No. 537 of 1913.

Messrs. Coyajee and A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—In this case an ex parte decree was originally passed against defendant No. 1 in Suit No. 342 of 1901; but that ex parte decree was set aside and the suit was ordered to be retried on the defendant No. 1 furnishing security. Two persons, who are now represented by the present appellants, stood sureties for the amount that the Court, in which the suit was filed, i.e., the Sirsi Court, might find the defendant liable for. Ultimately a decree was passed by the Sirsi Court against the defendant No. 1 on the 22nd March 1907 for a certain amount. The defendant appealed to the District Court, which, subject to some variation, with which we are not now concerned, confirmed the decree of the trial Court on the 15th April 1908. In second appeal this Court confirmed the decree of the District Court on the 13th February 1911. The decree-holder applied for a transfer of the decree for execution against the sureties on the 20th December 1913. The sureties contended that the execution as against them was time-barred, as no application for execution was made within three years from the date of the trial Court's decree which alone they had undertaken to satisfy. The first Court allowed this contention: but in appeal the District Court has disallowed it and has ordered the Court of first instance to proceed with the application against the sureties according to law.

In the appeal before us the same contention has been raised on behalf of the sureties: I am of opinion that the view taken by the District Court is right. It is clear from section 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the decree-holder has a right to execute the decree against a surety to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner provided for the execution of decrees. The article which governs the applications for execution is Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. The article prescribes three years' limitation from the date of the decree or where there has been an appeal, from the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court. The execution of the decree is clearly not time-barred, if the period of limitation begins to run from the final decree of the High Court in second appeal. Under this article the decree-holder has clearly a right to proceed against the sureties within the time allowed under clause 2 in the third column.

It is contended, however, that the sureties undertook to satisfy the decree of the Sirsi Court, that they have nothing to do with the appeal preferred by the defendant, to which they were not parties, and that the application is governed by clause 1 and not clause 2. I do not think that this contention is sound. For instance, if the defendant's appeal had succeeded, the sureties would have taken the benefit of the Appellate Court's decree in favour of the defendant It cannot be said that when they stood sureties for the defendant in the trial Court, they could not have contemplated the possibility of an appeal, which would be an ordinary incident of the litigation which was re opened with their assistance at the instance of defendant No. 1, and which would have the effect of extending the time from which the limitation would begin to run according to the Indian Limitation Act. The fact that the sureties would not be parties to the appeal could not make any difference.

Mr. Coyaji has relied upon the decision in Narayan v. Timmaya (1); but that decision is based upon the consideration of the explanation applicable to clause 5 in the third column. It has nothing to do with the point arising in this case. I do not think that that case lends any support to the contention that in determining the date from which the prescribed period of limitation under Article 182 should run in the present case, clause 1 only should be considered and that clause 2 can have no application, as the sureties were not parties to the Appellate Court's decree. I would dismiss the appeal and confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court with costs.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The applicants became sureties for the execution against defendants of the decree of the original Court. Their liability would be enforceable to the extent to which they have rendered themselves personally liable in the manner provided for the execution of decrees under section 145 of the Civil Procedure Code. They were, therefore, liable to be proceeded against within the ordinary period prescribed by limitation for the execution of such decrees. That period has been prescribed by Article 182 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. They have claimed to be governed by the first clause of that Article, and they have contended that execution has become time-barred against them as more than three years have elapsed since the date of the decree of the original Court. They have contended that the second clause applies only to parties who have appealed, and that it is only in the case of parties who have appealed that execution can be brought within three years of the date of the final decree of the Appellate Court. It seems to me that their contention is unsound and contrary to the plain and wide words of the clause, and that view was held in the similar case of defendants who had not appealed in Shivram v. Sakharam (2). It seems to me, therefore, that the execution was not time-barred and that the appellants were liable to be proceeded against in execution under clause 2 of Article 182 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A purchaser of a tenure at a sale in execution of a decree for rent due in respect of land on which there is a boraj or betel plantation, made by a tenant who originally held under a lease for a term of years but afterwards held over on payment of rent, takes subject to the protected interest of the tenant and the rights of such a purchaser are controlled by the provisions of section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 189, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Tipperah, dated the 6th February 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Brahmanbaria, dated the 10th March 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sasadhar Roy (Senior), for Defendant No. 1 Appellant.—There can be no denying the fact that the plaintiff-respondent is the lawful purchaser of the tenure in question. But the point in issue is—does he take it subject to 'protected interests'? Section 160, clause (c), of the Bengal Tenancy Act mentions that any lease of land on which plantations have been made is a protected interest. The disputed land contains a betel leaf plantation which has been there for nearly 30 years. It was quite in good faith that defendant No. 1 took settlement of this plantation from the original owner Ram Kumar. So the plaintiff's purchase must have been subject to the interest of defendant No. 1. Refers to Banko Behary Das v. Krishna Chandra Bhowmick (1).

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Respondent.—The Khatiar, Exhibit 5, shows that the plaint lands were raiyati lands under the Maharaja, defendant No. 3. The correctness of the Khatian has neither been strongly impugned nor rebutted. Moreover under clause (c) of section 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plantation, in order to become a protected interest, must be a permanent plantation, about which there has been neither any investigation nor any finding. The lease of the land referred to in the said clause must be a permanent lease. Then refers to Jogendra Narain Roy v. Kiran Chandra Ray (2).

Babu Sasadhar Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the purchaser in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect of the land in suit. Section 159 of the Bengal Tenancy Act controls his rights. He as purchaser takes the tenure subject to the interests defined in Chapter XIV as "protected interests." Section 160 deals with protected interests, and clause (c) mentions any lease of land whereon plantations have been made amongst others. The land in suit contains a boraj or betel leaf plantation. It has been in existence for about 30 years. The land originally belonged to one Ram Kumar who claimed Lakheraj title to it. He made a settlement for a term of three years to the contending defendant for making betel groves. That lease undoubtedly provided that he was to give up the land after the expiry of the lease. He held over and continued to pay rent to Ram Kumar. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that Ram Kumar's claim that it was Lakheraj land, is not justified. He has found, however, that Ram Kumar was not a trespasser, but he was the original owner either as Lakherajdar or as raiyat and was in actual possession of the land. There was no want of good faith on his part in settling the land with defendant No. 1 for a term of three years and no want of good faith on the part of the defendant No. 1 for taking settlement for the said term.

Reliance, however, is placed by the learned Subordinate Judge upon a Khatian, Exhibit 5, which says that the plaint lands were raiyati lands under the Maharaja, defendant No. 3. He finds that except the Potta Exhibit A, by which the land was granted as the Lakheraj of Ram Kumar, there is no other document in favour of that contention. He has overlooked Exhibit C which is a mortgage and he has not attached any importance to the oral evidence which is quoted in his judgment, namely, that of witness No. 4. He thinks that the correctness of the Khatian has not been rebutted, whereas the learned Munsif having regard to all this evidence held that it was rebutted.

But the contention pressed before us is that the plaintiff's purchase is subject to the interest of defendant No. 1, who made a plantation and had a lease of the land whereon his plantation stood. There is no doubt that section 160 (c) covers such interest. This has been held in Banko Behary Das v. Krishna Chandra Bhowmick (1). There Mr. Justice Chatterjee held that the land in which a boraj is made is a protected interest within the meaning of section 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That judgment was affirmed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Mookerjee. It has, however, been strenuously urged before us that the plantation referred to in clause (c) must be a permanent plantation and that also the lease of the land referred to therein must be a permanent lease. But the clause itself mentions "any lease of land", and so far as the betel plantation is concerned, we think it is covered by the decision we have referred to and it is a protected interest. The whole of the land in Exhibit A was leased out as a boraj vita and there is a small orchard on it. Kiran Chandra Roy v Niamuddi (3) may in this connection be referred to. Jogendra Narain Roy v. Kiran Chandra Ray (2) does not affect this case, as the whole of the land mentioned in the lease is boraj vita. There is no case made here for an enquiry if any portion of the land can be excepted.

We, therefore, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and affirm that made by the Munsif. The appellant is entitled to the costs of all Courts.

Decree set aside.

Where in a suit under section 156 of the Agra Tenancy Act, read with section 34 thereof, the defendant pleads a proprietary title, the Revenue Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain and examine the plea under section 177 (e) of the Act; this function rests with the Civil Court [p. 191, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated 13th September 1918, in the case of determination of rent.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—The defendant-appellant Lachmi Narayan is tenant. The plaintiff-respondant, Musammat Sardar Kuar, sued him under section 156, Tenancy Act, read with section 34 for assessment of rent on 7 unrented plots about 2 acres in area. The suit was a sequel of the Board's appellate order of 10th—15th February 1915 in Petition No. 7 of 1913-14, which indicated proceedings under the Resumption Chapter as a possible course for the present plaintiff-respondent to take.

The tenant on 13th September 1917 pleaded in the first Court, inter alia, that he had acquired proprietary title by adverse possession or by operation of section 157. The Assistant Commissioner accepted the latter plea, found that the plaintiff's suit under section 156 was barred by section 158 and dismissed it. The Assistant Collector's issue and decision were not so concise as they might have been, but there is no doubt that the defendant raised the plea, which was practically covered by the first issue framed, "Is the suit maintainable under section 156, Tenancy Act?" and it was decided. The plaintiff appealed to the Commissioner and in reply the defendant again pressed in writing on 13th September 1918 that he was a proprietor. Thus, prima facie, the conditions of section 177 (e), Tenancy Act, were present and made it incumbent on the Commissioner to return the appeal for presentation in the Court of the District Judge.

The Commissioner in appeal refused to take the latter course, because the defendant's plea of proprietary right went further than his plea of 13th September 1917 and an admission of tenancy on 20th November 1913 in the previous case. He held that this made defendant's present extended plea of proprietary right negligible and that he could hear the appeal, which he proceeded to do.

In the first ground of his second appeal the tenant urges that the Commissioner acted ultra vires in hearing the appeal.

Rulings on the point are conflicting. In 1917 a Bench of two Judges in a case, Damodar Das v. Jhaoo Singh (1), held that the language of section 177 must be followed as it is. That case had for its subject a question of jurisdiction under section 177 (f). The learned Judges held that the bare fact of a question of jurisdiction having been decided, whether properly or not, necessarily barred the Commissioner from hearing the appeal. It would follow by analogy that whatever pleas or admissions in previous proceedings a party may have made, a Commissioner must consider only the case before him and if in it the conditions of section 177(e) are present, he must refer the appellant to the Civil Court.

Against this, the appellant quotes a decision of the Hon'ble High Court (Richards, C. J.) in Deo Narain Singh v. Sitla Baksh Singh (2), in which the learned Chief Justice remarked that "It would be reducing matters to an absolute absurdity to hold that the defendants in a revenue suit could by formally raising an absolutely untenable plea of jurisdiction take every case from the Revenue Court to the Civil Court." Though the learned Chief Justice did not quote section 151, Civil Procedure Code, it is evident that his finding merely followed the principle of that section, in holding that an "absurd" plea of jurisdiction is outside the scope of section 177 (f), Tenancy Act, but I cannot apply this ruling to the case before me. There was nothing absurd in the plea of proprietorship under section 158 taken by the defendant-appellant in the present case and, however, convinced the Commissioner may have felt that the District Judge would hold that the tenant could have no case superior to his pleas and admissions in a previous case, he was not in my opinion justified in assuming the function which under section 177 (e) rested with the Civil Judge. He interpreted the section as he would like to see it and not as it is. I would, therefore, accept ground 1 of this appeal and, setting aside the Commissioner's appellate order, direct him to return the appeal to the respondent, the plaintiff appellant in the Commissioner's Court, for presentation to the proper Court, viz., the District Judge, under section 177 (e), Tenancy Act.

In holding that the above is the proper order to pass in this case, I have not omitted to consider a point which the respondent has raised, to the effect that the appeal is premature and that appellant should have waited till the assessment of rent which the Commissioner has ordered has been made. He has quoted Zohra v. Mangu Lal (3) and Anandgir v. Sri Niwas (4), and the appellant has referred to decisions of the Board. The hitherto practice of the Board has been to admit appeals on the main subject matter of a case without waiting for the final settlement of subsidiary details, such as determination of amount of rent or revenue which the Commissioner's appellate order directs. There is a good deal to be said on both sides, but the present is not a suitable case for a new departure in the Board's practice. To throw out this appeal as premature would merely delay letting the parties know that the proceedings in the Commissioner's Court were invalid.

I would give appellant his costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I agree in the order proposed. The Commissioner has found that the plea of proprietary title raised by the appellant is not substantiated, but in order to arrive at that finding he had to entertain and examine the plea, which he had not jurisdiction to do. This is not a case of an absurd or absolutely untenable plea raised by a party to enable him to select his own forum of appeal.

Appeal accepted.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 73—Damages, measure of—Lease—Failure of lessor to give possession to lessee—Assessment of damages, mode of.

Section 73 of the Contract Act lays down the principles to be employed in assessing damages and embodies the principles of English Law on the subject. The loss or damage must arise naturally in the usual course of things from the breach or it must be such as the parties knew to be likely to result from the breach. In estimating the loss, the means which existed of remedying the inconvenience must be taken into account [p 194, col 1.]

In an action for damages for the lessor's failure to give possession of the lands leased to the lessee, the plaintiff is entitled to the primary profits he would have derived had he cultivated the lands in a husband like manner, i.e, the net and not the gross produce, making deductions for the expenses of cultivation and the failure of season, if any. The amount fixed in the contract cannot form the criterion for assessing damages, and the opportunities which the plaintiff had of renting other lands should be taken into account. [p 193, col. 2]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 17 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Cocanada, in Original Suit No 238 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Narasimha Row, for the Appellant.—Plaintiff was entitled, in any event, only to nominal damages. See Mahomed Esa Khan v. Baboo Keshub Lall (1). The District Munsif has, in fact, awarded him the gross produce of the lands. He has not taken into account the want of rains and the cost of cultivation. Besides, there has been no enquiry as to the opportunities plaintiff had of getting a lease of other lands.

Messrs. P. Somasundram and C. Rama Row, for the Respondents—The principles regulating assessment of damages are laid down in section 73 of the Contract Act. The proper test is to see what profits plaintiff would have derived had he cultivated the lands. The lower Courts have applied the right test. See Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2). The test is the profit which the plaintiff would have derived if he had been put into possession and interest at 6 per cent. per annum.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The defendant gave a lease of about 11 acres of inam lands for 5 years to the plaintiff beginning with 1911. Before the cowle to the plaintiff the lands had been leased to another person. The plaintiff attempted to take possession of the lands but was unable to get them in the first year. In the second year he was able to get possession of a few acres and in the third year a few more. The suit was instituted for damages for failure to give possession. The defence was that there was no undertaking to give possession, that the defendant did give possession of the lands, that the damages were excessive and that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit. The District Munsif held that the suit was maintainable and following the Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2) gave the plaintiff a decree for his share of the crops as estimated in the cowle, Exhibit A. This decree was confirmed on appeal.

In the second appeal it was not disputed that the suit was properly instituted. The only point seriously argued related to the measure of damages. Mr. Narasimha Rao, relying upon Mahamed Esa Khan v. Baboo Keshub Lal (1), contended that the plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages. The general rule as to damages, whether they relate to moveable or immoveable property, is contained in section 73 of the Indian Contract Act Two considerations arise in assessing damages: (1) whether the damage naturally arose in the usual course of things from the breach; and (2) whether the plaintiff had means of remedying the inconvenience and has neglected to avail himself of them. In Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2) the learned Judges without discussing the question, under very similar circumstances like the present, say: "The measure of damages is the amount of profits with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum which would have accrued to the plaintiff if he had been put in possession of the villages and was in enjoyment of the same during the term of the lease." In my opinion the observations are fully supported by the English authorities. In Fletcher v. Taylour (3) the defendant had contracted to build a ship which was to be delivered to the plaintiff in August 1854. It was not delivered till March 1855. It was held that as the primary object of the ship was to earn freight by carrying passengers, the measure of damages was the value of the profits which could have been obtained between the date fixed for the delivery and the date on which the ship was actually delivered. Wills, J., stated the law to be "that the measure of damages for the breach of a contract for delivery of a chattel should be governed by a similar rule to that which prevails in the case of a breach of contract for the payment of money," and concluded by saying "the measure of damages in such a case as this was held by analogy to be the average profit made by the use of such a chattel." In Trent and Humber Co., In re, Cambrian Steam Packet Co., Ex parte (4) the Lord Chancellor said: "The measure of damages is prima facie the sum which would have been earned in the ordinary course of employment of the chattel in the time." This principle was accepted as good law in Owners of the Steamship 'Gracie' v. Owners of the Steamship 'Argentino' (5). In Jaques v. Millar (6), which was a case of an agreement to grant a lease, Mr. Justice Fry after examining the case law on the point said: "The question of damages is a more difficult one. Damages are claimed, in addition to the specific performance of an agreement, in respect of the delay which was caused by the defendant's wilful refusal to perform his contract and the consequent loss of profit to the plaintiff. I think I am at liberty to consider what would have been the value of the possession of the premises to the plaintiff for the period between the 5th of September 1876 and the time when he actually obtained possession of other premises." Although this case was overruled by Marshall v. Berridge (7) on another question, the principle as to damages enunciated by the learned Judge was accepted in Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash (8). There are cases which draw a distinction between what are primary and secondary profits. Under the first heading profits or advantages which are the direct and immediate fruits of the contract are included. Under the latter class profits expected from dependent and collateral engagements entered into on the faith and in expectation of the performance of the principal contract are brought in. The decision in Madras Railway Company v. Govinda Rau (9), to which our attention was drawn, belongs to the latter category. In the present case the parties must have contemplated that the plaintiff would have cultivated the lands in a husbandlike manner and that he would have derived profit therefrom. That undoubtedly is what is known as the primary profits, and there is no reason why the plaintiff should not be entitled to it. The principle is neatly stated in Sedgwick on Damages, Volume III, section 984: "The general principle in this case is the same as in cases of refusal to convey, although the Courts are more nearly agreed in adopting the principle of complete compensation for the loss of the bargain. The ordinary rule is to allow the difference between the rental value of the premises for the term and the rent reserved." In another place (section 187) it is stated: "The rental value of a building will be the measure of damages in an action for delay in delivering possession." Applying this test to the present case, it is the net profit which the plaintiff would have derived, that should be awarded to him. The District Munsif was wrong in holding that the decree which he gave represented the net profit of the lands. From the evidence of the plaintiff it is clear that it was the gross produce. From this, deduction will have to be made for the expenses of the cultivation and for the failure of season, if any, during the period for which damages are claimed. The amount which has been fixed in the contract should not be the criterion for assessing damages. Further, as was pointed out in one of the cases already quoted, the opportunities which the plaintiff had of renting other lands should be taken into account. Therefore, before finally disposing of this case we must ask for a finding on this question, namely:—

(1) "What was the net profit which the plaintiff could have derived during the period he was out of possession?"

The finding should be given on the evidence on record within 6 weeks: and 7 days will be allowed for objections.

PHILLIPS, J.—The question of quantum of damages is somewhat difficult. In Mahomed Esa Khan v. Baboo Keshub Lall (1) it was held in a similar case that plaintiff was only entitled to nominal damages, but in this Court in the Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2) it was held that the measure of damages is the amount of profit with interest at 6 per cent. per annum which would have accrued to the plaintiff if he had been put in possession, and the issue sent down for trial was: "What is the amount of net profits.....which the plaintiff would have derived from the villages leased to him, if he had been in possession of the villages during the term of the lease?"

Section 73 of the Contract Act lays down the principles to be employed in assessing damages and embodies the principles of English Law on the subject, vide Jaques v. Millar (6) and Mayne on Damages, pages 64—66. The loss or damage must arise naturally in the usual course of things from the breach or it must be such as the parties knew to be likely to result from the breach. In the present case it may be assumed that the plaintiff would have cultivated the lands if he had been put into possession. He would, therefore, be entitled to the net profits that he would have made by such cultivation. In considering what should be set off against the gross profits, I think it must be assumed that the cultivation was carried on entirely by hired labour, for if the profit is calculated on the assumption that plaintiff himself worked, he would in the shape of compensation not only receive the value of that labour, but would be able to utilize the same labour for obtaining profit in some other direction.

The explanation to section 73 further lays down that in estimating the loss, the means which existed of remedying the inconvenience must be taken into account. In the present case, therefore, while it may probably be said that plaintiff could not conveniently have obtained other land for the first year of his lease, the same assumption could not be made for succeeding years and evidence would be necessary to show that he could have mitigated the loss by taking a lease of other land. With these remarks, therefore, I agree in the order proposed.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada submitted the following FINDING.—The issue sent to me for finding is, what is the net profit which the plaintiff could have derived during the period he was out of possession? I am directed to give the finding on the evidence on record.

2. The facts as found are that the defendant leased to the plaintiff A. 10—93 cents (roughly 11 acres) of land for a period of 5 years, but the latter was not put in possession and enjoyed no portion in the first year and only 6 acres in each of the subsequent 2 years. The lease is on sharing system, the tenant (plaintiff) having to meet the cultivation expenses and take half of the gross yield and deliver the other half to the landlord (defendant). The suit is for damages and the amount is estimated in the plaint on the footing that 1 putti per acre was the outturn after deducting the cultivation expenses (vide paragraph 7 of the plaint). In the defendant's written statement, paragraph 4, he claimed rent at 6 putties a year and this would be so if the gross yield is 12 putties for the whole of 11 acres. The difference between the plaintiff's figure and the defendant's, so far as the pleadings go, is 1 putti for the whole, and this more than covers the cultivation expenses which according to the evidence of plaintiff's 7th witness would be Rs. 6 an acre. Thus both the parties are agreed that 1 putti per acre is the net yield after deducting the cultivation expenses. It is why the defendant did not let in any evidence to contradict the plaintiff's estimate of the produce made in his plaint. On the contrary the defendant in his own deposition (defendant's 1st witness) admitted the yield to be 4 garces (equivalent to 12 putties), and this is in conformity to his written statement. No doubt in the plaintiff's deposition he is mentioned as having stated that the yield was 1 putti per acre gross. This should be a mistake, for it is the case of neither party and I cannot press it against the plaintiff. As to the price of paddy both the parties admitted it in the pleadings to be Rs. 150 a putti and I should adopt this figure ignoring what the plaintiff has stated in his deposition. The result is that the amount claimed in the plaint both as regards the quantity and value is correct and should be accepted. The sum of Rs. 520 claimed represented the plaintiff's half share out of the yield of land not put in his possession during the period of 3 years under consideration—deducting what he would have had to bear for the cultivation expenses.

3. The observations in the judgment of the High Court are to the effect that the damages should be assessed making deductions from the gross produce of the land in respect of 3 heads, (1) the cultivation expenses, (2) the failure of season, if any, and (3) the opportunity the plaintiff might have had to take other lands on lease. The first point has been considered above in arriving at the figures Rs. 520. As to the 2nd and 3rd points, there is no evidence on record and as there can be no presumption that either of them existed during any of the 3 years in question, I should hold that no deduction can be made in respect thereof. Leases of lands are not always procurable and the existence of opportunity, therefore, should be proved.

4. The appellant's Pleader argues that deduction should also be made for the rent due to the defendant on the entire 11 acres. This contention was overruled by my predecessor when dealing with it in paragraph 7 of his judgment, and in the judgment of the High Court no reference is made to it. I do not know if it is permissible for the appellant to raise this point here when the judgment of the High Court states definitely the principle on which the damages should be assessed and the heads of items in respect of which deductions should be made, of which this is not one. I may, however, state that the contention is quite untenable. The observations in Zamindar of Vizianagram v. Behara Suryanarayana Patrulu (2), followed in the present remand order, clearly lay down the measure of damages to be the amount of profits which would have accrued to the plaintiff if he was put in possession and was in enjoyment during the term of the lease. Applying this test the plaintiff's profit would have been half the net produce of the whole 11 acres during the first year and of 5 acres in each of the two subsequent years. The defendant could get nothing for rent for the first year and is, of course, entitled to rent in respect of the 6 acres enjoyed by the plaintiff in the subsequent two years. There is a dispute between the parties as to whether this rent has been paid or not, and it needs no consideration here as it is admitted that a suit is pending between them about it. The observations in Meenakshi Sundara Nachiar v. Chidambaram Chetty (10) do not support the defendant's contention about his claim for rent for the whole land where no part of it or only a portion of it was delivered as here.

5. I, therefore, find on the issue remitted that the net profit the plaintiff could have derived is as claimed in the plaint, which amounts to Rs. 520 for all the 3 years together.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court on the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. JUDGMENT.—We are concerned in this appeal with the interpretation of a Will executed by one Vithoba a few days before his death, whereby he gave the whole of his moveable and immoveable property to his wife Bakai. He had two other wives, one of whom predeceased him leaving a daughter, plaintiff No. 1, the other, Rajai, was not on good terms with her husband as stated in the Will. She had, however, an unmarried daughter plaintiff No. 2, the only one of Vithoba's four daughters who was unmarried at the date of the Will. She has been since married and the expenses were defrayed out of the estate of Vithoba. Bakai died in 1916, and the two plaintiffs seek to recover possession of immoveable property alienated by their step-mother Bakai, but her own daughters support the alienation as they claim the unalienated property exclusively for themselves. Both the Courts below have held that an absolute estate was created in favour of Bakai and that she had power to validly transfer the fields in suit without legal necessity.

The test to be applied in such a case was laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1). At page 231 their Lordships say: "In construing the Will of a Hindu it is not improper to take into consideration what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property. It may be assumed that a Hindu generally desires that an estate, especially an ancestral estate, shall be retained in his family, and it may be assumed that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule at all events, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are unable to alienate." Further, all the expressions of the Will must be taken together without any one being insisted upon to the exclusion of others.

The main argument on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants is that the object of the Will was to disinherit Rajai and to prevent mismanagement after Vithoba's death, and not to give an alienable estate to Bakai. Although there are no words expressly authorising Bakai to transfer the immoveable property, she is described as full owner (pura malik). The same clause disposes of the moveable and immoveable property. The Will says: "You should enjoy from generation to generation in the same way as I have been enjoying as owner." The legatee is made a new stock of descent. The testator knew that two of his daughters would not be her heirs. The only provision for the daughters is that they are to be entertained on the "homecoming" in the ordinary way and the marriage expenses of the unmarried girl are declared a charge on the estate. It seems to me that even if there had been an express prohibition to transfer immoveable property the two plaintiffs would be out of Court, not being Bakai's heirs when her own daughters are living. Again, the Will gives maintenance to Rajai but contemplates the possibility of her re-marriage and in such event, her ornaments are given to Bakai and not to Rajai's daughter. As regards Bakai, she appears to have been over thirty at least at the date of the Will and had two married daughters and the testator does not contemplate the possibility of her re-marriage, I am, therefore, not called upon to answer the somewhat difficult question raised by Counsel as to what would happen on such re-marriage. I should note that there is nothing in the Will which qualifies the expressions and clauses cited above. I think the view taken by the Courts below is correct and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The facts material to the point arising in this second appeal after the remand are briefly these. One Tyabaji Farzullabhai applied to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, Bombay, and the usual vesting order was made on the 10th January 1887. Subsequently on the debtor's application a personal discharge subject to any further orders was allowed and in accordance with the practice that obtained then, a judgment for all the debts was entered against the insolvent in favour of the Official Assignee under section 86 of the Indian Insolvency Act (11 & 12 Vic, c. 21) on the 17th August 1887. The insolvent did not obtain any final discharge under the Act, and in fact nothing was done in the matter of the insolvency up to his death in 1904 or up to November 1917 after his death. Owing to the non-production of the necessary papers the lower Appellate Court had some doubt as to the existence of the vesting order and as to whether there was a final discharge of the insolvent. In the argument before us the facts as stated above have not been disputed, and the papers relating to this insolvency, which we have seen with the consent of the parties in order to avoid delay and further remand on points capable of being easily ascertained, support the statement. Tyabaji was, therefore, an undischarged insolvent from 1887 to the time of his death in 1904.

In 1898 Tyabaji purchased a house at Kapadvanj and mortgaged it with possession on the same day (9th July 1898) to one Vajiraboo for Rs. 700 Babashahi and executed a second mortgage in favour of one Jamnadas on the same day. It is found by the lower Appellate Court and not contested before us that the house was purchased by Tyabaji with the money borrowed from the two mortgagees.

Jamnadas filed Suit No. 93 of 1910 on his mortgage against the heirs of Tyabaji and obtained a decree, in execution whereof the house was sold through the Court subject to the first mortgage and purchased by the present plaintiff, Vadilal, on the 12th September 1912. The plaintiff as auction-purchaser then filed the present suit against the defendants, the heirs of Vajiraboo, for redemption of the first mortgage. The trial Court allowed the plaintiff's claim. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree. On appeal to this Court certain issues were sent down for findings in connection with the insolvency of Tyabaji. Before the remand the defendants purchased the right, title and interest of the Official Assignee in November 1917.

On these facts it is urged on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiff did not purchase Tyabaji's interest at the Court sale as it was vested in the Official Assignee, and that they having purchased that interest from the Official Assignee, they are entitled and willing to redeem the mortgage in favour of Jamnadas which is vested in the plaintiff. It is conceded on behalf of the defendants that this mortgage now vested in the plaintiff is binding upon the Official Assignee and that the plaintiff is entitled to be redeemed. The plaintiff contends that the after-acquired property of the insolvent cannot vest in the Official Assignee until he intervenes, and that the Court-sale which took place long before his intervention is binding upon him, and conveys to the plaintiff the whole interest of Tyabaji and the second mortgagee subject, of course, to the first mortgage.

It may be mentioned that the point now made on behalf of the defendants was not urged in the trial Court, and that what is described as the intervention of the Official Assignee really came into existence long after the decision of the lower Appellate Court. It involves practically a reconsideration of the rights of the parties on a new basis. This Court has, however, allowed the point to be raised at the time of the remand, and it is clear that the appellants are entitled to have their rights determined on the facts now ascertained.

It must be taken for the purpose of this appeal that the transactions of the insolvent with Jamnadas and Vajiraboo were bona fide and for value, that Jamnadas sued the heirs of Tyabaji in complete ignorance of the insolvency proceedings, and that the subsequent proceedings on the suit resulting in the Court sale were bona fide throughout.

It is urged, however, that under section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act, the interest of Tyabaji was vested in the Official Assignee. No doubt that section applies to after-acquired property of the insolvent. But as pointed out in Kerakoose v. Brooks (1), the right of the Official Assignee is subject to the qualification that "if the insolvent has acquired property subject to liens and obligations, then any property taken by the assignee under that state of things is taken subject to those charges and equities which affect the property in the hands of the insolvent." It is not necessary to refer to the other qualification mentioned by their Lordships of the Privy Council. It is conceded in the present case that the Official Assignee would take the property subject to the two mortgages effected by Tyabaji in 1898; and in view of the fact that Tyabaji purchased the property with the moneys received from the two mortgagees, it is indisputable that the insolvent acquired the property subject to those charges.

It is argued, however, that the equity of redemption was vested in the Official Assignee, and that the suit by Jamnadas was not properly constituted as the Official Assignee was not a party to it. It is urged by way of reply that the suit was properly constituted, that the sale in execution of the decree is binding upon the Official Assignee as a bona fide transaction for value, and the equity of redemption would not vest in the Assignee before his intervention according to the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2).

If the mortgage in favour of Jamnadas is good as against the Official Assignee, I do not see how the suit of 1910 can be said to be defective in any way. If Tyabaji or his heirs could have sued Jamnadas to redeem the mortgage in his favour as the Official Assignee had not intervened, Jamnadas could sue the heirs of Tyabaji to enforce his mortgage. It is difficult to see what else Jamnadas could have done to enforce his mortgage, as he was ignorant of Tyabaji's insolvency and as the Official Assignee had not intervened. The suit and all the subsequent proceedings appear to me to be quite proper on the assumption that at the time it was open to Tyabaji or his heirs to deal with the equity of redemption. The Court purchaser could not be in any worse position than a bona fide purchaser for value under similar circumstances from the insolvent or his heirs before the intervention of the Official Assignee, and the learned Counsel for the appellants has not suggested that he should be in any worse position.

It is urged, however, that a bona fide purchaser for value of the after-acquired immoveable property cannot get a good title against the Official Assignee even though the latter has not intervened, as the equity of redemption is vested in the Official Assignee. The plaintiff seeks to meet this contention by relying upon the rule in Cohen v Mitchell (2), which is stated by the Court of Appeal in these terms: "Until the trustee intervenes, all transactions by a bankrupt after his bankruptcy with any person dealing with him bona fide and for value in respect of his after-acquired property, whether with or without knowledge of the bankruptcy, are valid against the trustee." This rule is stated in perfectly general terms and there is no suggestion in the rule itself that it applies only to personal and not to real property. If this rule applies to after-acquired immoveable property in India, the appellants' contention must fail. The question, therefore, is whether it applies to such immoveable property.

It will be convenient to state briefly how the rule has been applied in England. It has been held that the rule does not apply to real estate: see New Land Development Association and Gray, In re (3). In this case the decision of Chitty, J., was upheld by the Court of Appeal on a different ground, but in the course of argument the Lords Justices expressed a strong opinion in favour of limiting the application of the rule to personal estate. In Clarke, In re, Beardmore, Ex parte (4). Davey, L. J., referred to the same rule with approval without any reference to the limitation as to the nature of the after acquired property. In 1895 Chitty, J., refused to attempt to introduce any limitation in the rule beyond that stated by him in the case of New Lond Development Association and Gray, In re (3) and applied the rule to leasehold property: see Clayton & Barclay's Contract, In re (5). In Official Receiver v. Cooke (6) Neville, J., felt himself bound to treat the rule as applicable only to personal estate including leaseholds. The same learned Judge applied it to the after acquired real estate, which undischarged bankrupts purchased as partners for partnership purposes and sold and conveyed to bona fide purchasers for value before the trustee intervened in the case of Kent County Gas Light and Coke Company Limited, In re (7). The rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) received a statutory recognition in section 11 of the Bankruptcy and Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. V, c. 34) and later in section 47, sub section (1) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1914 (4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 59). In the recent case of Hill v. Settle (8) Lord Cozens Hardy, M. R., after referring to Cohen v. Mitchell (2) and the Bankruptcy Act of 1914, has observed that "the Legislature has plainly recognised the validity and effect of that which is to be found in what is, no doubt, judge-made law as expressed in a series of decisions extending over some 200 years." I have not thought it necessary to refer to the decisions prior to Cohen v. Mitchell (2).

Thus it is clear that the rule has always been recognised as a beneficent rule, that though for some years the view that it did not apply to real property prevailed, the tendency was in favour of extending its application and that finally the Legislature has fully recognised the rule both as to the real and personal property, and has applied it retrospectively to all transactions completed before April 1914, subject to the condition that the trustee has intervened before that date.

In India long before the decision in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) it was held in Kristocomul Mitter v. Puresh Chunder Deb (9) that so long as the Official Assignee had not interfered, an insolvent who had not obtained his final discharge had power with respect to after-acquired property to buy and sell and give discharge and do all other acts which he could have done before his insolvency. The property in that suit was immoveable property. In Fatimabibi v. Fatimabibi (10) it was held by Parsons, J., that the Official Assignee was not a necessary party to a suit by the heirs of the deceased undischarged insolvent for a share in the after-acquired property, and that such property vested in the insolvent subject to the right of the Official Assignee to intervene and to claim the property. There is no reference to the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) in the judgment. The Madras High Court declined to apply the rule to dealings by the insolvent with immoveable property: see Rowlandson v. Champion (11). It may be noted that Collins, C. J., had in the first instance applied the rule to immoveable property. In appeal, however, the learned Judges reversed the order of the Chief Justice and their judgments show that their decision was influenced by the case of New Land Development Association and Gray, In re (3) already referred to. Later on in Sriramulu Naidu v Anjalammal (12) the decision in Fatimabibi v.

Fatimabibi (10) was approved, and the learned Judges were content to distinguish Rowlandson's case (11) on the ground that there was no question of contract or transfer by the insolvent relating to his after-acquired immoveable property. The rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) has been referred to in two decisions of this Court. In Naoroji Nusserwanji Thoonthi v. Kazi Sidick Mirza (13) it was considered in relation to a special set of facts, and there was no occasion to consider it with reference to the point arising in this case. At page 634 of the report it is pointed out that the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) could not apply to the agreement with which the Court had to deal in that case. In Macleod v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co, (14) it was urged that the doctrine of Cohen v. Mitchell (2) was limited to those cases where the insolvent's after acquired property had been the outcome of subsequent trade. The appeal was ultimately decided on a different ground, and the question of law was left undecided. But after referring to certain cases Jenkins, C. J., observed as follows:—"In the face of this I hesitate to say that the doctrine on which Cohen v. Mitchell (2) rests is limited to subsequent acquisitions in trade, though I do not say it may not be the correct view. In this connection I have not overlooked the decision in Kerakoose v. Brooks (1), but I am not clear that their Lordships intended there to lay down an exhaustive statement of the law as to after-acquired property except so far as was necessary for the purposes of the case then before them." I do not think that there can be any doubt as to the trend of the learned Chief Justice's opinion with reference to the scope of the doctrine on which Cohen v. Mitchell (2) is based. At any rate there is nothing in the judgment which is opposed to the view that the rule applies to all the after-acquired property, moveable and immoveable, of the insolvent.

On a careful consideration of all the decisions above referred to, it seems to me that the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) can be, and ought to be, applied to all the property, moveable and immoveable, acquired by the bankrupt after the adjudication order, provided that the transaction by the bankrupt is bona fide and for value and is completed before the intervention of the Official Assignee. In other words, I do not think that the nature of the after-acquired property forms any essential part of the rule: what is essential is that the transactions with reference to the property with third parties must be bona fide and for value and that they must be entered into before the Official Assignee intervenes. The reason of the rule does not compel the recognition of any restriction as to the nature of the property in its application: and I do not think that the distinction between real and personal property made in England in applying the rule can be properly applied to immoveable and moveable property in India. The statement of the law as to after acquired property in Kerakoose v. Brooks (1) has been held not to be exhaustive in Indian decisions; and the weight of judicial opinion in India seems to favour the view that the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (2) applies to the after acquired property, moveable as well as immoveable. With due respect for the opinion of the Madras High Court to the contrary in Rowlandson's case (11), I think that the rule can be properly applied to all after-acquired property, whether moveable or immoveable.

Thus in the present case the property was effectively disposed of before the Official Assignee can be said to have intervened. The conveyance in favour of the appellants by the Official Assignee cannot help them, as the Official Assignee had nothing to convey at the date.

For the purpose of this case, I have assumed that the Official Assignee intervened when he sold his right, title and interest to the appellants in November 1917. I am not sure that that amounts to an intervention on the part of the Official Assignee as is required to vest the property in him. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to examine the point further, as the transaction was completed long before the alleged intervention; and I express no opinion on the question whether the intervention such as we have here is effective.

I also refrain from expressing any opinion as to whether under the circumstances the Official Assignee should have attempted to enforce the judgment under section 83 of the Indian Insolvency Act or should have himself intervened in these proceedings, if he thought that he had any right to the property in suit, instead of allowing his intervention to be pleaded through the appellants.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court confirmed with costs.

HEATON, J.—My learned brother's judgment shows that the only point of interest in the case is whether section 7 of the Indian Insolvency Act, 11 & 12 Vic., c. 21, is to be literally construed or not. If it is, the words "do vest in the Official Assignee" must be given their full ordinary meaning. If that be done, then the entire interest in property apparently acquired by an undischarged insolvent belongs to the Official Assignee. Many years' experience both in India and England has demonstrated that this would be a most undesirable position. The words have not been literally construed either in India or in England. It is, therefore, established that there is a measure of freedom allowed to us in construing this section. That being so, I agree with the method of applying the section to the facts of this case adopted by my learned brother. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 33, scope of—Appellate Court, power of, in respect of non-appealing parties—Procedure, proper—Joinder of parties.

The object of Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, is to enable an Appellate Court to pass judgments or orders which would give consistency to its decisions and although the power to interfere with an order against a person who is not before it should be exercised with great care and caution, the discretion of the Court to grant relief which benefits a party who has not appealed is not hampered. [p. 202, col. 1.]

Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai, 28 Ind. Cas. 634; 28 M. L. J. 334; 17 M. L. T. 220 and Peria Krishnasami Naik v. Aiyappa Naik, 24 Ind. Cas. 924; 1 L. W. 376, followed.

The principle that no decree or order should be passed against a person without hearing him does not apply where the non-appealing party is benefited by the order. [p. 202, col. 1.]

The illustration to Order XLI, rule 33, Civil Procedure Code, is not exhaustive of the scope of the rule. [p. 202, col 1.]

Where interference with a decree in favour of a party not before the Court is deemed necessary, the Court should implead him in the exercise of its plenary powers so that he may avail himself of the benefit of the decree in execution. [p. 202, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No. 278 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Sub-Judge, Nellore, in Original Suit No. 31 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Y. Adiga, for the Appellant.—The lower Appellate Court erred in allowing the parties who did not appeal the benefit of his decree. No decree or order should be passed affecting a party who was not before the Court and was not heard. Ramachandra Mallya v. Narayana Hegade (1). See also the illustration to the rule.

Mr. T. V. Vencatramier, for the Respondents.—The language of the rule is wide enough to give the Appellate Court power to pass decrees in favour of non-appealing parties. Where the order is to prejudicially affect a party, he should be heard. Where the order is to benefit a person, the rule gives ample discretion to the Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—The first question argued by Mr. Adiga is that as Rs. 10,000 was paid in furtherance of an agreement which fell through, that sum should not be regarded as having been paid in satisfaction of the common decree. The answer to this is that in the application for execution as regards the balance of Rs. 5,000 the Rs. 10,000 was referred to as having been paid in part satisfaction, and the present plaintiff did not object to this statement. It is not open to him now to contend that the Rs. 10,000 was not paid towards the decree. We must, therefore, uphold the order of the District Judge.

It was next objected that as the District Munsif passed several decrees against each of the defendants and as only some of them appealed against the decrees so passed, it was not competent to the District Judge to act under Order XLI, rule 33, Code of Civil Procedure, in favour of the defendants who did not appeal. The language of the rule is wide enough to cover the case. The use of the two words respondents and parties shows that the Legislature contemplated interference by the Appellate Court even though some of the parties to the suit were not before it. This was the view taken in Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (2) and in Peria Krishnasami Naik v. Aiyappa Naik (3). As against these cases, the learned Vakil relied on the judgment of Kumaraswami Satri, J., in Ramachandra Mallya v. Narayana Hegade (1). The learned Judge rightly enough points out that no decree should be passed against a person without hearing him: but we do not think that this principle is applicable where the party who is not heard is not prejudiced by the order but is benefited by it. The learned Judge relies upon the illustration to rule 33; but that illustration is not exhaustive of the scope of the rule. The very object of the rule is to enable a Court to pass judgments or orders which would give consistency to its decisions and although the power to interfere with the order against a person who is not before it should be exercised with great care and caution, there is no ground for introducing into the language of the rule words which would unnecessarily hamper the Court's discretion. We may also say that in the majority of cases where interference with a decree in favour of a person not before the Court is deemed necessary, the Court should implead him in the exercise of the plenary powers possessed by it, so that the benefit of the decree may be availed of in execution.

We think the order of the District Judge is right and dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Bengal Cess Act (IX B. C. of 1880), s. 20—Road cess return, statement in, value of—Rent, rate of, determination of.

A statement made by a landlord in a road cess return is not merely an admission, it is a statutory bar under section 20 of the Bengal Cess Act to recovering rent at a rate higher than that shown in the cess return. [p. 203, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 18th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Mymensingh, dated the 20th August 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Romesh Chandra Sen (with him Babu Kali Kinker Chakraberty), for the Appellants, submitted that the lower Appellate Court erred in giving a decree to the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs. 28 6 13 per annum, when the entry in the Record of Rights showed that the annual rent was Rs. 20 and 5 pies only. The presumption arising from entries in the Record of Rights had not been sufficiently rebutted by the rent decrees relied on by the landlords in support of their case. The entries in the Record of Rights should be presumed to have been prepared with great care and should not, therefore, be lightly discarded. Further, the road cess return supported the case for the defence. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that that did not stand in the way of plaintiffs getting a decree to the full extent of their claim. The plaintiffs were not entitled to get a decree at a rate higher than what was stated in the return. Section 20 of the Act IX of 1880 was referred to.

No one appeared for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent, the only point in dispute between the parties being the rate of rent payable. The plaintiffs alleged that the rental was Rs. 28 6-13. The contesting defendants alleged that it was Rs. 27-0-5 pies. The Munsif decided in the defendants' favour. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal reversed that decision and decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendants' case is supported by the Record of Rights and also by a cess return. As regards the Record of Rights the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the presumption arising therefrom has been rebutted by the evidence of certain rent decrees. These rent decrees are evidence as to the rate of rent payable but do not operate as res judicata as held by the lower Appellate Court. As regards the road cess return the learned Subordinate Judge remarks: "The admission in the road cess return may well be explained away." But how it can be explained away, he does not state. The way he committed a serious error is that he treated the statement in the road cess return as an admission only. It is more than an admission under section 20 of the Cess Act, IX of 1880. There is a statutory bar to the plaintiffs recovering rent at a higher rate than that shown in the cess return. I, therefore, hold that the lower Appellate Court has given no satisfactory reasons for reversing the decision of the Court of first instance.

I accordingly decree this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Munsif.

The appellants will get their costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 101, 102—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870), s. 3—Disposition creating life-estate and bequeathing ulterior estate to person on attaining age, validity of—Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act (I of 1914), s. 2 (2)—"Time which is subsequent to such date," meaning of—Vesting after passing of Act, effect of.

When by a disposition a previous life-estate is created, and the ulterior estate is bequeathed to a person on his attaining age, such disposition is valid. [p. 204, col. 1.]

Having regard to the terms of section 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, sections 101 and 102 of the Succession Act, which are applicable to Hindus, must be read as if they contained a proviso that the disposition must be of such a character as could have been made before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, but this provision can be availed of only if the person who invokes its aid is not precluded by any law to which he is subject from availing himself of it. [p. 204, col. 1.]

The expression "at a time which is subsequent to such date" in sub-section 2 of section 2 of the Madras Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act, 1914, does not refer to any fixed period, and if the final vesting is to take place after the passing of the Act, the Act would validate such disposition. [p. 204, col. 1]

Second appeals against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 136 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Trivellore, in Original Suit No. 328 of 1914.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyar and O. Viraraqavulu Chetty, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. S. Vencatrama Aiyar, for the Respondents.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on the 8th of November 1918, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We feel no doubt that if sections 101 and 102 of the Succession Act applied to the case, the provision in favour of the grandson would be valid. Illustration (c) to section 101 would cover the case. As regards Sivasankara Pillai v. Soobramania Pillai (1) relied by the Subordinate Judge, it is enough to say that all the ulterior dispositions in that case were not in favour of minors who would be of age when the property was to vest in them. Therefore, that decision would not preclude us from holding that when a previous life-estate is created and the ulterior estate is to a person on his attaining age, such a disposition is valid.

But it was contended before us by the learned Vakil for the 2nd respondent in Second Appeal No. 1499 of 1917 that as the testator intended to create an interest in favour of unborn persons, the Will is invalid. We think that having regard to section 3 of Hindu Wills Act, sections 101 and 102 of the Succession Act, which were made applicable to Hindus, must be read as if they contained a proviso that the disposition must be of such a character as could have been made before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act. Moreover, the frame of the two sections suggests that the provision can be availed of only if the person who invokes its aid is not precluded by any law to which he is subject from availing himself of it. In answer to this contention, it was suggested by the learned Vakil for the appellant in Second Appeal No. 1499 of 1917 that the Hindu Bequests Act, Act I of 1914, would render the disposition valid. We are disposed to agree with this contention. The expression "at a time which is subsequent to such date" does not refer to any fixed period as was contended for by the respondent. In our opinion if the final vesting takes place after the passing of the Act as it must necessarily be in this case, the Act would validate such a disposition. The decision in Kudapa Venkayamma v. Kakarla Narasamma (2) supports this proposition.

Even in this view, the question arises whether the plaintiff is not protected by the proviso. That would depend upon facts which have not been ascertained. No issue was raised on the question. Still we think that the plaintiff should have an opportunity of showing that he comes under the proviso. We shall, therefore, remit the issue to the Subordinate Judge whether the plaintiff was a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration in whom the right to property vested prior to the date of Act I of 1914.

Fresh evidence may be taken.

Finding should be submitted within two months from the date of receipt of records and seven days will be allowed for filing objections. The costs of this enquiry must in any event be paid by the plaintiff.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Chingleput submitted the following

FINDING.—I have been directed by the High Court to submit finding on the issue framed, viz.:—Whether the plaintiff was a bona fide transferee for valuable consideration in whom the right of property vested prior to the date of Act I of 1914.

2. The plaintiff examined himself and two more witnesses since the case was remitted. He also produced a receipt Exhibit M and an account book Exhibit N on the date of hearing. The defendants examined no witnesses and filed no documents.

3. The evidence of the plaintiff shows that Sadasiva executed the sale deed Exhibit B for Rs. 190 and that the consideration therefor was a prior mortgage evidenced by Exhibit D and Rs. 30 cash taken. He also proves that the mortgage money was taken for the purchase of plough cattle for the family and that Rs. 30 was taken for the nisheka muhurtham of the mortgagor Sadasiva's daughter. Plaintiff's 4th witness Raju Chetty, who has attested the mortgage-bond Exhibit D, corroborates plaintiff as regards the nature of the consideration for the mortgage; and as regards the Rs. 30 he says that the amount was reserved with the mortgagee for payment after the registration of the document. This witness has also attested Exhibit B. The writer of Exhibit B Ponna Pillai, examined as plaintiff's 3rd witness, proves the sale-deed and the purpose for which the same was executed.

4. There was nothing elicited in the course of the cross-examination so much as to discredit the evidence of plaintiff and his witnesses. The plaintiff does not appear to be in any way closely connected with Sadasiva and there is no reason to think that the document Exhibit B is other than a bona fide one. The sale is a transaction binding on the mortgagor's sons as well.

(1) 31 M. 517; 4 M. L. T. 306.

(2) 35 Ind. Cas. 150; 40 M. 510; 31 M. L. J. 33; 20 M. L. T. 221; 4 L. W. 189.

5. As regards the other sale by Sachidananda, the deed is marked Exhibit A which purports to be for Rs. 250. Rupees 200 of this amount is said to be due under a prior mortgage bond Exhibit C and Rs. 50 is said to have been under dealings. The consideration is proved in this case also by the writer plaintiff's 3rd witness, the attestor plaintiff's 4th witness, Raju Chetty and by plaintiff. As regards the 50 rupees the document of the sale Exhibit A recites that it was received that day. But it, however, appears in the evidence that it was due under money dealings. It appears from the evidence of plaintiff's 4th witness that Sachidananda owed a cloth merchant Rs. 15 and the plaintiff undertook to pay that Rs. 15 also, which together with the amount due under prior dealings came up to Rs. 50. In respect of this transaction also there is nothing to suspect in the evidence of plaintiff and his witnesses. The sale is one binding on the sons.

6. I have not referred to the accounts Exhibits N and N 1 and the receipt Exhibit M, as they do not appear to be above suspicion. But that does not in my opinion detract from the value to be given to the evidence of plaintiff and his witnesses. It appears in the evidence of witnesses aforesaid that plaintiff obtained possession soon after the sale and that there was obstruction for his enjoyment only about a year later. I am prepared to believe the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses in so far as it goes to show that plaintiff obtained possession and leased the same, though I have reason to think that plaintiff was not able to realise the rents due from his lessees owing to the obstruction of the executors.

7. Believing the evidence of plaintiff and his witnesses which is not shaken by the cross-examination and in view also of the fact that no evidence was adduced on the other side in rebuttal, I find this issue in the affirmative.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding, reverse the decrees of both the Courts below and give a decree to plaintiff as sued for with costs throughout: only one set of costs in this Court excepting the costs of the enquiry.

Execution of decree—Objections to attachment, dismissal of—Declaration of title, suit for—Burden of proof—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Auction-purchaser, whether subsequent transferee.

Where a person objects to the attachment and sale of property in execution of a decree on the ground that the property is his under a sale-deed and his objection is disposed of otherwise than on the merits, whereupon he sues to obtain a declaration that the property is his and is not liable to attachment, the onus of proving mala fides and want of consideration on the plaintiff's part is on those who seek to resist the claim. [p. 207, col. 1.]

An auction-purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree is not a "subsequent transferee" entitled to impeach a previous transfer under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 207, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the appellate decree of the 2nd Additional District Judge, Akola, decided on the 26th October 1918, arising out of the decree of the Munsif, Akola, decided on the 4th March 1918.

Mr. Y. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the first four respondents purchased from the sixth respondent Nagoji on the 8th September 1914 four fields in Mauza Nakshi, a field in Mauza Bharatpur and some house property for Rs. 4,000. The sale deed Exhibit P 3 recites that the consideration had already been received in advance. The document was written by a petition-writer at Balapur and registered the same day. On the 31st August preceding the fifth respondent Motilal had obtained a decree for payment of Rs. 1,315 against Nagoji. On the 21st December following Motilal applied for execution and caused two of the fields sold, namely, No. 62-1 of Nakshi and No. 156-2 of Bharatpur, to be attached. Form C was sent to the Collector on the 14th August 1915 and eventually No. 62-1 in Nakshi alone was sold, the price fetched being Rs. 550 and the sale being confirmed on the 2nd October 1916. The auction-purchaser was the present appellant Awadhut.

The suit out of which this second appeal arises was filed on the 21st September 1916 by the vendees under Exhibit P-3. They claimed a declaration that No. 62-1 in Nakshi and No. 156 2 in Bharatpur belong to the plaintiffs and are in their possession by virtue of the sale-deed and that they are not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree obtained by the defendant Motilal against Nagoji.

The defence set up by the auction-purchaser, the present appellant, was as follows:—

"Defendant No. 4 denies the sale-deed and its consideration. If there be any, it was simply to defraud his creditors because Suit sic No. 72 of 1914, Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Akola, was passed on the 31st August 1914 and the alleged sale-deed was executed on the 8th September 1914. All the other allegations are admitted."

The following issues were framed:—

1. Whether the defendant No. 2 executed the sale-deed for Rs. 4,000 in the plaintiff's favour as alleged;

2. Was the sale-deed executed with intent to defraud creditors as alleged.

The trial Judge found as follows on issue No. 1:—

P. W. No. 3 is the attesting witness on the sale-deed (Exhibit P-3). He duly proves it. P. W. No. 4 deposes that Rs. 4,000 were paid to defendant No. 2 as consideration. I, therefore, hold that defendant No. 2 executed the sale-deed for Rs. 4,000 in plaintiffs' favour.

On issue No. 2, however, he decided that the actual payment of consideration was not satisfactorily made out and that by reason also of certain other circumstances, which he mentioned, the sale was a bogus one, being simply intended to shield Nagoji against his creditors. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court and the Additional District Judge gave them the declaration sought for, holding that the evidence established the passing of the consideration and that in accordance with the view taken in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) a defence based on section 53, Transfer of Property Act, is not available to an attaching creditor.

The second appeal is preferred by the auction purchaser alone and it is urged that the lower Appellate Court has altogether failed to notice certain circumstances which are relevant to the question whether the sale to the plaintiffs was a mere cloak to shield the property from creditors. As to the passing of the consideration it is urged that the evidence of Sambhu (P. W. No. 4) and the defendant Nagoji (P. W. No. 6), on which the lower Appellate Court has relied, is inconsistent with the recital in the deed, but on reading their depositions I am unable to find any such discrepancy. The deed does not give the date on which the consideration was paid and all that the two witnesses say on the subject is as follows:—

Sambhu:—

The consideration was paid to Nagoji on the date of the execution of the sale-deed. In my presence the sale-deed was not executed.

Nagoji:—

"The sale-deed was executed about 9 A. M. I received the consideration on the day the deed was registered.

Sambhu lives at Nakshi 12 miles from Balapur, and it is quite possible that the money was paid at Nakshi where the plaintiffs live before the party left for Balapur.

Much stress is laid on the point that Nagoji is a brother of the plaintiff Jairam. The significance of this is, however, very small, for Jairam is a Mali while his three co-plaintiffs are Kunbis. Nor can I attach any importance to the fact. Bapu (P. W. No. 3) denied that Nagoji admitted receipt of the consideration in his presence. This point has been considered by the lower Appellate Court and I think this witness, who attested Exhibit P-3, can only have meant that Nagoji made no separate admission beyond what the deed itself contains. As to possession the trial Judge relied much on the fact that some of the property remained in Nagoji's possession for sometime after the sale. This fact too has been considered by the lower Appellate Court. The trial Judge also considered the price (Rs. 4,000) to be inadequate, but his view on this point is certainly not supported by the result of the sale of No. 621 which fetched only Rs. 550.

There is evidence to support the finding that the full price passed and that the vendees obtained possession of part of the property, and this Court is precluded from interfering with the findings based upon it. The lower Appellate Court has laid the burden upon the plaintiffs to prove the passing of the consideration and the existence of good faith as if the principle laid down in Narayan Ganesh v. Bhiooray (2) applied to the cases. The position, however, is similar to that of a plaintiff whose objection to an attachment has been disposed of otherwise than on the merits, and in such a case the burden of proving mala fides and want of consideration is on those persons who seek to resist the vendees' claim: see Nandlal v. Krishnaji (3). This mistake, however, is no ground for setting aside the lower Appellate Court's decision, inasmuch as it is found positively in favour of the vendees that there was a real transfer for a price. Of bad faith on the part of the vendees there is really no evidence calling for serious consideration.

It is unnecessary to consider whether the view taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Subramania Ayyar v. Muthia Chettiar (1) (above cited) should be followed or not. In Abdul Kader v. Ali Meah (4) the decision in which was not approved of by the Madras High Court, the auction-purchaser, who was the defendant in the vendee's suit for a declaration, was not only the decree-holder who had attached the property but also the sole creditor. In the present case there are other creditors besides the respondent Motilal, and in this respect the position is similar to that in the Madras case. I agree with the view expressed in Vasudev Raghunath v. Janardan Sadashiv (5) by Shah and Heaton, JJ., that an auction-purchaser is not a 'subsequent transferee' entitled to impeach a previous transfer under section 53, Transfer of Property Act. That section relates only to transfers of property by the act of parties, as appears from the preamble to the Act and also from section 5 which defines a transfer of property as an act by which a person conveys property: an execution sale does not satisfy either the preamble or the definition. It is of course clear that the appellant cannot rank for the purposes of section 53 as a person 'having an interest' in the property. I may add that the appellant's pleading did not properly raise the question whether the sale to the plaintiffs was voidable under section 53, for it alleges merely a circumstance which is entirely inconclusive on the point: see Mardan Singh v. Karanju (6).

The appellant could only succeed if he made out the sale of the 8th September 1914 to be a merely colourable transaction not intended to pass the property but only to be used as a shield against the creditors. This he cannot possibly be regarded as having done in face of the facts that the consideration passed and possession of part of the property sold was transferred to the vendees. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

SINNAPPAN v. ARUNACHALAM PILLAI.

An attachment operates as a valid prohibition against alienation of the attached property, only from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made, i. e, a copy of the order is affixed as required by Order XXI, rule 54, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 211, col. 2]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 34 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Dindigal, in Original Suit No. 67 of 1915.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 29th and 30th of April 1919, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri and Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Respondents, the Court (Oldfield and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question raised is in general terms, whether an attachment operates as a valid prohibition against alienation of the attached property from the date, on which it is ordered or from that on which the necessary proclamation is made and copy of the order affixed.

I should be content to treat the matter as concluded by the decision of Phillips and Krishnan, JJ., in Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1). There is, however, it seems to me, great difficulty in reconciling that decision with some expressions in the judgments of the former learned Judge and of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in an earlier case which is included in the authorised reports, Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2) In that case Phillips, J., said: "The attachment, when effected, is an attachment made in pursuance of an order to attach before judgment and must be treated as an attachment before judgment and not as a nullity merely because as a matter of fact the attachment is not completed until after judgment. To adopt the opposite view would be to allow a formal judicial order to be upset by the negligence or default of a subordinate ministerial officer," and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., "Attachment of the property in the manner prescribed by Order XXI, rule 54, is a purely ministerial act. Any delay of the officers of Court in effecting the attachment should not prejudice the decree-holder and the validity of the order of attachment under rule 5, Order XXXVIII, should not depend on the date when it is actually effected." These observations were not, so far as appears, brought to the notice of the learned Judges in Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1). There may, it must be respectfully suggested, be some difficulty in following their connection with the context in which they occur, and in particular with the reference in it to completion of an attachment by the proclamation, &c. But in view of Order XXXVIII, rule 7, I do not think that their application can be restricted to cases, such as that actually then before the Court of attachment before judgment. In these circumstances there is a conflict which, in my opinion, must be resolved by a Full Bench and I, therefore, refer to one the question stated at the beginning of this order.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—It must be admitted that there are observations in the judgments of both the learned Judges who took part in the decision in Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2) which lend support to the contention of the appellant's learned Vakil, Mr. Jayarama Aiyar, that an attachment, which prevents a valid alienation after it is made, is effected or made as soon as the order directing the attachment is passed by the Court and even before the order is proclaimed in the manner directed by clause (2) of Order XXI, rule 54. But the real basis of that decision seems to me to have been (as stated in the judgment of Phillips, J.) that it is not necessary at all that there should be an attachment fully effected before judgment to attract the provisions of Order XXXVIII, rule 11 (which dispenses with re-attachment after decree), and as a consequence the provisions of section 64, but it is only necessary that the property should have become attached and "under attachment" (whether before or after judgment) "by virtue of the provisions of this order" (that is, of Order XXXVIII).

There is also the observation of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in the course of his judgment that "under section 64, the attachment invalidates an alienation only when the alienation is after the actual compliance with the provision of rule 54," that is, I take it after proclamation is also made under clause 2 of rule 54. This opinion of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., is supported by the decision in Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1) to which Phillips, J. was a party, though Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2) is not referred to in Yuna Ramanayakadu v. Boya Pudda Basappa (1). This latter case is directly against the contention of the appellant.

As regards the omission from section 64 of the words "by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid" (that is, in the manner mentioned in old section 274) found in the old section 276 (which corresponded to the present section 64), it might first be remarked that old section 276 followed in order the old section 274, but section 64 in the body of the new Code precedes all orders including Order XXI, rule 54. The Legislature could not, therefore, reproduce the words "in manner aforesaid" but should have substituted the words "in manner provided by the Order XXI, rule 54 infra," if it wanted to reproduce as many of the words as is possible to be found in the language of the old Act But the Legislature knew (what Mr. Jayarama Aiyar conceded) that all the decisions under the old Code, section 276, had held that an alienation is not invalidated merely by an order for attachment having been passed before its date, but such order should have been also proclaimed in the manner provided by Order XXI, rule 54, clause (2). (I might add that the language of Order XXI, rule 54, can be modified by the High Court so that even further conditions might be imposed to completely "make" an attachment.) It seems, therefore, to have been thought by the Legislature unnecessary to retain the omitted words, though it might be considered (if I may say so with respect) injudicious on the part of the Legislature to have so omitted them. As stated in Maxwell, "Language is rarely so free from ambiguity as to be incapable of being used in more than one sense." "There is enough in the vagueness and elasticity inherent in language to account for the difficulty so frequently found in ascertaining the meaning of an enactment." But I think that the intention of the Legislature not to interfere with the settled law which made an alienation invalid only if notice of attachment had been given to the judgment-debtor and the public by a proclamation as provided for in Order XXI, rule 54, clause (2), seems to me to be reasonably clear notwithstanding the omission of certain words in old section 276 when re-enacting it as section 64.

I am prepared, therefore, to follow Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1), but as my learned brother considers that it is advisable to have the question referred to a Full Bench, I agree.

This second appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to Full Bench.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The material date is the date on which the order was passed. The words of the rule (Order XXI, rule 54) are "the attachment shall be made by an order prohibiting, etc." So the order is that which creates the attachment. The same law prevailed under the old Code. See also section 235 of Act XIV of 1859. The attachment by itself creates no charge or lien. It simply restrains the judgment-debtor from dealing with it. See Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2). See also Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1). It has been held that when proceedings are stayed by an Appellate Court, the time when the order is communicated is the material date. Venkatachelapatirao v. Kameswaramma (3). But in that case, the lower Court has a jurisdiction to execute in spite of the presentation of an appeal against its decree. A judgment-debtor who wants to alienate property will be affected by lis pendens if he alienates during the suit. He can defraud the decree-holders by the time that an order for attachment is carried out under Order XXI, rule 54 (2).

Reference was also made to Rutnessur Singh v. Ram Tanoo Ghose (4), Richards, In re, Deeping, Ex parte (5).

Mr. K. S. Ganapathi Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Attachment by itself creates no charge or lien and it has, therefore, been held that until the attachment is carried out according to the provisions of Order XXI, rule 54, there is nothing to prevent the judgment-debtors' dealing with the property. See Kanai Lal v. Ahed Bux (6), Simrik Lal Bhakat v. Radharaman Kalidaha (7).

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is "whether an attachment operates as a valid prohibition against alienation of the attached property from the date on which it is ordered or from that on which the necessary proclamation is made and copy of the order affixed." This depends upon the proper construction of section 64 and Order XXI, rule 54, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 64 lays down that "where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment." Rule 54 lays down how an attachment is made: It is in these words:

"(1) Where the property is immoveable, the attachment shall be made by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge.

"(2) The order shall be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property by beat of drum or other customary mode, and a copy of the order shall be affixed on a conspicuous part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the Court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the Office of the Collector of the District in which the land is situate." It is contended before us by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar that the attachment is made when the order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring the property is passed and that from that date the alienation of the property is prohibited. His argument is that although the order has to be proclaimed as required by the 2nd paragraph of the rule, the attachment must be taken to have been made when the Court passed the order of prohibition. He is unable to cite any authority in support of his contention, but he says that the language of section 64 and rule 54 supports it. Section 64 does not say "where an order for attachment has been made" but "where an attachment has been made." No doubt rule 54 says that an attachment shall be made by an order, but that does not necessarily mean that the order completes the attachment. In fact Mr. Jayarama Aiyar seemed in one part of his argument to concede that the attachment is not completed until the order is proclaimed and a copy of the order affixed in the way described in paragraph 2 of rule 54. That seems to be obvious. The object of section 64 is to prohibit alienation after attachment, and, if the mere passing of an order in Court would have that effect, one can easily imagine that the judgment-debtor would be in a position to make alienations to innocent purchasers to their prejudice. The essence of an order for attachment is to prohibit the judgment-debtor from transferring the property and until such a prohibition is proclaimed and made known in the way provided by the rule, it cannot be said to have come into operation.

Our attention has been drawn to a somewhat different wording of rule 43 and rule 46 of Order XXI. The first rule provides

(5) (1907) 2 K. B. 33; 76 L. J. K. B. 643; 96 L. T. 712; 14 Manson 88; 23 T. L. R. 388.
(6) 39 Ind. Cas. 562.
(7) 39 Ind. Cas. 857.

that in case of moveable property the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and it does not contain reference to any order. Rule 46 provides that the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting the debtor from paying the debt to his creditor. But so far as rule 43 is concerned, there can be no doubt that there must be an order preceding the actual seizure; and when the debtor receives notice under rule 46, that is when the order is served on the debtor, there can be no question of his paying the debt to his creditor without notice of any prohibitory order. In a recent Full Bench ruling of this Court, Venkatachelapatirao v. Kameswaramma (3), it was laid down that where subsequent to an interim order for stay of execution made by an Appellate Court without notice to the decree holder but before its communication to the Court of first instance, an order of attachment is made by the latter Court, the order of attachment is not void and ineffectual as having been made without jurisdiction, but is legally valid. The reason given is that the order staying execution is in the nature of a prohibitory order to the lower Court and until it is communicated, the steps taken by the lower Court must be treated as legally valid. It cannot be denied that so far as prohibitory orders, properly so-called, are concerned, they do not come into operation until notice of the order is given to the prohibited person. Applying the same principle to the case now under consideration, it would not be right to hold that the mere passing of the order by a Court without anything being done to effectuate the attachment would operate as an attachment of the property.

The main argument of Mr. Jayarama Aiyar is based on the omission from section 64, Civil Procedure Code, of the words "by actual seizure" or "by written order duly intimated and made known in the manner aforesaid" after the words "where an attachment has been made." The reason for the omission seems to be obvious. The mode of attachment is laid down in the Code, that it is to be effected by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in the manner referred to, and the Legislature apparently thought that it was superfluous to repeat those words. This is what was pointed out by Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ., in Simrik Lal Bhakat v. Radharaman Kalidaha (7).

It is also argued by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar that although an attachment is not completed until the proclamation is made, still once the proclamation is made, the attachment takes effect from the date of the order of the Court. It is difficult to appreciate the force of this argument. The attachment can be said to be made only on the date on which it is completed and becomes operative.

There is only one ruling of this Court in point and that is the ruling in Yuna Ramanayadu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1) to which Phillips and Krishnan, JJ., were parties. That is directly in support of the view just indicated. There is another decision by Phillips and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ., in Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2). That was a case of attachment before judgment and the question for consideration was whether, where an order for attachment was made before judgment and the attachment was not actually made until after the decree, that was a valid attachment. They hold that it was a valid attachment, and in so holding certain general expressions were used in the course of the judgment which have been seized upon by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar in support of his argument. The general observations ought to be read in connection with the point which the learned Judges had before them and if so read, they cannot be said in any way to countenance the construction contended for on behalf of the appellant.

There is only one other case that has been brought to our notice and that is a Calcutta decision in Kanai Lal v. Ahed Bux (6). That also is in support of the view which has been indicated. The answer will, therefore, be that an attachment operates as a valid prohibition against alienation of the attached property only from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made—copy of the order affixed as contemplated in Order XXI, rule 54.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree. I think the principle enunciated in Venkatachelapatirao v. Kameswaramma (3) is applicable to this case.

NATHU v. GANGADHAR.

As regards the contention that the omission of the words commented upon by the learned Chief Justice makes for the position that the order was intended to be efficacious from the moment of its promulgation and not from its publication, I agree with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court that the Legislature must have thought that these words were mere surplusage. If the Legislature had intended to introduce such a fundamental change as is suggested by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar, it could have very easily stated in section 64, "where an order for an attachment has been made, any private transfer," etc. That is not what the Legislature has said and it would not be in consonance with any canon of construction to impute to the Legislature such a violent change in the law because of the omission of certain unnecessary words. In my view the decision in Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1) is correct. As regards Venkatasubbiah v. Venkata Seshaiyar (2), as I understand the learned Judges, the question before them was whether an order for attachment which was made before the decree was passed had spent itself out because it had not been effectuated by doing the acts enjoined before the passing of the decree. The learned Judges in construing Order XXXVIII, rule 11, were of opinion that although nothing might have been done between the passing of the order and the passing of the decree, the order still remained in force and could be effectuated by publication and proclamation after the date of the decree. That is not the point we are concerned with. Apart from that point, the learned Judges have expressed themselves in no uncertain terms on the question we have to decide: they say that until the order has been proclaimed there can be no attachment, and are, therefore, in agreement with the view taken in Yuna Ramanayakudu v. Boya Pedda Basappa (1).

The second argument which Mr. Jayarama Aiyar advanced before us is, that although the order might have been proclaimed only at a later date, it dates back to the date of its being made. The answer to that is this: section 64 attempts at preventing a party from exercising his undoubted right of alienation. Therefore, unless we find in section 64 any provision which says that the order of publication was to date back to the date of its promulgation, the Courts are not justified in saying that this should be read into the language of the section. The right was intended to be affected only from the date which is actually mentioned in the section and not from an anterior date as suggested by Mr. Jayarama Aiyar. This is the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Kanai Lal v. Ahed Bux (6) and in my opinion that view is right.

For both these reasons the answer must be the one suggested by the learned Chief Justice.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 558 OF 1917.

July 24, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Mittra, A. J. C.

NATHU, MINOR, GUARDIAN MAROTI, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

versus

GANGADHAR—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 60—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 139—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 116—Occupancy tenant—Sub-lease, perpetual, grant of—Sub-lessee, position of—Prescription, acquisition of title through—Ejectment, suit for—Renewal of lease—Limitation.

Plaintiff, an occupancy and ordinary tenant of certain fields, sued to eject the defendants, who pleaded a perpetual lease in their favour by the plaintiff, but it was found that as that lease had been granted after the Central Provinces Tenancy Act was passed, it was valid only for one year and the plaintiff's suit was decreed. The defendants appealed and contended that their possession having become wrongful after the expiry of one year when the tenancy was determined, the suit was barred by limitation under Article 139 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and that they had acquired by prescription the status of perpetual sub-lessees:

Held, applying the principle of section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the payment of rent by the defendants and the acceptance of the same by the plaintiff resulted in the renewal of the lease every year until disputes arose and as the suit was instituted within two years of such disputes, it was not barred under Article 139 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 213, cols. 1 & 2.]

SEENI NADAN v. MUTHUSWAMY PILLAI.

As section 60 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act, 1898, precludes an occupancy and ordinary tenant from granting a perpetual lease, a sub-tenant of such a tenant cannot acquire title by prescription, as no such title is recognized by law.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 53 of 1915/1917, dated the 7th August 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 104 of 1913, decided by the Junior Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, on the 26th March 1915.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. K. Padhya and M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The case was once remanded by my judgment in Second Appeal No. 637 of 1915 delivered on the 23th February 1917. At the request of the defendant-appellants I indicated the possibility of further pleadings being taken, though I did not express any opinion on such pleas.

The plaintiff is an occupancy and ordinary tenant of the fields in dispute. He alleged that he used to give every year a fresh lease to the defendants' father and that disputes arose in the Fasli year 1321. The defendants pleaded that about thirteen years ago a perpetual lease was granted to them. The lower Appellate Court had accepted the defendants' story about the perpetual lease and dismissed the suit. I held that if the perpetual lease was given after the coming into force of the Tenancy Act of 1898, it was only valid for one year. The lower Appellate Court has now decreed the plaintiff's suit and this second appeal has been filed by the defendants.

It is contended that after the expiration of one year of the lease defendants' possession became wrongful as the tenancy was determined then. It is, therefore, urged that the suit is barred by limitation under Article 139. In the alternative it is urged that the defendants have acquired by prescription the status of a perpetual sub-lessee.

The position taken up by the defendants is somewhat inconsistent. So far as the question of limitation is concerned, the principle underlying section 116, Transfer of Property Act, governs the case. The defendants paid rent to the Malguzar and it was accepted as rent on behalf of the plaintiff. The plaintiff assented to the defendants continuing in possession, as found by the lower Appellate Court, under the belief that the perpetual lease was binding. Therefore, the lease was renewed every year till disputes commenced, and this was within two years of the suit. The suit is, therefore, not barred under Article 139.

Whether the sub-tenant of an occupancy or ordinary tenant could acquire the status of a permanent sub-tenant by prescription under the Tenancy Act of 1883 need not be considered. As such a tenant cannot now grant a perpetual lease, having regard to the provisions of section 60 of the Tenancy Act of 1898, no such title can be acquired by prescription, as such a title is not recognised by law.

The result is that the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Held, by the Full Bench (Sadasiva Aiyar, J., dubitante.)—A Court which passes a mortgage decree is the proper Court for execution within the meaning of clause (4) of Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act even though the property over which it had jurisdiction at the time of the decree is taken away from its jurisdiction and assigned to another Court at the time of the presentation of the application for execution. [p. 222, col. 2.]

(Authorities reviewed).

Per Wallis, C. J.—The re-drafting and re-arrangements of the sections of a Statute leave the substance of the law unaltered, and such a serious change as the abolition of the decree-holder's right to apply in all cases to the Court which passed the decree in the first instance cannot be raised by implication, but should plainly and clearly appear on the language of the sections. The words "shall be deemed to include" is a phrase of extensive and not of restrictive jurisdiction, and it does not take away the right of Courts to execute decrees passed by them. The case of direct application to the Court to which the area has been transferred is met by the enactment of the new section 150 in the Civil Procedure Code, which is in terms wide enough to authorise that Court to entertain in the first instance any application which might have been made to the Court which passed the decree. [p. 220, col. 2; p. 221, col. 1.]

The tendency of Indian Courts to resort unnecessarily to American decisions deprecated. [p. 221, col. 2.]

Per Ayling, J.—Section 150, Civil Procedure Code, covers the case of the transfer of all the litigations arising out of a tract of country from one Court to another, and section 37 of the Code whatever it means by ceasing to have jurisdiction to execute, does not operate to exclude the Court which actually passed the decree and to substitute for it another Court and it is still open to the decree-holder to apply to the former for execution by way of transmission of the decree to the Court which has territorial jurisdiction. [p. 222, col. 2; p. 223, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—There seems to be no distinction in principle between jurisdiction to entertain an application for sale of property outside the jurisdiction and jurisdiction to execute the decree by sale of such property. Section 150 of the Civil Procedure Code would appear to have been enacted so as to take away both rights from the Court which ceased to have territorial jurisdiction. [p. 225, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where questions of International Law or Commercial Law or Constitutional Law are involved, it is indispensable (owing to paucity of Indian decisions) to refer to foreign decisions where the Statute Law of India is silent and rules of justice, equity and good conscience have to be applied by Indian Courts and such rules have been clearly set out in famous decisions of foreign Courts, references to such authorities cannot conveniently be avoided. FACTS appear from the Order of Reference by Seshagiri Aiyar, J.

This appeal against order came on for hearing before Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.

Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. It was not "the Court which passed the decree" under section 37, Civil Procedure Code, nor had it jurisdiction over the properties, sought to be attached, at the time of the application. The right to execute decrees cannot survive a transfer of territorial jurisdiction. Ipso facto the jurisdiction is transferred, the right to order execution also ceases. See Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (1), Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (2), Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (3), Ramasami Reddi v. Sokkappa Reddi (4), Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dasi Debi (5) and Vadivelu Pillai v. Maruda Pillai (6).

For the same reason, the applications prior to 1910 are also not to a proper Court, even though at the time the Principal Munsif had jurisdiction over the suit properties.

This contention was disallowed.]

(At this stage Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar was permitted to continue).

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—If while an execution application is pending, transfer of jurisdiction is made by operation of law, no fresh application to the new Court will be necessary. But here it is, for there was no pending application at the time of the transfer. The Court which has acquired jurisdiction is the only Court to entertain such applications. That is what Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) lays down.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I am not satisfied that the law as laid down in that case is correct.]

Madaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) as laying down the correct rule.]

Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) is wrong in principle and has not been followed in a series of cases commencing with Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). See Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (9), Parthasaradhi Appa Rao v. Naka Venkatadri Appa Rao (10), Penugonda Rattan v. Korasika Thatha (11), Doorvas Seshadri Iyer v. Ananthayee (12) and Vadivelu Pillai v. Marudu Pillai (6), all of which quote Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) with approval and the last says that Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) is inconsistent with Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7).

The adjustment not having been certified, the Court is precluded from recognising it and so the petition is time-barred. Even otherwise it is barred; deducting the time occupied by the petition of 1913, there is an interval of more than three years before the present application in 1914. The alleged adjustment has not been proved.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The word "include" in section 37 of the Code shows that the Court which passed the decree does not lose its right to execute it even though, as in clause (b), it "has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it." That is the law also as laid down in Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8).

[OLDFIELD, J.—'Include' does not mean simultaneous jurisdiction.]

There may be two Courts or even three at the same time to any of which the applicant can resort at his option.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The section does not imply it.]

The section does not exclude it but "includes." See Lalchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (13) followed in Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8). The Privy Council has held that there may be three Courts at the same time. See Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Boliar (14).

In Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) the only question was whether a transfer for execution was necessary or not to give the new Court jurisdiction to execute. The question of competency of the first Court was not before the Court.

The adjustment is valid to save limitation. For Order XXI, rule 2, is intended for the protection of the judgment-debtor. See Masilamani Mudaliar v. Sethuswami Aiyar (15), where an entry in an execution petition of the partial adjustment of the decree was held to be a sufficient basis to enable the Court to recognise and certify the adjustment. There is no time limit imposed on the decree-holder.

Whether there was an adjustment is a question of fact and cannot be heard in second appeal.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment, which my learned brother is about to deliver, and agree with him as to the effect of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (2). On the first point argued we must hold that time began to run on the date on which the decree was made absolute.

I do not think it necessary to add to my learned brother's discussion of the decision in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7), because I should be content to follow it, and should prefer to apply the principle stare decisis in dealing with a question, such as this, of procedure. In deference, however, to his opinion I agree to a Reference to a Full Bench in the terms he proposes.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—A mortgage decree was obtained on the 28th of August 1901 in the Additional District Munsif's Court, Tinnevelly. The suit was originally instituted in the Principal District Munsif's Court which had jurisdiction over the property mortgaged. It was conceded in the lower Court and it seems fairly clear that at the time of the decree the Additional District Munsif's Court was not assigned any local jurisdiction. Therefore, the Additional District Munsif's Court was an auxiliary to the Principal District Munsif's Court and as such the decree may be taken to have been passed by the Principal District Munsif himself. Under the decree money was made payable in six months. By an application to the Principal District Munsif the decree was made absolute on the 16th of September 1914. The present application for execution was made on the 6th of July 1916. It was first contended that as more than 12 years had elapsed since the passing of the decree and since the time fixed for payment, the present application is barred by limitation by virtue of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the decree was passed when Act XIV of 1882 was in force, and as was held by the Judicial Committee in Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (2) the decree-holder had 12 years from the date on which the decree was made absolute.

The more serious contention was this. In June 1910 by a notification in the Fort St. George Gazette the respective jurisdictions of the Principal District Munsif and the Additional District Munsif were fixed, and the property mortgaged fell within the jurisdiction of the Additional District Munsif. Notwithstanding this fact, prior to and after the notification and until February 1914, all applications for execution in the present suit were made to the Principal District Munsif. It was contended on behalf of the judgment-debtor that these applications were not made to the proper Court and that consequently the present application is barred by limitation. We need only consider the propriety of the application of 12th of July 1913, for, if that was not properly made, the present application was undoubtedly out of time. The Subordinate Judge has held that the application to the District Munsif was a step-in-aid of execution. He was greatly influenced by the fact that the records of the case were in the custody of the Principal District Munsif, and that the decree holder had vainly tried to induce that officer to transfer these records to the Additional District Munsif. In this Court reliance was mainly placed on Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). That was also a case from Tinnevelly. After the attachment of the property by the Court which passed the decree, the Taluk in which the property was situated was assigned to the jurisdiction of another Court. The learned Judges held that the proper Court for entertaining applications for sale was the new Court and not the Court which passed the decree. The decision very elaborately discusses the whole question of executory process where there is a change in venue after the passing of the decree. There are strong observations suggesting that on the assignment of jurisdiction the original Court ceases to have any right to execute the decree. In page 473* the learned Judges say:—"the business of a Court which loses jurisdiction over a certain area, so far as it relates to cases affecting the lands in the transferred area, will be ipso facto transferred to the new Court," and they point out that suits and execution proceedings stand upon the same footing. They conclude by saying:—"Even if we are wrong in the above view, we are prepared to get over the difficulty sought to be raised on the question of jurisdiction by transferring Execution Petition No. 389 of 1909 from the Srivilliputhur Munsif's Court for disposal to the file of the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly." In another place also they expressed their opinion with some reserve. In the course of the judgment they refer to the decision in Pandurangа Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8), in which it was held that the original Court did not cease to have jurisdiction to execute the decree on the transfer of property from its jurisdiction, as such transfer did not take away the jurisdiction which it had to execute its own decree under the Civil Procedure Code. Although the learned Judges who decided Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) do not say so expressly, it is clear from the trend of their judgment that they dissented from the view taken in Pandurangа Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8).

Now the question for consideration apart from authority is whether in this state of conflict of decisions I should not, on the principle of stare decisis, accept the view taken in the later decision or whether the more proper course is to refer the matter to a Full Bench. I am aware that in matters relating to procedure there should be some endeavour to maintain uniformity. But it may not unreasonably be argued that the observations in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) are obiter, whereas Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) actually decides the case which is on all fours with the present one. If such an argument was addressed to the lower Court, it cannot be blamed for falling back upon the express decision in Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) and for refusing to act on the observations in the later case. It is true that Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) has since been followed without further discussion in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (9), Kasi Viswanatham Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (16) and Parthasaradhi Appa Rao v. Maka Venkatadri Appa Rao (10) and in Doorvas Seshadri Iyer v. Ananthayee (12). In those cases curiously enough the conflict between Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) and Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) was not emphasised. Nor was there any discussion as to the principles to be applied to such cases. Therefore, we have this state of facts; a reported decision directly in point which has not been expressly overruled and a later decision which has been followed and which may be said to contain observations by way of obiter dicta. I think in the interests of litigants and in order that proper guidance may be given to the Courts below, it is desirable that there should be a Reference to a Full Bench on the question.

Now I shall give my reasons very shortly for doubting the correctness of Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar frankly confessed that the reason of the rule for the pronouncement in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) is that only one Court can at the same time execute a decree. I think that this proposition is not unexceptionable. For a long time it has been the practice in this Presidency to order concurrent executions of the same decree. Rule 221 of the Original Side Rules of the High Court impliedly sanctions this course. In Saroda Prosaud Mullick v. Luchmeeput Sing Doogur (17) the Judicial Committee stated that there can be concurrent execution of the same decree. Krishtokishore Dutt v. Rooplall Dass (18) follows this ruling as also Baij Nath Goenka v. F. H. Holloway (19). All these decisions were under the old Code of Civil Procedure. It is not easy to trace in the sections and the orders of Civil Procedure Code the provisions of law on which this theory is founded. Mr. Ameer Ali in his edition of the Civil Procedure Code seems to incline to the view that the practice is not justifiable on principle. However, there can be no doubt that it has always been regarded as undisputed law in this Presidency that there can be concurrent execution. As against these decisions it was said that the view taken by the Judicial Committee in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Pedu Baliara (9) is inconsistent with the theory. I do not think so. In this latter case what the Privy Council said was that after the transfer of the records at the instance of a party from one Court to another it was not open to that party to apply to the original Court for execution. In the second place, I am not satisfied that the Court which passes a decree ipso facto ceases to have jurisdiction by the deprivation of territorial jurisdiction. If a decree was passed by a Court and if proceedings in execution had been started in that Court, until the records are transferred to another Court, that Court, in my opinion, will have jurisdiction to entertain applications. It is undoubtedly the Court which passed the decree, and under section 38 of the Civil Procedure Code a decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. The fact that under Clause (b) of section 37 the Court to which jurisdiction has been assigned is within the definition of the expression "Court which passed a decree," does not make it clear that the original Court becomes functus officio by the bare fact of ceasing to have territorial jurisdiction. It was held with reference to section 234 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 in Swaminatha Ayyar v. Vaidyanatha Sastri (20) that notwithstanding the transfer to another Court for execution, the first Court is the only Court which can entertain applications for bringing in the legal representatives of the parties. That provision has been re-enacted in section 50, clause 1. The expansion of the definition of the term "Court which passed the decree" may enable the party to apply to the transferred Court for bringing in the legal representatives. Supposing after a partial execution by the first Court it is found that there is no property within the jurisdiction of that Court sufficient to satisfy the balance of the decree, then the records would be sent to the Court where either the judgment-debtor resides or where he has got other property. If in these circumstances the records are transferred, cannot the decree-holder regard the application which was made to the original Court as still pending and ask the transferred Court either to arrest or attach and sell the other properties of the judgment-debtor? If I am right in this, it would show that an application made to a Court which cannot give the particular relief prayed for would be effectual in another Court where that relief can be obtained. I am inclined to agree with the view taken in Calcutta that the Court which passed the decree does not cease to have jurisdiction to entertain applications until the records are sent away to the Court to which jurisdiction has been assigned. Even if I am not right in this conclusion, I think it is desirable, as I stated already, that the matter should be set at rest by a pronouncement from a Full Bench having regard to the difference of view between Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8) and Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). I would, therefore, refer for the opinion of the Full Bench the following question:—

"Whether the Court which passed the decree is not the proper Court for execution within the meaning of clause 4 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act by virtue of the fact that the property over which it had jurisdiction at the time of the decree was taken away from it and assigned to another Court at the time of the presentation of the application for execution."

(20) 28 M. 466; 15 M. L. J. 116 (F. B.).

This appeal against appellate order came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 8th and 9th April 1919 in pursuance of the above Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar (with him Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar), for the Appellants.

[WALLIS, C. J.—How do you shew that by the transfer the jurisdiction of the original Court is taken away?]

The test is whether the suit could have been instituted in that Court when execution was applied for. The Code is clear on the point, sections 36, 37 and 38.

[WALLIS, C. J.—A decree may be executed by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution.]

Section 150 deals with transfer of business.

[AYLING, J., referred to Venkatasawmi Naik v. Sivanu Mudali (21).]

[WALLIS, C. J.—What is the provision as to jurisdiction under the Civil Courts Act?]

See section 11 of Act III of 1873. It contemplates that local jurisdiction is assigned but in practice no such thing is conferred. Venkatachallam v. Sithayamma (22).

[AYLING, J.—In Kadir Mohideen Sahib v. Abubakkar Sahib (23) we held that the Additional District Munsif of Tinnevelly who passed the decree could execute the decree so far as he could, e.g., by sending it for execution, even though he had no local jurisdiction in respect of the subject-matter of the suit.]

The Principal District Munsif cannot entertain the application as he could not grant all the reliefs claimable in execution, as the territorial jurisdiction has been made over to the Additional Court. I assume that the Principal Court passed the decree.

Under Order XXI, rule 8, the Court executing a decree also should be of competent jurisdiction.

[The other side pointed out Order XXI, rule 10.]

[WALLIS, C. J.—Do you say that under the Code execution applications can be made only to one Court at any one time?]

Yes. That is the logical result of the Privy Council decision in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (9). The presentation of an application predicates the competency of the Court to grant the relief claimed. I submit that section 150, Civil Procedure Code governs the question. Reference was made to Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24), Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7), Subbayya v. Rachayya (25), Latchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (13), Jahar v. Kamini Debi (26), Parthasaradhi Appa Rao v. Maka Venkatadri Appa Rao (10), Venkatachallam v. Sithayamma (22), Penugonda Rattan v. Korasika Thatha (11), Kasi Viswanatham Chetty v. Murugappa Chetty (16) and Doorvas Seshadri Iyer v. Ananthayee (12). Clause (b) of section 37 contemplates the class of cases where the Court which passed the decree has no jurisdiction to execute the decree. This is the view in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) and Penugonda Rattan v. Korasika Thatha (11).

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Aiyangar (with him Mr. C. R. Subramania Aiyar), for the Respondents.—The jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree to execute it continues in spite of the transfer of jurisdiction.

[AYLING, J.—When does it cease to have such jurisdiction?

That is not provided for in the Code.

[WALLIS, C. J.—What do you say is the scope of section 150, Civil Procedure Code?]

It refers to the transfer of business and not of territorial jurisdiction. Suppose a mortgage decree is passed after which part of the property is transferred to another jurisdiction. The original Court can sell the whole property.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The suit could have been instituted in it. So the test is satisfied.]

But there is no automatic transfer of power to execute.

Section 37 is not confined to immoveable property.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Where the decree in question is against the person as well as the property, we have taken it as comprising two decrees for purposes of execution.]

In cases where a decree has been transferred for execution to another Court, an application to bring a legal representative on record will be only to the original Courts.

See also sections 45, 46 (precepts); Order XXI, rules 3, 6, 8, 10, 16, 26, 28.

Territorial jurisdiction is not the sole criterion for determining the power of the Court to execute the decree. See section 46 Kali Pado Mukerjee v. Dino Nath Mukerjee (27), Kartick Nath Pandey v. Tilukdhari Lall (28).

[WALLIS, C. J.—Whether the transferee Court acquires jurisdiction is not in question here.]

Quite so. Territorial jurisdiction is not necessary for purposes of execution. In Udit Narain v. Mathura Prasad (29) the view was expressed that both the Courts have jurisdiction. Latchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (13) is the case which clearly explains the words "Court which passed the decree" (See at page 517). Jahar v. Kamini Debi (26). Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24) simply said that a Court should not sell properties outside its jurisdiction. But the power to entertain application is not denied.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J., referred to Girindro Chunder Roy v. Jarawa Kumari (30).]

Bandoo Krishna v. Narsingrao (31).

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Do you mean to say that because there is the word 'include' in section 37, an Appellate Court can order execution?]

[WALLIS, C. J.—Do you mean to say that a Court which is deprived of jurisdiction after decree can execute it?]

It can. See the wording of section 39, clause (c). Territorial jurisdiction is not essential.

Mr. A. Kishnaswamy Aiyar, in reply.—The word 'include' in section 37 cannot be taken to have its ordinary wide meaning. The object is not that the Appellate Court which passes a decree can execute it. See clause (c) "or ceases to have jurisdiction to execute it," which shows that there is a cessation of jurisdiction to execute.

In section 150, Civil Procedure Code, "business" is not something apart from "territorial jurisdiction." The two are interdependent, Alagappa v. Thiyagaraja (34).

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The terms of the reference have, if I may say so, been very properly framed with reference to the terms of Article 182, clause 5, of the Limitation Act (4 is a misprint), which makes the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some steps in aid of execution of the decree a fresh starting point for the purposes of the article which deals generally with applications for the execution of decrees. The question really is, whether a litigant who has been authorised to bring his suit in a particular Court and has obtained a decree in such Court in his favour, which he is strictly bound to execute within the time limited in Article 182, is not entitled to apply as of course to that Court as the proper Court for the purpose of saving limitation under the article, or whether, when he decides to apply for execution possibly at the last moment, he is bound to stop and enquire whether the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree have been altered and, if so, whether the immoveable property which is the subject of the suit or the place where the cause of action arose was within the limits of the transferred area, on pain of losing his right to execute under the article if he omits to make these enquiries or comes to a wrong conclusion when he makes them. This last proposition is so unreasonable and involves such hardships to the decree-holder in a country such as India with a stringent law of limitation that we should hesitate to impute such an intention to the Legislature if we can possibly avoid it.

Under the Code of 1859 it was open to the decree-holder to apply to the Court which passed the decree to execute it itself or to transmit it to another Court for execution, and such an application would have been sufficient for the purpose of saving limitation under Article 167 (now 182) of the Limitation Act of 1871. The question is, when and how has the decree-holder been deprived of this right. In 1877 and again in 1882, the Code was repealed, and re enacted with some re-drafting and re-arrangement which included the insertion of the present sections 37 and 38 in the Code of 1877. Now there is a well known presumption that such re-drafting and re-arrangements leave the substance of the law unaltered, and it follows that such a serious change as the abolition of the decree-holder's right to apply in all cases to the Court which passed the decree in the first instance cannot be raised by implication but should plainly and clearly appear on the language of the sections. Now at the time when the Code of 1908 was enacted there was a long and unbroken series of express decisions that this was not the effect of these sections. Latchman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (13), Kartick Nath Pandey v. Tilukdhari Lall (28), Kali Pado Mukerjee v. Dino Nath Mukerjee (27), Jahar v. Kamini Debi (26) and Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8). So that the Legislature was well warranted in considering this point as settled. Two questions only had arisen under these sections, one whether the Court which passed the decree had jurisdiction to execute fully a decree for the sale of immoveable property by selling it where the area in which the immoveable property was situated had been removed to another jurisdiction. It was held by the Full Bench in Prem Chand

Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24) that it had not; but it was assumed in that case and expressly decided in Girindro Chunder Roy v. Jarawa Kumari (30), Pigot, J., being a party to both decisions, that in such a case it was a proper course to apply to the Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to the other Court. Then there was a difference of opinion as to whether this was the only proper course, or whether after such a transfer the Court which passed the decree could be treated as "having ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree" within the meaning of section 649, now section 37, so as by virtue of that section to cause the Court to which the area had been transferred to be regarded as a Court which passed the decree within the meaning of section 223 (now 38). One view was taken in Latchman Pundeh v. Maddun Mohun Shye (13) and Jahar v. Kamini Debi (26) and another in Kali Pedo Mukerjee v. Dino Nath Mukerjee (27) and Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8). This was the state of the authorities when the Code of 1908 was enacted and we are told by Messrs. Woodroffe and Ameer Ali that it was proposed to enact expressly that application might be made to either Court. The draft section to that effect which dealt with other complicated questions was not adopted, but it seems to me that the Legislature brought about the same result in another way. The jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree was sufficiently recognised by the decisions as I have pointed out, and indeed had never been doubted up to that time, and there was, therefore, no need to to re affirm it. The case of direct application to the Court to which the area had been transferred was met by the enactment of the new section 150 which was in terms wide enough to authorise that Court to entertain in the first instance any application which might have been made to the Court which passed the decree.

This, I think, should have settled the question. Unfortunately in Alagappa v. Thiyagaraja (34) when I was sitting with Krishnaswamy Aiyar, J., the Advocate-General cited certain American treatises to us, passages from which are cited in the later case of Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) and formed the main ground for that decision, and though we came to no decision, we were sufficiently influenced by them to leave the point open and proceed by way of transfer in the particular case. In this I think we were wrong. The Privy Council has since deprecated the tendency of Indian Courts to resort unnecessarily to American instead of the English authorities, that is how I understand their observations in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (35) and in this case it would have been better to see how the question had been dealt with in England, especially as the case of the County Courts affords a complete analogy. Those Courts were established some years before the Code of 1859, and have jurisdiction over immoveable property. Power to transfer particular areas from one Court to another was given and has been freely exercised, but it has never been suggested that the fact of such a transfer takes away the power of the Court which passed the decree to entertain application for execution. The power of sending the decree to another Court, if the Court itself was not in a position to execute it, has been found sufficient to meet the case. That, it seems to me was the scheme of the Code, as held in Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8), until 1908 when section 150 then conferred upon the Court of the transferred area power to entertain the application in the first instance; but this cannot be read as taking away from the Court which passed the decree the power which it then had according to the unbroken current of authorities for many years, which the Legislature must be taken to have recognised. Again, as the American writers allow, in questions of the kind the particular Statutes must always be looked to, and where, as in the present case, the Code provided two methods of executing decrees both originating in the Court which passed the decree and one of them admittedly applicable to the case of the area having been transferred to the jurisdiction of another Court before the application for execution, this sufficiently indicated the procedure which the Legislature desired to be followed, and removed all occasion for raising inferences which might possibly have had to be raised if the Legislature had provided no method at all of executing decrees where the areas had been transferred. It only remains to refer to the arguments which have been addressed to us on the language of sections 37 and 38 (formerly 649 and 223) to show that all decisions on this point down to 1903 were wrong. The words to be interpreted are "a decree may be executed by the Court which passed it" in section 38 (223), a section first inserted in 1877 and merely declaratory of the existing law. These words again have to be interpreted in the light of section 37, an interpretation clause reproduced from section 649 of the Code. Section 37 provides that the words "Court which passed a decree shall be deemed to include (a), where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance," and an argument has been based on this clause. Now it may well be that under sections 37 and 38 the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to execute its own decree, but that is not because such jurisdiction is excluded by the use of the word "include" as has been argued, but because it had no such jurisdiction under section 362 of the Code of 1859, and it may well be questioned, having regard to the presumption already referred to, whether, when that section was eliminated in re-drafting and the matter was dealt with in sections 649 and 223 (now 37 and 38), there was any intention to confer on the Appellate Court jurisdiction which it had not till then possessed. We have, however, to deal with clause (b), and where the decree-holder had a valuable right under the Code of 1859 to apply to the Court which passed the decree at least for execution by way of transmission, and where the present Code provides expressly that a decree may be executed by the Court which passed it, the contention that this important right must be held to have been taken away because of the provision in section 37 that these words shall be deemed to "include" another Court appears to me to be altogether untenable. It may be that in some rare and exceptional instances the category of things "included" in a definition may be held to be exhaustive, but ordinarily, as observed in Stroud's Dictionary, it is "a phrase of extensive and not of restrictive jurisdiction," and it cannot in my opinion be used here to deprive the decree-holder of the important right, which he had till then, of applying in all cases in the first instance to the Court which passed the decree, especially having regard to the fact that the section itself was inserted when the Court was in process of re-drafting and re-arrangement, when, as I have already said, there is a presumption against alterations by implication only. In Subbiah Naicker v Ramanathan Chettiar (7) the question does not seem to have been sufficiently argued from the point of view of the decree holder's rights, and attention was not called to the history of the section. Further the decision is opposed to a long line of authorities which I think the Legislature accepted in 1908, and is also mainly based on citations from American treatises which, I now think, do not afford a satisfactory basis for the decision of a question of this kind, or afford any sufficient reason for answering the question in the negative. Both on principle and on the balance of authority and convenience my answer is that the Court which passed the decree is a proper Court for the purpose mentioned in the question referred to us.

AYLING, J.—I agree. After careful re-consideration in the light of the arguments now adduced before us, I am inclined to think that in our judgment in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) we went too far in saying that the Court which passed the decree for sale of a property could not even entertain an application for sale of such properties, once they had been transferred out of its territorial jurisdiction. This decision was not necessary for the disposal of the case before us, where the question was whether such an application could be properly made to the Court to whose jurisdiction the property had been transferred. I think it could, if only by reason of section 150, Code of Civil Procedure: for this section certainly seems to me to cover the case of the transfer of all the litigations arising out of a tract of country from one Court to another. I would prefer to base this proposition on section 150, rather than on an interpretation of section 37 regarding which I must confess to considerable difficulty. But I am of opinion that the later section, whatever it means by ceasing to have jurisdiction to execute, does not operate to exclude the Court which actually passed the decree, and to substitute for it another Court: and that it is still open for the decree-holder to apply to the former for execution by way of transmission of the decree to the Court which has territorial jurisdiction.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is "whether the Court which passed the decree is not the proper Court for execution within the meaning of the clause 4 of Article 182 of the Limitation Act by virtue of the fact that the property over which it had jurisdiction at the time of the decree was taken away from it and assigned to another Court at the time of the presentation of the application for execution."

The answer to this question depends upon one's view on the following points:—

(1) Does a Court which passes a decree for sale of land within its jurisdiction at the time of the passing of the decree continue according to general principles of jurisprudence to have jurisdiction to execute (a) such a decree by sale, or (b) even to entertain an application for execution of such decree by sale, after it ceases to have territorial jurisdiction over that property: (2) even if it has not got the power according to general principles of jurisprudence, has it got such power owing to the provisions of section 37 of the Civil Procedure Code (old section 642, paragraph 2), read with sections 38 and 39 (old section 223)?

On the first point I have very little to add to what has been said in the judgment of Ayling, J., and myself in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). That was a considered judgment of ours in which we attempted to show that the Calcutta High Court from 1890 [see Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24), Full Bench of five Judges including Justices Prinsep and O'Kinealy who were Judges learned in procedure law] has uniformly held that a Court, though it passed a decree for sale, ceases to have jurisdiction to execute that decree for sale when the property has passed out of its territorial jurisdiction. The learned Judges refer to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, as indicating that the Code intended the Courts in this country to have no power to determine any right or interest in any immoveable property lying wholly outside its jurisdiction. The execution of a decree being only a continuation of the suit, there appears to be no legitimate reason "why a Court in the later stage of a suit should have greater powers than it possessed at its institution." The earlier case in Latchmun Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shye (13), though quoted by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his arguments, must be deemed to have been overruled by this Full-Bench decision in Prem Chund Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24).

Of course in a matter of procedure when there is a uniform practice of this Court, that must no doubt override even the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, unless there is a decision of the Privy Council which settles the question for all Courts. I cannot say that there are any such pronouncements of the Privy Council. The case in Kamini Sundari Chaodhrani v. Kali Prossunno Ghose (36) relied on in Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24) merely dealt with the power of the High Court as an Appellate Court making a remand order to give jurisdiction to a Court having no territorial jurisdiction over the suit land to deal with a question relating to that land. In Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda Baliara (9) it was held that after the District Court which had passed a decree sent that decree to a District Munsif's Court for execution by the latter Court with a copy of the decree, no execution application could be presented to the District Court for the sale of the property attached by the District Munsif in execution, unless the copy of the decree with a certificate of non-satisfaction was returned back to the District Court. I do not think that any clear guidance can be obtained on the present point from these two Privy Council decisions.

On principles recognised in the Civil Procedure Code, section 16, it seems to me clear that no Court has any jurisdiction either to entertain an execution application for the attachment of property outside its jurisdiction, or for the sale of immoveable property outside its jurisdiction or to sell it in execution, even though it had jurisdiction at the time of the passing of the decree to pass such a decree. The fact that at a particular time it was competent to pass a decree for sale cannot mean that its jurisdiction to proceed further could be retained for ever. An extreme case might be taken as an illustration. Supposing the District Munsif of Cuddalore passes a mortgage decree in 1918 for sale of a property within his jurisdiction but situated near the French limits and suppose in this year, that property is ceded to the French by treaty with the British, can it be said that in 1920, that decree could be executed by the Cuddalore Munsif or an application for execution of the said property could be entertained by him? On principle, I do not see why the loss of territorial jurisdiction in any other manner not to a foreign power but to a Native State or to some other Court within British India should make any difference.

This question was further considered with reference to the new section 150, Civil Procedure Code, in I. L. R 37 Mad. 462 at page 473 [Sabbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7)] and also on general principles (pages 471 and 472 of I. L. R. 37 Mad.) [Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar(7)]. It is also clear from Oldfield, J.'s opinion in this Order of Reference to the Full Bench that from 1910 [see Alagappa v. Thiyagaraja (34)] up to date [see also Doorvas Seshadri Iyer v. Ananthayee (12) and Venkatasawmi Naik v. Sivanu Mudali (21)] the course of decisions has been pretty uniform in this Court on this point. In Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath (33) Mookerjee, J., with whom Carnduff, J., agreed, held that it was not competent to a Court in execution even of a decree for money to attach a debt payable to the judgment-debtor by a non-resident debtor. The matter is elaborately discussed on principle at pages 233 to 236* citing English and American authorities also; the conclusion being that where the situs of a bond debt is outside the jurisdiction, the Court has no power to deal with it. A fortiori it seems to me that where the situs of an immoveable property is outside the jurisdiction, the Court has no power to deal with it unless the Statute Law gives it such power. Because there was some conflict whether the Statute Law enacted in sections 223 and 649 of the old Civil Procedure Code really intended to give such jurisdiction that the Legislature seems to have indicated in the new section 150 that the Calcutta view in Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24) should be followed, and not the view enunciated in Pandurunga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi (8). As to the argument based on the language of section 37 (old section 649), when an expression is said in a Statute to include something, it no doubt means ordinarily that it should mean that thing in addition to the thing which the expression naturally means. But it is clear from the context of section 37, namely, clauses (a) and (b), that the word "include" in section 37 signifies "mean and include and comprise," and that is a permissible meaning where the context requires it. See Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, pages 945 and 946. If the natural meaning is not to be excluded under any circumstances and in any case so as to substitute for it the new meaning in that case, section 37 ought to be interpreted as follows. The expression "the Court which passed a decree" shall in relation to the execution of decrees be deemed to mean, (a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, (1) the Court of first instance, and (2) also the Appellate Court which passed or the second Appellate Court which passed the decree, (b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, (1) the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suits, and (2) also the Court of first instance which has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it. These natural meanings which I have italicised as (a) (2) and (b) (2), which would have to be taken in addition to the new meanings if the ordinary meaning of 'include' was to be given to the word, are inadmissible from the context. Therefore, the real meaning of the section is that the expression "the Court which passed the decree" shall mean, of course, the Court which passed the decree ordinarily but shall exclude that Court and "include and mean", (a) where the decree to be executed, (b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist, &c.

In the result, both on principle and on the interpretation of sections 37, 38, 39 and 150 of the Civil Procedure Code and on the principle of stare decisis, I am inclined to answer the question against the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree but which has lost jurisdiction over the immoveable property sought to be pursued in execution.

After I had written the above, I had the advantage of perusing the opinions of my Lord and Sir William Ayling, J., in this case. I was at first inclined to think that the hardship pointed out by my Lord, as caused to a litigant who has obtained a decree and who may not know when he applies for execution to the Court which passed the decree in his favour that its territorial limits had been altered, is a matter for the Legislature to consider. I would venture to suggest that Article 182 of the Limitation Act, clause 5, should be amended by adding after the words "to the proper Court" the words "or to a Court which the decree-holder in good faith believed to have jurisdiction to entertain the application." This suggestion I would make to the Legislature, notwithstanding that I have come to the conclusion that I should not differ from my learned colleagues on the narrow question referred to us. I have been much pressed by the fact referred to in the judgment of my Lord that notwithstanding Prem Chand Dey v. Mokhoda Debi (24), it was held in Girindro Chunder Roy v. Jarawa Kumari (30) that an application might be made to a Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to the Court which had jurisdiction to sell the property in execution. On principle I am unable to see any distinction between jurisdiction to entertain an application for sale of property outside the jurisdiction and jurisdiction to execute the decree by sale of such property. I am still inclined to think that section 150 was enacted so as to take away both rights from the Court which ceased to have territorial jurisdiction.

No doubt, I quoted the American Cyclopedia in support of my view in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7). I am myself not very familiar with American or English decisions and I felt glad when their Lordships of the Privy Council made the following pronouncement in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (35): "Their Lordships cannot help deprecating the practice which seems to be growing in some of the Indian Courts referring largely to foreign decisions. However useful in the scientific study of comparative jurisprudence, reference to judgments of foreign Courts to which Indian practitioner cannot be expected to have access based on considerations and conditions totally differing from those applicable to or prevailing in India is only likely to confuse the administration of justice."

The case in which their Lordships made this pronouncement was an appeal against the decision of the Calcutta High Court decided in 1911 in Imambandi v. Matasuddi (37) by a Bench and reported in 15 Calcutta Law Journal 621. In that judgment at pages 627 and 630,* several English and American cases have been quoted Not a single foreign decision, however, is referred to in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council on appeal. I take it that, as in the eye of the law, both English and American Courts except, of course, the Privy Council are "Foreign Courts," their Lordships deprecated quotations from decisions of such Courts. That their Lordships of the Privy Council deprecated unnecessary references to English decisions in their strict sense seems to me to be supported by what Lord Macnaghten said in delivering the judgment of their Lordships in Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (38) as follows: "Unfortunately, however, both in the Munsif's Court, and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the question was overlaid, and in some measure obscured, by copious references to English authorities, and by the application of principles or doctrines more or less refined, founded on legal conceptions not altogether in harmony with eastern notions. The result is that, although the decrees appear to be justified by the main facts, which both the lower Courts held to be established, it is impossible to say that the judgments delivered are entirely satisfactory." It may be that where questions of International Law or Commercial Law or Constitutional Law are involved, it becomes indispensable (owing to paucity of Indian decisions) to refer to such cases, and even then it would be no doubt advisable to confine ourselves to English decisions. Also where the Statute Law of India "is silent" and rules of justice, equity and good conscience have to be applied by Indian Courts and such rules have been clearly set out in famous decisions of foreign Courts (such as those collected in Smith's Leading Cases), references to such authorities cannot conveniently be avoided. [See the very recent Privy Council decision in Maharaja of Jeypore v. Eukmini Pattamahadevi (39) on the question of forfeiture of tenancy by denial of title, a thing which is "not ancient Indian Law" and rules relating to which were adopted by Indian Courts from rules laid down in English cases.]

Why then did I quote the American Cyclopedia in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7)? My explanation is that when I was first appointed to the Bench of this Court (about the beginning of 1912), I found that reference to and quotations from American and English treatises and decisions were not only permissible but were generally treated by respectable lawyers of greater learning than I could ever hope to have as indications of a laudable desire to possess an up-to-date knowledge of legal principles and precedents. I, therefore, ventured to do so in that case with great diffidence and I am glad that I am able to give up that practice now. But wholly apart from American treatises and decisions, there seems to be much on principle in favour of the view taken in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7).

As my Lord is inclined to the view that notwithstanding the enactment of the new section 150 the probabilities are that the Legislature did not thereby intend to overrule the then prevalent view of the Calcutta High Court, that the Court which passed the decree could entertain as "the proper Court" or as 'a proper Court' within the meaning of Article 182, clause (5), an application for execution, though it might be bound to transfer the decree for execution to the new Court which has obtained territorial jurisdiction over the land to be proceeded against in execution, and as Sir William Ayling, J., who was a party with me to Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (7) is also of that opinion, I do not feel strong enough to differ from them on that point. I would, however, suggest that rules should be made, under the rule-making power of the High Court, clearly indicating (a) that though under Order XXI, rule 11, read with sections 37 and 38, an application for execution might be made to the Court which passed the decree, notwithstanding that it had ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it owing to the transfer of territorial jurisdiction, the Court which passed the decree might and should treat it as also an application for transfer of the decree for execution to the new Court and pass orders accordingly, and that it should not order the sale of the property which has passed out of its territorial jurisdiction if it could not then entertain a suit brought for the same reliefs: (b) that where applications are made to both Courts, an order analogous to the order passed under section 10 in respect of suits between the same parties in two different Courts having concurrent jurisdiction should be passed: (c) that Order XXI, rule 16, which refers to the Court which passed the decree, should be modified by adding an explanation that unless the Court which passed the decree has ceased to exist it is that Court to which an application should be made under Order XXI, rule 16, though it ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it by reason of a suit for the same relief having since passed out of its jurisdiction. The Court which passed the decree should, in such a case, pass orders not for execution in favour of the assignee-decree holder or the heir of the decree-holder, but recognising the assignee-decree-holder's or the heir's rights to execute and it should then transfer the execution to the new Court. If both Courts are given concurrent jurisdiction, the result would be that one alleged assignee decree holder might make his application to the Court which passed the decree and another alleged assignee decree-holder or the original decree-holder himself might make his application to the new Court (which is included in the definition of the Court which passed the decree), and there might be conflicting decisions as to who is the real assignee decree-holder or who is really entitled to execute the decree. It is because Order XXI, rule 16, raises such difficulties and because very complicated questions might arise under some of the other orders and sections (such as section 47) if concurrent jurisdiction is recognised and if the expression "the Court which passed the decree" may mean two Courts at the same time, that I have felt so much difficulty in agreeing with my learned colleagues in the answer to the question referred to us and it was the consideration that in a matter of procedure, a unanimous decision of a question referred to the Full Bench is desirable that has finally settled the matter in my mind.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.
APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 33 OF 1918.
May 19, 1919.
Present:—Mr. Justice N. R Chatterjea and Mr. Justice Duval.

Raja NARENDRA LAL KHAN—DECREE-HOLDER—APPELLANT
versus
BOMKESH MITTER AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS.

Decree awarding compensation, construction of—Decree silent as to interest—Interest, whether can be allowed—Compensation, amount of, when to be ascertained—Execution of decree—Duty of executing Court.

A decree awarding compensation contained the following provisions:—"The defendants are directed to pay compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,265 per annum.....and that the sum of Rs. 1,606 and odd be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff on account of the costs of the suit with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from this date to the date of realization." In execution the decree-holder claimed interest on the amount awarded as compensation:

Held, that upon a proper construction of the decree, interest was awarded upon the amount of the costs only and not on the amount of the compensation. [p. 228, col. 2.]

Where the amount of compensation is fixed by a decree at a certain sum per year, that sum, unlike mesne profits, is not liable to be ascertained thereafter, except in so far as the length of the period in respect of which it is payable is concerned. [p 229, col. 1.]

A Court executing a decree must execute it as it finds it, and cannot allow interest if the decree is silent as to interest. [p. 229, cols 1& 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Midnapore, dated the 28th of November 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Sib Prosonna Bhattacharjee (with him Babus Sib Chandra Palit, Jyotish Chandra Hazra and Khirode Narain Bhuina, for the Appellant —The decree-holder is entitled to get interest on the amount of compensation awarded by the decree. That would appear to be so upon a proper construction of the decree. The words "with interests thereon" refer not only to the costs of the suit but also to the compensation. If the judgment-debtor does not choose to pay the compensation he must pay interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum till realization. Further the compensation awarded in this case is nothing but mesne profits. Though the word compensation has been used in the judgment, it is the mesne profits which the defendants have been made liable to pay to the decree-holder. Section 2, clause (12), of the Civil Procedure Code expressly provides that mesne profits includes interest on such profits. So even if no interest might have been expressly awarded, the decree-holder can claim such interest. See Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1).

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose (with him Babus Manindra Nath Bose and Samarendra Kumar Dutt), for the Respondents.—The decree does not give any interest on the amount of the compensation awarded by the Court. The words "with interest thereon" can have reference to costs only and not to the amount of compensation. Section 2, clause (12), Civil Procedure Code, does not help the appellant because the expression "mesne profits" does not mean the same thing as the word "compensation". The amount of compensation is fixed by the decree, but the amount of mesne profits is fixed after the decree. Mesne profits, no doubt, includes interest on such profits, but compensation cannot necessarily imply interest on the amount of compensation. Interest on compensation cannot be claimed unless the Court which passed the decree expressly allows it. The case in Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1) does not apply to this case. I rely on the observation of the learned Judges in Harmanoje Narain Singh v. Ramprosad Singh (2). The amount of compensation is fixed for ever by the decree, and it cannot be varied.

Babu Sib Prosunna Bhattacharjee briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree, and the question involved in the appeal is whether the decree-holder, who is the appellant before us, is entitled to interest on the amount of compensation for which he obtained a decree against the respondent.

The decree in the original suit was dated the 30th November 1911 and the portion of it which deals with the question of compensation runs as follows: "The defendants are further directed to pay to the plaintiff compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,265 per annum from 17th August 1907 up to the date of institution of the suit and after that till delivery of possession to the plaintiff and that the sum of Rs. 1,606 9-6 be paid by defendants to plaintiff on account of the costs of this suit with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date to date of realisation." When the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree for the amount of compensation and costs, the judgment-debtors objected on the ground that they were entitled to certain deductions on account of Municipal taxes paid by them in respect of the property and that they were not liable to pay any compensation subsequent to the date on which they gave up possession. These objections were upheld by the High Court on appeal.

This had the effect of reducing the amount due to the decree-holder and when the decree-holder again applied for execution, he claimed interest on the amount of compensation. The judgment-debtors objected that under the decree the decree-holder was not entitled to any interest. The Court below allowed the objection, and the decree holder has appealed to this Court.

It is contended before us that upon a proper construction of the decree, the decree-holder is entitled to interest on the amount of compensation. This argument is based upon the ground that the words "with interest thereon" in the portion of the decree which we have set out above, have reference not only to the costs of the suit but also to the compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,265 per annum.

We think, however, that that is not the proper interpretation to be put upon the decree. The first portion of the passage we have quoted above from the decree deals with the amount of compensation which is to be at the rate of Rs. 1,265 per annum, and then the decree provides for the payment by the defendant to the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 1,606-9-6 on account of the costs of the suit and the words "with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum", which follow, have reference to the costs of the suit which immediately precede the words. We are of opinion that the decree did not award any interest on the amount of compensation.

It has, however, been contended before us that it is unnecessary to make any order awarding interest on mesne profits, as the expression mesne profits under section 2, clause (12), of the Civil Procedure Code includes interest on such profits, and reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1).

That case, however, is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case. There, the decree directed that the plaintiff would get mesne profits for the period of dispossession and that the mesne profits should be ascertained on inquiry at the time of the execution of the decree. The Commissioner appointed to ascertain the amount of mesne profits disallowed interest. The Subordinate Judge awarded interest on the mesne profits but on appeal the High Court reversed the decision of the Court of first instance so far as the interest on the profits was concerned. The Judicial Committee observed as follows: "The learned Judges say that the Court has still jurisdiction to give or refuse interest as it chooses. Their Lordships agree, because mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case.....Its obvious effect (of the alteration made in section 211 of Act XIV 1882 corresponding to section 2, clause (12), of the present Code) is to provide that a simple decree for mesne profits shall carry interest on them.....If the Court does not intend to give interest, it should say so." As already stated, in that case mesne profits were left to be ascertained in execution and the decree for "mesne profits" carried interest on such profits having regard to the definition of the expression in the Code.

In the present case the amount of compensation (the Court has not used the expression "mesne profits" either in the original decree or in any subsequent proceedings) which the decree-holder was to get under the decree was fixed by the Court at Rs 1,265 per annum. The amount of compensation, therefore, was not liable to be ascertained thereafter, except in so far as the period was concerned. We think, therefore, that the definition of the expression "mesne profits" in the Code or the decision of the Judicial Committee in Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Shoshi Shikhareswar Roy (1) does not help the appellant.

In Harmanoje Narain Singh v. Ramprasad Singh (2), after referring to the decision of the Judicial Committee, the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ.) say: "But these cases do not lay down that if the Court which ascertains the mesne profits has omitted to allow interest, it is open to the Court which executes the decree for mesne profits to allow interest in execution proceedings. It is an elementary principle that the Court which executes a decree must execute it as it stands. Besides, there is no rule which makes it obligatory upon the Court to allow interest on mesne profits; it is a matter of judicial discretion, to be exercised according to the circumstances of the case. If, therefore, the Court which assessed mesne profits improperly exercised its discretion and disallowed interest on erroneous grounds, the remedy of the decree-holders was by way of an appeal. They cannot now claim interest when the decree for mesne profits is silent as to interest."

We agree in the above observations.

It is contended that the judgment debtors themselves having appealed in execution proceedings and got the decree of the Court of first instance varied by the High Court, cannot contend that the amount of compensation was definitely fixed by the original decree in the suit. But the decree was varied by the High Court only to this extent, namely, that the period for which the mesne profits were to be allowed, was fixed, and secondly that the judgment-debtors were allowed a deduction on account of certain monthly taxes, in respect of the property, which was payable by the decree-holder. However that may be, we do not think that that in any way affects the question of interest.

It is to be observed that it was not until the High Court's order in the execution proceeding was passed, that the decree-holder claimed any interest on the amount of compensation. Although the mere omission to claim such interest originally does not stand in his way if he is entitled to it under the decree, we think that this indicates that all parties understood that the decree did not allow interest on the amount of compensation.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the appeal must fail and it is accordingly dismissed with costs, five gold mohurs.

An injunction cannot be asked for against a person whose employment, whatever its exact nature, so long as it continues, entitles him to the exercise of the rights proposed to be restrained. [p. 230, col. 2.]

Where the Uralans of a Malabar Devaswom sued for an injunction to restrain a Samudayi appointed by them from interfering with the management of the Devaswom and its properties without any allegation or proof of his dismissal:

Held, that as the dismissal of the defendant was a condition essential to the grant of relief by way of injunction and as this was not alleged to have been fulfilled, the suit was incompetent. [p. 230, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 8 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the District Munsif, Walluvanad, in Original Suit No. 244 of 1916.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Eroman Unni, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Uralans, sued 1st defendant alleging that they had admitted him to the management of their Devaswom as Samudayi and given him a Samudayam deed. The prayer was for an injunction prohibiting him from interfering with the Devaswom in future, for an account, and for possession of various properties belonging to the Devaswom and for the setting aside, meaning presumably a declaration, in respect of the Samudayam deed.

In the plaint there was no reference to any dismissal of 1st defendant, except a statement that on 1st April 1916 plaintiffs required him to vacate the office of Samudayi. First defendant, therefore, pleaded, inter alia, "the statement in the plaint that plaintiffs wanted this defendant to vacate the Samudayiship on 1st April 1916 is false. They have not so requested nor sent any registered letter. Therefore defendant is still Samudayi." Unfortunately the significance of this plea was not appreciated at the trial. It was not noticed that an injunction could not be asked for against a person, whose employment, whatever its exact nature, so long as it continued entitled him to the exercise of the rights proposed to be restrained. Kunchunni Nair v. Subramania Pattar (1) was no doubt a suit for what was described as the removal of an agent. But the facts, as reference to the printed papers shows, were peculiar, and it would have been useless for the defendant to lay stress on this aspect of them, because the plaintiff had in fact once dismissed him, that dismissal having been the basis of previous proceedings. In the present case there seems to be no reason for departure from the principle recognised in Srinivasa Swami v. Ramanuja Chariar (2) and Sundaram Iyer v. Venkateswara Iyer (3) that the plaintiffs cannot throw on the Court the duty which lay upon them and ask it to grant them relief, which can only be granted after that duty has been done, on the assumption that the Court will do it. The present suit, as the cause of action was set out in the plaint, was in the circumstances incompetent, since a condition essential to the grant of relief by way of injunction was not alleged to have been fulfilled. If the proper course had been taken and an issue as to whether 1st defendant had been dismissed had been framed, a finding that he had not been, would have been fatal to plaintiffs and might have resulted in their withdrawing, with or without leave to sue again, after taking action to dismiss 1st defendant. And this point is not merely formal. For if a dismissal had been alleged or proved, 1st defendant might, as he has done here, have gone on to contend that it was of no effect, because the forms of natural justice were not observed in the holding of any enquiry preceding it.

Unfortunately all this was overlooked until the hearing in this Court and even here, although the absence of any enquiry preliminary to the dismissal was alleged in a supplementary ground of appeal, nothing was said as to the absence of any dismissal until the argument. As we have said, however, we think the point fundamental, and we, therefore, do not feel at liberty even at this stage to disregard it. We, therefore, set aside the decisions of the lower Courts and remand the suit to that

GANPATI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Debts incurred by father—Son, liability of—Pious duty—Co-parcener, transfer by, of share, effect of—Transferee, rights of.

Under the Hindu Law, it is the primary duty of a father to pay debts incurred by him not for any family purpose, but for his own purposes, and the pious duty of a son, if it arises at all, only arises if the father's share or his self-acquisitions are insufficient to meet the debts. [p. 233, col. 2.]

In the Central Provinces the principle is recognised of giving equitable relief in the case of a bona fide alienation by a co-parcener of his share in joint family property. [p. 234, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District and Sessions Judge, Nagpur, dated the 25th April 1918, confirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Nagpur, dated the 20th August 1917.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. S. C. Dutta Chowdhry for the Appellant.

Dr. H. C. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant, Nanhusao, sued the defendants-respondents, Ganpati and Balwant, for foreclosure in respect of a mortgage deed, dated 13th July 1906, for Rs. 2,500 under which shares in various villages and other property were hypothecated, Ganpati alone had executed the mortgage, but it is plaintiff's case that it was executed for the benefit of the family and that the second defendant, Balwant, was joint and lived with his father, Ganpati. Rupees 1,500 was said to have been paid in cash, while Rs. 1,000 was on account of an old debt said to have been found due by Ganpati on account of an old mortgage executed in 1898 by Ganpati and his brother, Atmaram.

The Subordinate Judge came to the following findings, viz:—

(i) that although the mortgage dated 1906 was duly executed and attested, the payment of Rs. 1,500 cash thereunder had not been proved and that it was valid to the extent of Rs. 1,000 only.

(ii) that the "antecedent debt" of 1898 was not tainted with immorality and that the mortgage in suit was in consequence binding on defendant No. 2, Balwant.

On these and other findings with which I am not now concerned, a decree for foreclosure for a sum of Rs. 315-14-3 was granted to the plaintiff, Nanhusao.

The present plaintiff-appellant appealed to the Court of the District and Sessions Judge on the ground that a decree for the full amount said to have been due in respect of the consideration stated in the deed should have been passed, while the first defendant filed a cross-objection craving that the suit should have been dismissed on the ground that the amount said to be due under the deed in suit had already been satisfied. The District and Sessions Judge, in his order dated 7th February 1918, remanded the case for trial on the question of the legal necessity for the debt of Rs. 2,500 with special reference to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). The Subordinate Judge found that no legal necessity for incurring either the debt of Rs. 1,000 or of Rs. 1,500 had been made out and the learned District and Sessions Judge, accepting these findings, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In doing so, the lower Appellate Court remarked as follows :—

"In view of the Privy Council judgment mentioned in my order dated 7th February

1918, it is clear that a mortgage granted by one co-parcener over the joint family property is invalid, unless the family interests justified the mortgage, or unless the charge was made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the security afforded by the joint estate.

"The debt of 1898 was incurred on the security of the joint estate. Even if a very small fraction of that debt was incurred to pay off a prior debt, it seems impossible to hold that the mortgage of 1906 was incurred to satisfy the obligation resulting from that debt: presumably Ganpati would not have mortgaged the estate to satisfy such a small amount. Even if the 1906 mortgage was valid to the extent of Rs. 77, the re-payments would have satisfied the valid portion of the mortgage debt."

The plaintiff, Nanhusao, has come up to this Court on second appeal on the ground that, in any event, Rs. 1,000 out of the total consideration of Rs. 2,500 was due on the pre existing mortgage of 1898, and that the deed in suit, in the absence of any proof that it was for illegal or immoral purposes, must be considered as binding to this extent on the defendant No. 2, Balwant. It is further urged that a decree in respect of the entire claim should have been passed against the father's interest in the property.

It will be convenient here to examine the finding of the lower Appellate Court to the effect that, in the present instance, the Rs. 1,000 consideration of the deed in suit, which represented the balance due on the mortgage-deed of 1898, was not an antecedent debt within the terms of the definition given by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1). An antecedent debt must represent "an obligation not only antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate." It has been urged, on behalf of the present plaintiff-appellant, that, in the present case, we have had two transactions, viz, the 1898 mortgage and the subsequent one of 1906, and that their Lordships could not have intended that, in such a case, the same set of considerations should be applied to the second transaction as might legitimately be applied to the first. I am unable to regard this contention as sound, for, were it accepted, it would always be possible to defeat the object their Lordships had in view by the obvious expedient of having two such transactions one subsequent to the other. The decision of Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Hira Ram v. Udhe Ram (2) is not helpful in this connection, for it was only concerned with the first factor in the definition of "antecedent debt" as now laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In any event I can find nothing in the judgment of their Lordships in question to suggest that they were laying down anything other than a general rule, and as the debt of 1898 was incurred on the security of the family estate, it follows, on the finding of fact arrived at by the lower Appellate Court, that the mortgage-deed in suit did not, as regards the Rs. 1,000 consideration included therein, come within the definition of "antecedent debt" as laid down by their Lordships in 1917.

I may point out that, in the same case, their Lordships, after pointing out that the parties' power, in the absence of necessity, to deal with the joint family property is an exception to the general principle of Hindu Law, remarked as follows:—

"The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immoveable assets which do not personally belong to him but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, viz., that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge. In short, it may be said that the rule of this part of the Mitakshara Law is that the joint family estate is in this position: under his management he can neither obtain money for his own purposes for it nor can he obtain money for his own purposes upon it. To permit him to do so would enable him to sacrifice those rights which he was bound to conserve. This would be equivalent to sanctioning a plain and, it might be, a deliberate breach of trust. The Mitakshara Law does not warrant or legalize any such transaction.

"The limits of the principle of the exception have been thus set forth, because in their Lordships' opinion they form a guide to the settlement of the conflict of authority in India on the subject of antecedent debt."

It seems to me that, in the present case, the position is, therefore, perfectly clear. The previous debt was secured upon the credit of the joint family property, and it follows that it was not such an antecedent debt as to justify the charging of Balwant, the son's interest in the property.

I would further point out that, at page 444* of the same decision, the following passage occurs:—

"While the father, however, remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, that attempt must fail; and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this, namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing. Accordingly the case founded merely upon pious obligation, and so strenuously argued before the Board, fails in the present instance by reason of the fact that Bhup Singh, who contracted the debt, is still alive and that there is a concurrent finding by both of the Courts below to the effect that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the debt of Rs. 200 for which the mortgage was granted was incurred for any legal necessity or benefit to the estate."

In these Provinces, the point has also been dealt with by Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Dilli Singh v. Bina (3). In my opinion, the decision of their Lordships, in the passage quoted above, must clearly be applied in the present case. Assuming that there has been no proof of legal necessity for the debt in suit, it is clearly impossible, at the present juncture, to have appeal to the pious obligation of the son to pay off his father's debts, for we cannot assume that defendant-respondent may not, during his lifetime, satisfy the debt in question either out of his share of profits in the family property or out of his self-acquisitions. The cause of action as alleged to arise out of the son's pious obligation, in my opinion, has not come into being yet and cannot arise until the death of Ganpati. It may be noted here that in Vinanampati Peda Venkanna v. Vadlamannati Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (4) the effect of the decision in the Privy Council case quoted was considered and, although it was held that that decision does not overrule the many earlier decisions as to the right of a creditor of a joint Hindu father to sue father and sons for an antecedent debt untainted with illegality or immorality, it was nevertheless pointed out that their Lordships of the Privy Council had made it clear that it is the primary duty of the father to pay debts incurred by him not for any family, but for his own, purposes and that the pious duty of the son, assuming that it arises at all, arises only if the father's share or his self acquisitions are insufficient to meet the debts. For these reasons, I do not think the mortgage-deed in suit can be enforced against the respondent-defendant No. 2.

The remaining matter for consideration is, whether as alleged on behalf of the appellant the mortgage-deed in suit can be enforced against the father's share of the joint estate, that is, a half interest therein. It is urged in this connection on behalf of the respondent-defendant No. 1 that the position of a manager is that of a trustee and that he cannot validly charge even his own interest in the family property unless not only the first but also the second condition as regards antecedent debt as laid down by their Lordships and referred to above is satisfied. The case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) was an Allahabad one and in that Province as in the Province of Bengal alienation by a co parcener of his share has never been recognised. A different view of the law in this connection is, however, prevalent in Bombay, Madras and these Provinces, where the equity to enforce a partition in favour of a bona fide transferee for value has always been recognised. This equity is, no doubt, an exception and must be confined within strict limits, but, after careful consideration, I am unable to read the judgment of their Lordships, in the case referred to, as laying down for Bombay, Madras and these Provinces that the view of the law which has been taken therein for many years past is no longer correct. In the judgment referred to their Lordships were purely concerned with the question of Hindu Law, and the case being one from Allahabad there was no necessity or occasion for them to consider the connected question which is now before me for consideration. As at present advised, therefore, I am not prepared to read their Lordships' ruling as laying down the proposition that the Bombay, Madras and Central Provinces principle of giving equitable relief in this connection must no longer hold good. In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to a decree for the entire debt claimed against the father's interest (half share) in the mortgaged property. The result is, that the judgment and decree appealed against are reversed and there will, instead, be a decree as above stated in favour of the appellant. The appellant must bear the respondent No. 2's costs both in this and in the lower Courts, while the defendant-respondent, Ganpati, must bear the appellant's costs both in this and in the lower Courts. The date of payment of the decretal amount will be 5th January 1920, and interest at the usual Court rate of eight annas per cent. per mensem will be allowed. I allow Rs. 100 as Counsel's fees for respondent No. 2.

SREE RAJAH VELLANKI SRINIVASA JAGANNATHA RAO BAHADUR, ZAMINDAR GARU OF TIRUVUR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 6, O. XX, r. 19—Set-off, nature of—"Debt" in O. VIII, r. 6, meaning of—Plaintiff, whether can set up limitation as answer to set-off—Principal and agent—Suit on agency transactions—Set-off, whether can be claimed.

The right to claim a set-off is one of attack as well as of defence, and in a suit for the recovery of the balance upon the taking of accounts in which the defendant claims a set-off, he occupies the position of a plaintiff in respect of any balance claimed by him, and the plaintiff is not precluded from setting up the defence of limitation as well as any other defence to the attack of the defendant. [p. 236, col. 2.]

The term "debt" in rule 6 of Order VIII of the Civil Procedure Code means a present obligation to pay a liquidated sum of money, and, in order to constitute a debt, it is not sufficient that a sum of money may be ultimately recoverable. [p. 236, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, in a suit for the balance to be found due on taking an account of an agency transaction, the defendant in his written statement claimed that a balance was due to him on the accounts:

Held, that Order VIII, rule 6, of the Code did not apply, inasmuch as there was no ascertained sum of money claimed, the amount being made to depend upon the examination of the accounts, and the written statement contained no particulars of the debt sought to be set off. [p. 237, col. 2.]

In a suit upon agency transactions where the defendant alleges claims against the plaintiff which he could have sued to enforce independently of the plaintiff's suit, but which claims were, at the date of the plaintiff's suit, barred by limitation, he cannot be permitted to plead these claims as a set-off against the claim of the plaintiff. [p. 237, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam, in Appeal Suit No. 51 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 549 of 1915, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ellore), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 363 of 1912.

FACTS.—The appellant is the agent of the Zemindar, respondent-defendant. This suit was for recovery of moneys spent on behalf of the principal to pay peishcush to Government and to conduct litigations. The agency terminated on 31st May 1909. Suit was brought within three years. Additional written statement was put in by defendant on February 6th, 1913, claiming a set off of money due on taking accounts. The question was whether this claim was barred, being more than three years after the end of the agency, when claimed.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellants.—The claim sought to be set off is barred under Article 89, Limitation Act. A suit for money is a suit for recovery of moveable property. See Asghar Ali Khan v. Khurshed Ali Khan (1). The sum claimed is unascertained and cannot be set off.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, for the Respondent.—In Vyravan Chetty v. Srimath Deivasikamani Nataraja Desikar (2) following Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (3), it was held that where there is liability to account, a set-off can be claimed, provided it is not barred at the date of the plaint. Whether the claim sought to be set off is barred on the date of the written statement is not the test. The date of the plaint is the material date.

In Vyravan Chetty v. Srimath Deivasikamani Nataraja Desikar (2) it was held that even a claim for unliquidated damages may be set off under Order VIII, rule 6, provided it arises out of the same transaction as the plaint claim and provided it is not barred on the date of the plaint. Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachalam Pattar (4), Chidambara Mudaliar v. Krishnaswami Pillai (5) are strong cases on the point. The principle on which the rule is based is that of the liability of the parties to account to one another. The same principle is recognised also in the Contract Act. The policy is to avoid the necessity for cross suits. In redemption suits also profits are recovered for more than the period allowed by the law of limitation. The principle is recognised also in England. Walker v. Clements (6). See also Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Shah (7), Edward Dalgleish v. Ramdin Singh (8). Though the sum is unascertained, it can be set off. Vyravan Chetty v. Srimath Deivasikamani Nataraja Desikar (2). For, as sued for, it is ascertained for purposes of suit valuation, even though ultimately the Court may fix a different sum. If sufficient particulars are not given, particulars can be asked for, but the sum is not in any way to be treated as unascertained. In the present case the amounts are in my account and there are definite entries in it. Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Shah (7) cited in Ramdhari Singh v. Parmanund Singh (3). The plaintiff sues for an account and I am only putting forward claims in accounts which he has ignored.

Mr. Somasundaram, in reply.

[BAKEWELL, J.—This is a suit for accounts. Why should not the set-off be allowed?]

This is not a suit for accounts but for an ascertained balance.

[BAKEWELL, J.—It is nonetheless a suit for accounts. The principle of partnership suits can be applied.]

Those suits stand on a different footing. A decree cannot be given in favour of the defendant in a case like the present where there is a fiduciary relationship.

[BAKEWELL, J.—I do not see why that necessitates a difference in procedure.]

Even in the cases of equitable set-off, barred claims are not allowed to be brought in. The Limitation Act does not provide an exception for set-off.

JUDGMENT.

BAKEWELL, J.—The plaint in this case was presented on 17th June 1912 and alleged that the plaintiff was the agent of the defendant and his father for the collection of the kist of a certain village and borrowed monies on their authority, and claimed payment of a specific sum, the balance shown by the statement of account therewith filed, interest thereon, and damages for costs incurred by the plaintiff in a suit filed against him in respect of money borrowed on behalf of the defendant. In his defence, dated 26th February 1913, the defendant denied the authority of the plaintiff to borrow monies and defend suits, and otherwise challenged the correctness of plaintiff's accounts, and alleged that upon proper accounts being taken a balance would be found due to the defendant in respect of which he was about to take steps against the plaintiff.

On the 24th February 1913 issues were framed as to the correctness of plaintiff's accounts. On the 20th June 1913 the defendant applied for leave to file an additional written statement containing a prayer that a decree might be given in the suit for the amount found due to him on taking the accounts between the parties; and by order dated 24th June 1913 the defendant was allowed to amend his written statement accordingly.

The learned District Munsif found that the defendant's claim was barred, and that his written statement was not within the terms of Order VIII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, but the learned Subordinate Judge held that the suit being for an account, a decree could be passed against the plaintiff in favour of the defendant.

It is clear that the defendant's written statement does not fall within the terms of Order VIII, rule 6, Civil Procedure Code, because it does not claim an ascertained sum of money and it does not contain the particulars of the debt. It has been held by this Court that debt means a present obligation to pay a liquidated sum of money [Sabiu Sahib v. Noordin Sahib (9)]. As is pointed out in that case, it is not sufficient to constitute a debt that a sum of money may ultimately be recoverable. The claim of both the plaintiff and the defendant is for the balance to be found due on taking an account of the agency transactions, and the allegation contained in paragraph 4 of the defendant's original written statement that the plaintiff was compelled to employ persons to perform defendant's duties and the allegation of plaintiff that he incurred costs in proceedings against which defendant was bound to indemnify him, constitute claims for damages for breach of the contract of agency.

It has been argued that under Order XX, rule 19, a set-off is admissible otherwise than under Order VIII, rule 6, and a decree may be given for the defendant. This rule appears to adopt the decisions of this Court that cross demands arising out of the same transaction may be set off though they do not fall within the strict terms of Order VIII, rule 6, and to allow a decree to be passed for the defendant in such cases, but it does not deal with the question of limitation.

A set off was originally merely a defence to an action, and it has been held that the right to plead this defence arises when the action is brought, so that it does not become barred subsequently by the Statute of limitations. [Walker v. Olements (6).]

The right has now become one of attack as well as of defence, and the defendant occupies the position of a plaintiff in respect of any balance claimed by him. No decision of this Court has been cited before us that in a suit upon a contract the plaintiff is precluded from setting up the defence of the Statute as well as any other defence to the attack of the defendant.

In taking an account of the amount due under a mortgage the mortgagor is entitled to set off any sums due to him under the mortgage contract, whether a suit would lie therefor or not; the mortgagee is a creditor claiming payment of his debt, and the mortgagor's claim is in effect a defence, and his rights under the contract have not been extinguished though he may be precluded by the Statute from bringing a suit [Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachalam Pattar (4)]. If the mortgagee, on the other hand, has monies of the mortgagor in his hands, he can, in taking the account in a suit by the mortgagor, appropriate them towards payment of a sum due to him by the mortgagor, notwithstanding that a suit would be barred. Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Shah (7). This is also a set-off in defence to the plaintiff's claim. In Chidambara Mudaliar v. Krishnaswami Pillai (5) a trustee was held to be entitled to set up his right to be indemnified out of the trust estate when called upon for an account; he still held the office of trustee and the Court would not remove him from his office and so deprive him of the right to possession of the trust property and of paying himself thereout without providing for payment of the amount found due to him. In cases where the Court is administering a fund, it will have regard to the subsisting right of the parties, and the fact that any party could not take separate proceedings to enforce this right is immaterial (Ibid., p. 294*).

In the case of a suit upon contract it has been held by this Court that the defendant cannot plead an equitable set-off which is barred at the date of suit, because the amount claimed is not legally recoverable [Vyravan Chetty v. Srimath Deivasikamani Nataraja Desikar (2)].

I respectfully agree with the observations of my learned brother upon the decisions of the Allahabad High Court which have been cited, and I am of opinion that in pleading an equitable set-off the procedure of Order VIII, rule 6, of the Code should be followed.

In the present case the defendant's right to sue his agent for an account was not barred on the 17th June 1912 when the plaintiff's suit was instituted, but became barred immediately thereafter under Article 89 of the Limitation Act, 1908. I am of opinion that when the defendant filed his written statement, there was no sum due by the plaintiff to the defendant within the meaning of Order XX, rule 19, because there was no amount then legally recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff. I think that, since the defendant's claim was not barred at the date of the suit, he was entitled to plead that there was a sum in the plaintiff's hands which the latter was bound under his contract to apply in satisfaction of his demand; but that, since a suit could not be brought by the defendant to enforce his claim, he could not plead that there was a further sum payable to him.

I would allow the appeal and restore the District Munsif's decree with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case, the plaintiff sues as agent of the defendant to recover the balance of money due to him by the latter and states that if accounts of receipts and disbursements are looked into, it will be found that money is owing to him. The defendant put in a written statement stating that as a matter of fact nothing was due by him to the plaintiff and asked that the suit should be dismissed. At a later date he put in an additional written statement which was permitted to be filed under Order VIII, rule 6, in which he claimed that a balance was due to him on the accounts and stated that he was prepared to pay the requisite Court-fee if ordered to do so. The defendant's claim being that of principal against agent, it would be governed by Article 89 of the Limitation Act and his claim would have been barred on the day after the plaint in this suit was filed as the agency terminated on the 31st May 1909.

The question in this appeal is whether a decree can be given to the defendant for the balance found due to him, notwithstanding the fact that when he put in his claim to set-off, that claim would have been barred by limitation. No doubt if the claim could be treated as a set off under Order VIII, rule 6, the provisions of Order XX, rule 19 (1), would justify the decree in defendant's favour. I have, however, no hesitation in stating that this is not a case of set-off under Order VIII, rule 6. In the first place, there is no ascertained sum of money. The amount depends upon the examination of the accounts. Money was not legally recoverable on the date the claim was made, and the written statements do not contain particulars of debts sought to be set off. This being so, I do not think that the provisions of Order VIII, rule 6, can be applied to this case.

The next question is whether it can be treated as an equitable set off. In the first place, I would point out that there is really no set-off pleaded, for all that the defendant says is that if the accounts between himself and the plaintiff are looked into, a balance will be found due to him, that is to say, that on the true view of the facts stated in the plaint the decree should be for defendant and not for the plaintiff. However, treating it as an equitable set-off, we have to see whether it can be allowed although barred by limitation. In mortgage suits, sums are allowed to be set off in taking accounts of the mortgage even though barred by limitation, and this principle is recognised in Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachalam Pattar (4), Sheo Saran Singh v. Mahabir Pershad Shah (7) and Edward Dalgleish v. Ramdin Singh (8), and it was held in Chidambara Mudaliar v. Krishnaswami Pillai (5) that a trustee was entitled to have a decree for the amounts due to him from the trust in a suit brought for his removal, although his right to sue for these amounts was barred by limitation. But those cases are cases in which the relationship between the parties still subsisted. In the former cases it was that of a mortgagor and mortgagee and in the latter case, the trustee was still in possession of trust property. In Vyravan Chetty v. Srimath Deivasikamani Nataraja Desikar (2) it was held by the same Bench that decided the case in Parasurama Pattar v. Venkatachalam Pattar (4) that a lessee could not set up by way of an equitable set off an unliquidated claim for damages which was barred at the date of the suit. The main difference between that case and the present is that the present defendant's claim was not barred at the date of the suit, but became barred on the following day. The question is whether in equity he should be allowed not only to set off an amount equivalent to plaintiff's claim and thus have the suit dismissed, but also to claim a decree for an additional amount. No doubt in Walker v. Olements (6) it was held that a set-off which was treated as a cause of action must be deemed to date from the cause of action. That case, however, was decided before Courts were empowered to decree claims on set off. Until 1875, a set-off could only be pleaded as a defence and could not be treated as a substantial claim and the English Courts have always recognised that a claim, on a set-off is subject to the law of limitation in the same way as the principal claim, vide Rawley v. Rawley (10). On principles of equity, therefore, is the defendant entitled to get a decree in this suit? It is not disputed that his claim must be allowed to the extent of the plaintiff's claims and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. But the further question whether he is entitled to a decree for money has arisen. If his claim is allowed, he will be in the exceptionally fortunate position of putting forward a claim in a Court of law which he claims to have tried at no risk to himself. He has not paid Court-fee on his claim and merely undertakes to pay what is necessary in case he gets a decree, whereas if no decree is given he evades all liability. If the plaintiff had not brought this suit, he certainly could not have prosecuted his claim. It would, therefore, not seem right that he should be allowed to evade the Statute of Limitation merely because plaintiff has filed a suit against him. No doubt in Pragi Lal v. Maxwell (11) it was held by Oldfield, J., that a claim like the present one should be allowed, but the other learned Judge in that case expressly differed on the ground that although a set-off could be admitted as an equitable protection to the defendant against his being cast in the plaintiff's suit, it could not be allowed in order to obtain a decree in his favour. No authority in this Court has been brought to our notice in which a decree has been given for defendant in a suit brought by plaintiff on accounts, but there is a case in Permanand v. Jagat Narain (12) in which such a decree was given for the defendant. The ground on which this decision was based was that a suit for accounts against an agent necessarily involves an undertaking by the plaintiff to pay to the defendant any sum that may be found due to him. This, I think, is taking a somewhat large view of the intention of a plaintiff in such a suit, for it could rarely be his intention to bring a suit in order that a decree might be given against him. On principles of equity, therefore, I think that the defendant's claim to a decree should be disallowed on the ground that such a decree would have the effect of enabling him to evade the law of limitation. In that view I agree in the order proposed.

Where in a proceeding under the Land Acquisition Act the landlords alone take exception to the award of the Collector, and on their objection the amount awarded is enhanced by the Judge in respect of all the interests in the land, and not merely the landlords' interests, the landlords are entitled to receive payment in respect of their interests only, but the tenants, not having objected, are not entitled to any share of the amount by which the Collector's award is enhanced.

JUDGMENT.

CHATTERJEA, J.—These appeals arise out of proceedings under the Land Acqisition Act and the question involved in the appeals relates to the valuation of the land acquired.

It has not been shown that the valuation arrived at by the learned Judge below upon the materials on the record in the present case is wrong. The valuation by the Judge, however, represents all the interest in the land, and not merely the landlord's interest. The landlord is, therefore, entitled only to his share of the excess amount as found by the Court below. The tenants accepted the award of the Collector and did not ask for any reference to the Judge nor take any exception to the award before the Judge. Under the circumstances, the tenants are not entitled to any share of the excess amount found by the Court below.

The result is that the cases must go back to the lower Court in order that there might be apportionment between the interests of the landlord and the tenants. The Collector will have to deposit the excess amount which would be payable to the landlords in respect of their interests only. He will not have to deposit anything on account of the tenants' share in the excess amount as found by the Court below.

Each party to bear his own costs in these appeals.

The cross objections in R. A. Nos. 113 and 114 of 1916 are not pressed and are, therefore, dismissed.

SMITHER, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, scope of—Petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Court, jurisdiction of, to enquire into merits.

The primary object of an inquiry under Order XXXIII, of the Civil Procedure Code, is to determine the pauperism of the petitioner, and a Court is not justified in determining complicated questions of law in the course of such inquiry. If in the course of the inquiry it appears to be clear from the facts brought out in the evidence or from the facts alleged in the petition that the petitioner has no good subsisting cause of action, the Court can dismiss the petition, but it cannot treat the petition as calling for an adjudication of various questions which ought to be the subject of specific issues after all the pleadings have been filed. [p. 241, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Palghat, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 2107 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 63 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. A. Anantha Aiyar, for the Petitioners.—The lower Court has misunderstood the scope of Order XXXIII, Civil Procedure Code. It was not justified in deciding the question of limitation in an enquiry into the petitioners' pauperism. That is not the stage in which it could deal with the merits of the case. The only matter for adjudication before it was whether the petitioner was a pauper. See Govindasami Pillai v. Municipal Council, Kumbakonam (1), Koka Ranganayaka Ammal

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 95; 41 M. 620; 34 M. L. J. 399.

v. Koka Venkatachellapati Nayudu (2), Rathnam Pillai v. Pappa Pillai (3).

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent.—Order XXXIII, rule 5 (d), gives the Court power to see if the petitioner has a good cause of action. In Subramania Chetty v. Kulayappan (4) Hannay, J., held that in a pauper enquiry, the Court may decide a question of limitation and dismiss the petition on the ground that the claim was barred.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, who are the petitioners, sued for a declaration that the consent decree in Original Suit No. 422 of 1910 and the Karar dated 30th April 1912 are not valid and also for a declaration that the properties specified in the plaint are Tarwad properties. They paid a Court fee stamp of Rs. 10 treating the suit as one for a mere declaration. The Subordinate Judge directed that an ad valorem fee should be paid on Rs. 18,000, the value of the properties as set out in the plaint. The fee payable would be Rs. 715 and the petitioners, alleging that they had no property sufficient to pay the ad valorem fee directed to be paid, filed a petition to sue in forma pauperis.

When the petition came on for disposal, the Subordinate Judge held that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed it. Hence this revision petition.

The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that though all the plaintiffs were minors at the date of the transaction they seek to impeach, they are barred as there were two adult members who could have sued. It is contended by the petitioners' Vakil (1) that the order directing payment of ad valorem fees was wrong, (2) that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in going beyond the scope of the enquiry directed in Order XXXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure, (3) that on the facts found the suit will not necessarily be barred

As regards the first point, it is argued by petitioners' Vakil on the authority of Chingacham Vitil Sankaran Nair v. Chingacham Vitil Gopala Menon (5) that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in having required ad valorem fees to be paid as the suit was for a mere declaration. It is unnecessary to consider this question on the present petition which relates to the pauperism of the petitioners. If the order directing ad valorem fees to be paid was wrong, the petitioners ought to have taken steps to have the order set aside. The application to sue in forma pauperis proceeded on the basis that ad valorem fees had to be paid and that petitioners were unable to pay it.

As regards the other points raised, I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge acted with material irregularity in dismissing the petition on the ground that it was barred.

The scope of the enquiry under Order XXXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure is primarily to determine the pauperism of the petitioners and in Govindasami Pillai v. Municipal Council, Kumbakonam (1) it was held that upon an application to sue in forma pauperis the Court was not justified in determining complicated questions of law.

In the present case the question of limitation is not so clear as the Subordinate Judge imagines. If the karar and the razinamah were fraudulent and collusive as the plaintiffs allege, the question as to when the persons who could set it aside had knowledge of a collusion or fraud becomes material. It is no answer to plaintiffs to say that there were members (defendants Nos. 11 and 21) who subsequently attained majority and who were inactive. Assuming that there were members who subsequently attained majority and could have sued, it must be shown that they were aware of the fraud and kept quiet for three years afterwards. Having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council in Nobin Chandra Barua v. Chandra Madhab Barua (6) the question whether there were persons who could by their dissent or inaction bind the minor plaintiffs or give a valid discharge is one not free from doubt or difficulty. The question of limitation is not one which could be decided offhand on the scanty evidence before the Subordinate Judge.

It is no doubt true that rule 5, clause (d), of Order XXXIII of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the Court power to reject the application to sue in forma pauperis if the allegations do not show a cause of action. It seems to me to be clear from the whole scope of Order XXXIII that the primary question to which the Court's attention ought to be directed is the fact of the petitioner's pauperism. If in the course of the enquiry it appears to be clear from the facts alleged in the petition or brought out in the evidence that the petitioner has no good subsisting cause of action, the Court can dismiss the petition but the Court ought not to treat the application for permission to sue as a pauper as calling for an adjudication of various questions which ought to be the subject of specific issues after all the pleadings have been filed.

In Koka Ranganayaka Ammal v. Koka Venkatachellapati Nayudu (2) it was held that the Court should not in an application to sue in forma pauperis go into the merits of the claim. In Rathnam Pillai v. Pappa Pillai (3) a Full Bench of this Court held, following Koka Ranganayaka Ammal v Koka Venkatachellapati Nayudu (2) and overruling Vijendra Tirtha Swami v. Sudhindra Tirtha Swami (7), that in an enquiry under section 409 of the old Code, corresponding to Order XXXIII, rule 7, the Court ought not to go into the evidence as to the merits of the case. The Chief Justice was of opinion that "the Munsif acted illegally in allowing evidence to be put in on behalf of the defendant with reference to the merits of the claim of the party applying for leave to sue in forma pauperis and in dismissing the application on the ground that on the evidence on record the applicant had no subsisting cause of action." A similar view was taken in Sankararamier v. Subramania Aiyar (8). In Venkoba Row v. Thuniya Nataraja Chetty (9) it was held by Benson and Sankaran Nair, JJ., that the enquiry under section 409 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be confined to the question of pauperism and should not be extended to matters touching the merits of the case. Kamrakh Nath v. Sundar Nath (10) and Vijendra Tirtha Swami v. Sudhindra Tirtha Swami (7) were dissented from and the Full Bench ruling in Rathnam Pillai v. Pappa Pillai (3) was followed.

A similar view was taken in Debo Das v. Ram Charn Dass (11), which was followed in Gopal Chandra Neogy v. Bigoo Mistry (12).

My attention has been called by Mr. Madhavan Nair to Subramania Chetty v. Kulayappan (4), where it was held by Hannay, J., that it was competent to the Court in an enquiry under Order XXXIII to go into the question as to whether the suit is barred by limitation No reference is made by the learned Judge to the decisions of this Court referred to by me above. All that was held in Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Harish Chandra (13) was that it was competent to the Court "to interrogate the petitioner as regards the merits of the claim obviously with a view to determine whether or not his allegations show a cause of action." It was held that in order to satisfy itself as to the existence of a subsisting cause of action the Court can refer not only to the petition but also to statements made by petitioner during the course of the enquiry. This decision is no authority for the proposition that the Court ought to frame an issue as to limitation, which is often a question dependent on facts and requires parties to go into the question which ought properly to be the subject-matter of an issue after the plaint is admitted.

I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge acted with material irregularity in dismissing the petition on the ground that the claim was barred by limitation, and set aside his order and direct him to dispose of the petition according to law

Costs will abide and follow the result.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, proviso (2)—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 80—Promissory note—Oral agreement as to payment of interest, whether admissible—Interest, whether can be allowed—Finding of fact as to payment of money, whether can be challenged.

Where a promissory note makes no mention regarding the payment of interest, oral evidence is inadmissible, under the provisions of section 92, proviso (2) of the Indian Evidence Act, to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement to pay interest. All that can be awarded to a plaintiff suing on such a promissory note is interest at 6 per cent per annum under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act [p. 242, col. 1.]

Fathuma Bivi v. Hanumantha Row, 17 M. L. J. 296; Luchmi Chand Jhowar v. Hemendra Prasad Ghosh, 26 Ind. Cas. 935; 18 C. W. N. 1260, Banwari Lal v. Jagar Nath Prasad, 35 Ind. Cas. 431; 1 P L. J. 71, followed.

The mere fact that a promissory note or other similar document is not executed for a sum of money alleged to have been advanced, is no ground for holding that the finding of a Court that such sum had been advanced is incorrect. [p. 242, col. 2.]

Application for revision of the judgment and decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 6th January 1919, in Suit No. 1587 of 1918.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. P. Vaidya, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The main question in this application for revision is whether a collateral oral agreement to pay interest on a promissory note can be proved or not. The promissory note in suit was for a simple sum of Rs. 325 and made no mention regarding the payment of interest. On the other hand the plaintiff-respondent alleged that there was a collateral oral agreement to pay interest at 2 per cent. per mensem and the lower Court has awarded interest at this rate. There is considerable case authority for the view that oral evidence is inadmissible to prove a contemporaneous agreement in a case like the present, having regard to the provisions of section 92, proviso 2, of the Indian Evidence Act and that all that can be awarded to the plaintiff is interest at 6 per cent. per annum under section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. This view was taken by Benson and Wallis, JJ., in Fathuma Bivi v. Hanumantha Row (1) and by Jenkins, C. J., and Woodroffe, J., in Luchmi Chand Jhowar v. Hemendra Prasad Ghosh (2). The decision in the Madras case just referred to was quoted with approval by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Rangappa v. Bismilla Khan (3). Similar view was also taken by Mullick, J., in Banwari Lal v. Jagar Nath Prasad (4). Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ghanshiam Lalji v. Ram Narain (5) apparently left this question open so far as a contemporaneous oral agreement to pay interest is concerned. I can, as at present advised, see no reason for differing from the view which has been taken in the various High Court decisions just quoted. The only consideration that has been urged on behalf of the respondent in this connection is that it is extremely unlikely that there would be no agreement to pay interest on the amount of the promissory note, but this is after all merely a matter of probability and having regard to the formal nature of the document, I am of opinion that the evidence to prove the alleged oral agreement was inadmissible in the circumstances of the case. In the circumstances the plaintiff-non-applicant is entitled to interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem.

The second contention urged in revision is that there had been no sufficient proof of the further advance of the Rs. 15 for which a decree has also been given by the lower Court. This was after all a pure finding of fact, and the mere fact that a promissory note or similar document was not executed therefor would be no ground for holding that the lower Court's finding that this amount had been advanced is incorrect.

The result is that the application succeeds as regards the first contention on revision and the plaintiff will receive a decree for Rs. 325 with interest at annas 8 per cent. per mensem instead of the rate of Rs. 2 per mensem as allowed by the lower Court. The decree in respect of the Rs. 15 advanced with interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem will stand. The non applicant-plaintiff will bear the applicant-defendant's costs in this Court, he having succeeded in his main contention, while in the lower Court costs will be borne by the parties proportionately to their success and failure. I fix Rs. 30 as Pleader's fees in this Court.

Order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 92, 99—Evidence, admissibility of, tendered by persons not parties to document in proof of its true character—'Varying' in s. 99, meaning of.

Section 99 of the Evidence Act is an enabling section just as section 92 is a disqualifying section. [p. 245, col. 2.]

The word 'varying' in section 99 of the Evidence Act covers the same ground as the words "contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from" in section 92 of the Act [p. 245, col. 2]

It is competent for persons who are not parties to a document to adduce oral evidence to show that the rights of parties to it are at variance with the rights ostensibly created and declared by the instrument [p. 245, col. 2.]

Second appeals against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Appeal Suit No. 125 of 1916, (Appeal Suit No. 371 of 1916 on the file of the District Court, Tanjore, and Appeal Suit No. 1 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, transferred to it by the High Court for fresh finding), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvadi in Original Suit No. 13 of 1915.

These second appeals came on for hearing on the 24th and 25th July 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—Exhibit I is, in terms, an absolute conveyance. Under section 92 of the Evidence Act, oral evidence is inadmissible to show that only a mortgage was intended. Mottayappan v. Palani Goundan (1) and Venkatasubba Sastrial v. Subramania Aiyar (2).

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri (with him Mr. S. Venkatarama Aiyar), for Respondent No. 1.—The exclusion of oral evidence is only as between the parties to the document and where the litigation is between such parties. Third parties are at liberty to show the true character of the document. The plaintiff, as Vasudeva Aiyar's creditor, seeking to attach the property as his for her decree, is not Vasudeva Aiyar's representative and she is entitled to show that Exhibit I was intended to operate as a mortgage. See Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe Law (3), Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4). Under section 99 of the Evidence Act persons who are not parties to a document or their representatives-in-interest may give evidence to show a contemporaneous agreement.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, in reply.—Section 92 has not been properly interpreted in Jagat Mohini Dasi v Rakhal Das (5) and Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4). The words 'no evidence shall be admitted as between the parties' to any instrument apply equally to evidence tendered by third parties.

JUDGMENT.—The 3rd defendant is the appellant in the one case and the 2nd defendant the appellant in the other case. They are alienees of different lands from the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant's title to these lands (and other lands with which we are not concerned in these second appeals) arose out of a sale-deed Exhibit I, dated 11th February 1906, executed by one Vasudeva Aiyar to 1st defendant for Rs. 4,000. In execution of a decree against the vendor (Vasudeva Aiyar), the decree-holder (the present plaintiff) attached these lands in 1913 on the ground that notwithstanding the sale deed of 1906 in favour of the present 1st defendant, Panchapakesa Aiyar, the ownership in the lands remained with the plaintiff's judgment-debtor Vasudeva Aiyar. Then the 1st and 2nd defendants put in claim petitions (the former of which had been allowed before date of suit) and the properties were released on 23rd December 1913; hence this suit for a declaration that the properties are liable to be attached as Vasudeva Aiyar's property, in execution of the plaintiff's money decree passed in Original Suit No. 480 of 1912 against Vasudeva Aiyar.

The plaintiff (1st respondent), though she at first attacked the sale deed of 1906 in favour of the 1st defendant on the grounds of fraud, want of consideration, colourability and so on, gave up, before the judgment was pronounced in the first Court, all the other grounds of attack except this single one, viz., that though Exhibit I is in form an absolute conveyance for Rs. 4,000 by Vasudeva Aiyar to the 1st defendant, there was a contemporaneous oral understanding by which the lands ostensibly conveyed were merely to remain as mortgage security for the re payment of the moneys which the 1st defendant undertook to pay in discharge of all the creditors of Vasudeva Aiyar, who was the 1st defendant's maternal uncle. It is found that the 1st defendant afterwards paid up Vasudeva Aiyar's debts to the extent of Rs. 6,728.

The District Munsif in a well-considered judgment made the following concluding observations: "The plaintiff has failed to show that Exhibit I was nominal or fictitious or that it was intended to have only a limited operation. The assertion that a transaction is not really what it purports to be, is one that will be regarded by the Courts with great suspicion and must be strictly made out by evidence. .....There is no evidence that the parties mala fide omitted to take into account or suppressed any genuine or subsisting debts at the time of Exhibit I which was preceded by prolonged investigation and negotiations. The sale did not leave the vendor destitute. Vasudeva Aiyar had no issue and he kept to himself lands measuring about an acre, which was sufficient for his subsistence. These, he, no doubt, gifted away under Exhibits XVII series" (September and August 1909). "If he did not really intend to make a sale in favour of the 1st defendant, why did he execute a sale-deed? The 1st defendant also got possession of the properties and enjoyed them with all the indicia of ownership. The 1st defendant is also in possession of the title-deeds, which is also an important element for consideration. I, therefore, hold that Exhibit I was intended to operate as an outright sale."

The lower Appellate Court reversed the judgment of the District Munsif and its conclusion is thus stated in paragraph 10: "In the result, I am clearly of opinion that no sale was intended under Exhibit I and that it was executed on the understanding that 1st defendant was to pay off all the debts due by Vasudeva or," probably a mistake for 'and,' "to have a charge on the lands for the sums paid by him." The lower Appellate Court accordingly granted a declaration that the properties in suit are liable to be sold in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 480 of 1912 on the file of the Tiruvadi District Munsif, subject to 1st defendant's claim therein for Rs. 6,728.

The appellant's learned Vakil Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar argued that, under section 92 of the Evidence Act, oral evidence was inadmissible to prove that the sale deed Exhibit I, which contained words intended by the parties to the document to express the meaning of absolute conveyance, should operate only as a mortgage and he relied on the cases in Mottayappan v. Palani Goundan (1) (Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ.) and Venkatasubba Sastrial v. Subramania Aiyar (2). It was held in those cases that oral evidence was inadmissible to prove that a different mode of operation was intended for a deed from the one which the executant stated in the deed and which they intended that the deed should state. It was, however, contended for the 1st respondent that it is only where the litigation is between the parties to the document or their representatives that oral evidence is excluded to vary the operation of the document and as the plaintiff is a creditor of Vasudeva Aiyar seeking to attach properties as Vasudeva Aiyar's to recover her decree debts, she is not a legal representative of Vasudeva Aiyar and is entitled to show by oral evidence and by conduct of parties that Exhibit I was intended to operate only as a mortgage transaction. The 1st respondent's learned Vakils relied principally upon the Privy Council case in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe Law (3) and on the Madras case reported as Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4). We might also refer to the case in Bageshri Dayal v. Pancho (6) decided by Mr. Justice Banerji and which is a direct authority in respondent's favour. In that case the plaintiff sued to recover one-fourth of the price of a house alleged to have been sold by the 1st defendant to the 2nd defendant, the plaintiff's claim being based upon a local custom. The transaction between the defendants was ostensibly not a sale but a usufructuary mortgage. The learned Judge held that the plaintiff, not being a party to the transaction, was entitled to give evidence to show that what purported to be a usufructuary mortgage was not in reality such but was in fact a sale. The learned Judge followed the decision in Jagat Mohini Dasi v. Rakhal Das (5) and Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4) and dissented from Rahiman v. Elahi Baksh (7).

Against this contention of the respondent, the appellant's learned Vakil Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar argued in reply that section 92 of the Evidence Act was not properly interpreted in Jagat Mohini Dasi v. Rakhal Das (5) and Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4) and that the observations on section 92 of the Evidence Act in those cases were not necessary for the decision of those cases. If we understood him aright, his contention was that the words "no evidence shall be admitted as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in-interest" mean, not merely that the parties to that instrument cannot give such evidence in their own interest when they are parties to a litigation, but that the words also mean that even a third party litigant cannot be permitted to give evidence to show that the rights of the parties to the instrument as between such parties are at variance with the rights ostensibly created and declared by the instrument. The first answer to this contention is that it does violence to the words of the section, the language being "admitted as between," which clearly has reference to the parties opposing one another at the trial. The second answer is that it ignores section 99, which is an enabling section just as section 92 is a disqualifying section. It is well settled that the word 'varying' in section 99 covers the same ground as the words "contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from" in section 92 vide Pathammal v. Syed Kalai Ravuthar (4). No construction of section 92 can modify the definite language of this section, which provides that persons not parties to the document or their representatives-in-interest may give evidence to show a contemporaneous agreement. Lastly the narrow construction sought to be put on the judgment of the Privy Council in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe Law (3) cannot be supported on its language. The appellant in that case was not a party to the sale impugned, and he sought to have it declared that the sale by the one party to the other was really a mortgage which left intact his right. The Board say, "wherever evidence is tendered as to a transaction with a third party, it is not governed by section 92:" and again, "both grantor and grantee in that document were dealing with the property of an owner who was a third person and the evidence led as to that third party's rights is admissible"—the evidence not being as to his title but to show that the parties meant the document to be a mortgage. We are, therefore, unable to accept this contention and must hold that the evidence is admissible.

The next contention of the appellant was that the lower Appellate Court has made several statements in the course of its judgment which are not supported by any evidence on the record and that it accordingly misdirected and prejudiced its own mind seriously in the consideration of the case. We think there is much force in this contention. In paragraph 4 of his judgment the Subordinate Judge says that the 1st defendant antedated Exhibit IX. Exhibit IX is a receipt executed by Vasudeva Aiyar and signed by him, and the date in it was written with his knowledge and consent by the writer. It is, to say the least, misleading to say that the 1st defendant antedated it. Even accepting the evidence of Vasudeva Aiyar, it only shows (see re-examination) that Exhibit IX was brought into existence in consultation between himself and the 1st defendant in order to get the sale-deed confirmed.

(6) 29 A. 473; A. W. N. (1906) 89; 3 A. L. J. 314.

In paragraph 5 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment, there is even a more serious error. It is there stated that the 1st defendant "was forced to admit that the lands yielded 800 kalams of paddy worth Rs. 1,600 a year." The 1st defendant made no such admission. On the other hand, the evidence let in by him (see defendants' witness No. 5 printed by mistake as defendants' witness 13) was to the effect that Vasudeva Aiyar himself said that the yearly yield was between 100 and 150 kalams (worth Rs. 200 to 300). The 1st defendant admitted that for three years from the date of Exhibit I, that is, till 1909 he allowed his vendor (and maternal uncle) Vasudeva Aiyar to be in possession of the lands and that in those years he obtained only a very small quantity of paddy from Vasudeva Aiyar, who represented to him that the yield was very bad in those years. The learned Subordinate Judge, while conceding that the 1st defendant might allow his uncle to maintain himself out of the income even if the lands had become the property of the 1st defendant, provided the balance of the profits is accounted for to him by Vasudeva Aiyar, argues that as the profits were worth Rs. 1,600 a year and as Vasudeva Aiyar's maintenance could not absorb more than a small fraction of that sum, the 1st defendant would, if Exhibit I was intended to operate as a sale deed, not have allowed Vasudeva Aiyar to be in possession of the lands even during the first three years. As we have pointed out already, the whole foundation for this argument is based upon the error which the Subordinate Judge fell into, namely, that the 1st defendant admitted that the lands yielded Rs. 1,600 income a year.

In paragraph 7 of his judgment the Subordinate Judge misinterprets Exhibit XXV, which is the Police report that a case brought by the 1st defendant was "referred" as technically false, meaning as pointed out in the report itself that the complaint had been made "under a mistake of law or fact." The Subordinate Judge thinks that Exhibit XXV imputed dishonesty to the 1st defendant in making the complaint and that the 1st defendant's conduct in not proceeding further with that complaint was certainly "not the conduct of an honest person." He also ignores the kist receipts produced by the 1st defendant when arriving at the conclusion that even after 1909 and until 1911, the 1st defendant was not in possession.

In paragraph 8 again, he misinterprets Exhibit C (1) as showing that the 1st defendant agreed to give up his claim for Rs. 6,728 consenting to receive Rs. 3,700 and to reconvey the lands, ignoring the fact that some of the lands were under mortgage for Rs. 2,400, which debt had not then been discharged. On this misconstruction again he founds a further argument for his conclusion that Exhibit I was not intended to be a sale

There are some other mistakes in the judgment such as that all the property which Vasudeva Aiyar had on the date of Exhibit I, dated 11th February 1906, were conveyed under it to the 1st defendant. Exhibit XVII series shows that in August and September 1909 (3 years after date of Exhibit I) Vasudeva Aiyar made gifts of certain lands to two of his female relations. No doubt, those documents recite that the lands had been orally gifted away previously, but without a finding that those recitals are true, it is misleading to say that Vasudeva Aiyar owned no lands on the date of Exhibit I, except what he conveyed under it. However, this is a minor matter.

On the whole, we are unable to accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge upon the question whether Exhibit I was or was not intended to pass title as owner to the 1st defendant and whether there was a contemporaneous oral arrangement that it should operate only as a mortgage-deed. We, therefore, remit the case for a fresh finding on that question, having regard to the above observations and also to the sound principle of law that even when it is a third party who lets in proof that the ostensible character of a deed was varied by a contemporaneous oral arrangement, Courts should require very cogent proof before finding in favour of such a variation.

While remitting the case for a finding, we shall transfer the appeal from the file of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam to that of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore, who is requested to submit his finding within 4 weeks of the receipt of the records. It is unnecessary for us to say that we are not entitled to arrive and have not arrived at any finding of our own on the question of fact remitted for fresh finding. Having regard to the very strong language used by the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam in arriving at the finding which we have been unable to accept, it seems to us desirable that another Appellate Court should arrive at a fresh finding, whether it be the same or a different finding. Ten days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDING.—The issue remitted to me for a finding is "Whether Exhibit I was or was not intended to pass title as owner to the 1st defendant and whether there was a contemporaneous oral arrangement that it should operate only as a mortgage-deed?"

* * * * *

56. On a consideration of the whole of the evidence, I am clearly of opinion that there was no outright sale and that Vasudeva Aiyar never intended to part with his ownership finally. I think they made only a temporary or provisional arrangement to be revised at a later period, and that it partakes more of the character of a security to 1st defendant, who in advancing moneys could rely upon the sale executed in his favour than a sale with an agreement to reconvey. Whether Vasudeva Aiyar intended to confirm that sale by a re-adjustment of prices in the future and obtain a reconveyance of such properties as were in excess of the value of the debts discharged by 1st defendant on his behalf, or whether from the beginning the properties were intended to be in 1st defendant's hands only as security for all payments made by him, it is difficult to state definitely. But taking the whole evidence and especially the case put forward by him in his plaint Exhibit XVIII, I incline to think that it was only a transaction of security and that the sale in 1st defendant's name was intended to create a charge upon the properties in 1st defendant's favour. The bad frame of the suit urging extravagant claims and putting forward unfounded assertions might account in some degree for the paucity of full particulars of the actual events. Anyhow, the amount due to the 1st defendant will not be Rs. 6,728, which is covered by Exhibit IX. The amounts covered by the mortgages executed by the 1st defendant over the properties in Exhibit 1 will have to be deducted therefrom and the sum of Rs. 605-14-10 paid by him to Vasudeva Aiyar's wife as per decree Exhibits XXVI series added thereto.

57. This is my finding on the issue referred. I would like to add a word of explanation for dealing with the matter at some length. The case was very fully argued before me in all aspects. As the plaintiff was the respondent before their Lordships, it was open to her to support the decree of the Kumbakonam Sub-Court in appeal upon any ground and it was possible that the respondent's Vakil might again suggest the case before their Lordships of a covinous transaction founded upon the case urged by the respondent in the Court of first instance and I believe also before Mr. Viswanatha Sastriar in the Kumbakonam Sub-Court in appeal.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT. -The finding, though unsatisfactory as based on inferences drawn with the help of weak reasonings and doubtful evidence, is a finding of fact and we are constrained to accept the same in second appeal.

Even accepting the finding, we do not think that this is a case for allowing costs to the plaintiff, as the plaintiff did not admit in her plaint that a charge for 6,728 rupees or any lesser amount was at all claimable by the defendants.

Further, the lower Appellate Court ought to have declared that charge in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (this will be in the proportion of Rs. 1,420-7 0 to Rs. 5,307 9 0 as consented to before us), instead of in favour of the 1st defendant who had parted with his rights in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. With the direction that the parties will bear their respective costs throughout (including the costs in these second appeals) and with the substitution of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for 1st defendant as above noted as the holders of the charge, we dismiss these second appeals in other respects.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1307 OF 1918.

June 20, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

MANMOHAN SINGHA ROY AND OTHERS —PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

BENODE BEHARI DUBEY AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Service tenure—Co-sharer landlord, whether entitled to sue tenant for assessment of fair and equitable rent on failure of service.

In the case of a service tenure created by all the co-sharers in a zemindari not governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a co-sharer landlord is not competent to sue the tenant for assessment of fair and equitable rent payable in respect of his share for failure of service originally performed. [p. 249, col. 1]

Gholam Mohiuddin Hossein v. Khairan, 31 C. 786; 8 C. W. N. 325, relied on.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, dated the 18th of March 1918, affirming the decree of the Munsif, 1st Court at Hooghly, dated the 17th of August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.—The question for decision is whether in the case of a service tenure a co sharer landlord can sue the tenant who has ceased to render any service for assessment of fair and equitable rent. The lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that the suit is barred by the provisions of section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The right to sue for determination of fair and equitable rent is a right conferred on the landlord not by the Bengal Tenancy Act but by the general law of the land. Section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only where the act which the landlord seeks to do is one required or authorized by the Act itself. The case in Gholam Mohiuddin Hossein v. Khairan (1) was a suit for ejectment, and it is no authority for the proposition that a co sharer landlord is not competent to maintain a suit of this nature. See Gholam Mohiuddin Hossein v. Khairan (1). There is absolutely no foundation for the learned Judge's decision that the suit is not maintainable. I rely on Barhamdat Misir v. Krishna Sahoy (2), Khondakar Abdul Hamid v. Mohini Kant Saha Chaudhuri (3), Ramnath Sil v. Siba Sundari Debya (4). Further, apart from cases and rulings it is unjust that the plaintiffs should be debarred from getting a fair and equitable rent from the defendant, who is in collusion with the plaintiffs' co sharers.

Babu Apurba Charan Mukerjee, for the Respondents, was not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order holding that the appellants' suit was not maintainable. The plaintiffs as proprietors of 8 annas share of a superior interest in certain land sued the defendants originally for ejectment, but finally amended their plaint so that the suit was one in which the only relief claimed was an assessment of fair and equitable rent. The plaintiffs' co sharers were joined as co-defendants and the allegation was that the principal defendant was a holder of a service tenure, that he discontinued to serve the plaintiffs and that, therefore, he was liable to pay rent for the land of his holding. Both the lower Courts have relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Gholam Mohiuddin Hossein v. Khairan (1). I am unable to see how the facts of this case can be distinguished from the facts of that case. There it was held, firstly, that the co-sharer landlord was not competent to obtain a partial ejectment of the tenants to the extent of his share on the allegation of facts similar to those made in the present case. On that ground the appeal was dismissed. But it was further remarked that in the case of a service tenure created by all the co-sharers in a Zemindari, not governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a co-sharer landlord is not competent to sue the tenants for fair and equitable rent payable in respect of his share for failure of service originally performed. Though the appeal was not decided on the basis of that finding, I can see no reason for differing from that decision and it is sufficient for the determination of this appeal. My attention has been drawn to several rulings, in which it has been held that a right to assess rent is not a right under the Bengal Tenancy Act but a right under the general law, and it was so held in the decision to which I have referred.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

IMBICHI BEEVI UMMA—DEFENDANT No. 8—APPELLANT

versus

ERANHIPPURATHA RAMAN NAIR AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANTS Nos. 12 TO 15—RESPONDENTS.

Malabar Law—Tavazhi of woman, whether can consist of branches—Gift to wife by one husband, whether enures for benefit of children by another husband—Presumption.

The tavazhi of a woman may consist of two branches, one branch made up of children by one husband and the other branch of children by another husband, and each branch might own separate properties acquired from their respective fathers. In other words, a separate branch of a tavazhi can be established consisting of a woman and her children by one husband to the exclusion of the children by another husband. [p. 251, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 333 of 1917 (Appeal Suit No. 504 of 1917, on the file of the District Court, South Malabar), passed against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Parappanangadi, in Original Suit No. 594 of 1915.

FACTS.—Suit for redemption by plaintiff as Karnavan of his Tarwad. The mortgage was by one K. who was the eldest son of his mother by her second husband, who gave these properties to his wife and his children by her. Plaintiff was a descendant of hers by the 1st husband. The question was whether he was entitled to redeem, or in other words, whether the property belonged solely to the mother and her children by the second husband or whether the children by the 1st husband also were equally entitled so as to constitute plaintiff Karnavan and manager of the whole.

Mr. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar (with him Mr. K. P. Kamakrishna Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The mother and the children by the second husband alone must be taken to form a separate tavazhi so far as these properties at least are concerned. For it is not likely that the donor would have intended that persons, other than his own children, should share in what he was giving. See per Sankaran Nair, J., in Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (1). No doubt tavazhi literally means descent through the mother without reference to the father and so the tavazhi would strictly include children by both husbands. But a gift by a husband to his wife and his children by her is intended to be enjoyed by them only. And they are to enjoy as a tavazhi. Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Haiee (2). The law in Travancore also is the same. See Mr. Joseph's Marumakkathayam Law, page 231, and 2 Travancore Law Journal, page 15, which is on all fours with the present case. See also 5 Travancore Law Report 116 and 22 Travancore Law Journal 239 (F. B.).

Even if the property is gifted directly by the husband, since the donees formed a tavazhi and the property stood in the name of the senior male and the senior female of such tavazhi, the presumption is that it is tavazhi property. See Mari Veetil Chathu Nair v. Mari Veetil Mulamparol Sekaran Nair (3). See also sections 23 and 24 of the Malabar Marriage Act. And further the property has been in the exclusive enjoyment of the tavazhi for long over the statutory period to perfect title by adverse possession. See also Ettakkamana Manholi Govindan Nair v. Amaya Mangalath Puthia Veetil Govindan Nair (4).

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.—The finding is that there was no gift at least directly by the 2nd husband. So the rights of the tavazhi do not arise by virtue of gift. And the ordinary presumption is that when property stands in the name of a junior member it is Tarwad property. See Kuttaseri Eriat Govindan Nair v. Kuttaseri Sankaran Nair (5). And that presumption has not been rebutted in the present case.

Further, how can there be a tavazhi unless it includes all the children by one mother? The alleged donor could as well have expressed any distinction he wanted to make, in the absence of which it must be assumed that it was never his intention to make any difference. See per Sankaran Nair, J., in Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (1).

There can be no adverse possession by one co-owner against another. And so the finding on that question is right.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sues as Karnavan of Eranhipurath Tarwad to recover the plaint properties from the 8th defendant. The plaint property was acquired in the names of Ooli Amma and Kelu Nair, who is her eldest son by her second husband. Ooli Amma married twice and had some children by her first husband Rarappan Nair, who divorced her. She afterwards married Raman Nair, by whom she had a son Kelu Nair and other children.

(5) 2 Ind. Cas. 183; 32 M 351 (F. B.); 6 M. L. T. 106; 19 M. L. J. 350.

The real question for decision is whether the plaint property belonged to Ooli Amma and all her children by both the husbands, or whether it belonged to her and her children by the second husband alone. The main contention for the respondents is that there could be no separate tavazhi consisting of the children by one husband alone. The facts as found are as follows:—The plaint property was acquired in the names of Ooli Amma and Kelu Nair, the son of Raman Nair. The learned Subordinate Judge does not believe plaintiff's evidence that the property was given to Ooli Amma by her first husband Rarappan Nair, and he also finds that it is not proved that it was given to her and her children by her second husband Raman Nair. It is, however, admitted that Raman Nair did give certain properties to his wife and his children by her as is evidenced by Exhibits XVI and XVII, but the plaint property is not included in those documents. We, therefore, see that Ooli Amma had some properties which she got from her husband Raman Nair for herself and his children, as it does not appear that she had any other friends. The presumption would be that any additional property which she obtained was acquired out of the proceeds of the property she so held. The Subordinate Judge merely says that Rarappan Nair might have given something to Ooli Amma. This cannot be treated as a finding, but on the finding that the plaint property is not proved to have been given by Rarappan Nair, we are thrown back on the presumption that the property was acquired with the funds already in Ooli Amma's hands.

There remains the real question for consideration, and that is whether a separate branch of a tavazhi can be established consisting of a woman and her children by one husband to the exclusion of the children by another husband. Where property is given to his family by a father, it is held with all the incidents of Tarwad tenure, Kunhacha Umma v. Kutti Mammi Hajee (2), and this view is based on the presumed intention of the father to benefit his own children. If, therefore, the second husband gives property to his wife and his own children, it is difficult to presume that he intended also to benefit the children by the former husband or even children by a subsequent husband, in the absence of any expression of such intention. No doubt the word tavazhi may be, as suggested by Sankaran Nair, J., derived from tayor (mother) and vazhi (way), and would naturally include all the descendants of that woman. But even though that is the real meaning of tavazhi, it has been held that branches of a Tarwad consisting of persons who have acquired separate property from their father are constituted as tavazhi by virtue of the possession of that property. If, therefore, the property was intended for that man's children alone, there is no reason for adding to the branch which is to enjoy that property the children by another husband. The very fact that these tavazhis are very frequently called puthravakkasam tavazhis leads to the inference that they are not merely descendants of one female but also branches of the family which are benefited by a gift from their father and are thereby constituted as tavazhis. In this view there is no real difficulty in supposing that the tavazhi of a woman could consist of two branches, one branch made up of children by one husband and the other of children by another husband, and each branch might own separate properties obtained from their respective fathers. This has been recognised by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Chakkara Kannan v. Kunhi Pokker (1) and apparently is the view taken in Travancore. No doubt Sakaran Nair, J., in the same case at page 324* suggests that children born by another husband, would benefit in the gift made by the first husband, and he proceeds on the assumption that a tavazhi must consist of a woman and all her children by whomsoever begotten. Srinivasa Iyengar, J., also assumes that a tavazhi must consist of a woman and all her children by the various husbands, but he goes on to say that "it is certainly difficult to presume an intention in the first husband to grant the property to his wife's children by another husband. Such cases are likely to occur very rarely." Neither of these learned Judges has considered the possibility of branches within the tavazhi and as pointed out by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., when there are branches within a Tarwad there is really no reason why there could not be similar branches within the tavazhi. If the possibility of that is conceded, then undoubtedly Ooli Amma and her children by Raman Nair would constitute a separate branch and we think that that was the effect of the gifts in their favour by Raman Nair. If that is so, plaintiff as the Karnavan of the main Tarwad would have no interest in these properties, although he is a descendant of Ooli Amma by Rarappan Nair, and would have no right to interfere with the alienation of the property by members of the branch consisting of the children of Raman Nair.

Apart from this point, there is the question of adverse possession. The plaint property has been dealt with ever since 1875 by the sons of Raman Nair, although at the time these dealings took place there were members of the Tarwad senior to them. In fact at one period Kanaran Nair, son of Ooli Amma by Rarappan Nair, was Karnavan of the Tarwad when the property was dealt with by the children of the other husband, and also later on Benares Govindan Nair was the Karnavan and his claim in respect of other properties of the sub tavazhi was disallowed in a suit brought by him. No doubt the learned Subordinate Judge has found that there was no adverse possession by this tavazhi. But for coming to this conclusion he has relied upon a proposition for which there is apparently no support on the record, for he says that "it is not uncommon in Malabar to take demises in the names of junior members of the Tarwad." This may be correct, but it is not in evidence in this case, and when it is remembered that the demise was taken in the name of a man who was not only a junior member of the main Tarwad but might be also the Karnavan of a branch, the case bears a somewhat different appearance. The delaying of this property by this tavazhi was to the knowledge of the plaintiff's predecessors and apparently of plaintiff himself, and consequently the fact that it has been so dealt with for the last 40 years would constitute adverse possession against the Tarwad of which plaintiff is now the Karnavan.

The appeal must accordingly be allowed and the suit dismissed with 8th defendant's cost throughout.

Appeal allowed.

CURSONDAS DAMODARDAS—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O IX, rr. 8, 9—Dismissal of suit for default—Restoration, application for—Sufficient cause, failure to establish—Inherent power of Court, exercise of—Precedents, value of—Question of fact—Discretion of Court.

Order IX, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal under Order IX, rule 8 of the Code, where the plaintiff satisfies it that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance. This rule, however, does not take away the Court's power to restore the case for any other valid reason. The Court can exercise its inherent jurisdiction for the ends of justice, provided the defendant is amply protected in the matter of costs. [p. 253, col 1.]

The decision of one Judge on the facts before him, that sufficient cause has not been shown for the restoration of a suit, cannot provide a precedent for other Judges on similar applications. [p. 253, col 1.]

On questions of fact or matters of discretion there can be no precedent. Each Judge is entitled to come to the conclusions he thinks right on questions of fact and in matters of discretion. [p. 253, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the following judgment by

PRATT, J.—This a motion by the plaintiff in Suit No. 1664 of 1918 under Order IX, rule 9.

On the suit being called on for hearing on the 7th January, Counsel applied for an adjournment on the ground that the plaintiff had not appeared. Counsel could give no reason for plaintiff's absence and suggested that he might have succumbed to the prevailing epidemic. The adjournment was refused. Counsel asking for an adjournment is not an appearance [Hinga Bibee v. Munna Bibee (1)] and Counsel admitted that he did not appear in the suit.

The suit was accordingly dismissed under Order IX. rule 8.

Plaintiff now prays for restoration on the ground that not expecting the suit to be called on so soon he went to fetch a witness. He says he returned a quarter of an hour after the suit was disposed of.

I do not think this is "sufficient cause" under Order IX, rule 9. The plaintiff knew the suit was on the board for the day and took the risk of its not being called on in his absence. I feel bound by the precedent in this Court of the very similar case: Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein Vazeer (2).

If the plaintiff had moved the Court the same day or asked me to note his presence in Court that day, I might have considered whether there was a case for an order under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, but he did not do so.

I dismiss the motion with costs.

Mr. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bahadurji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This suit was called on for hearing on the 7th of January 1919, when Counsel, who had been instructed on behalf of the plaintiff, finding that his client was not in Court to give evidence, asked for an adjournment. The defendant appeared and opposed the application, which was refused, and thereafter the suit was dismissed under Order IX, rule 8. The plaintiff then asked for the restoration of the suit on the grounds mentioned in his affidavit of the 21st of January 1919. In paragraph 4 he said:

"I say that I could not attend the Court in time, as I had been that morning to the firm of Messrs. Sadasuk Gambhirchand to bring with me to Court Mr. Revamal Kasturchand, the Moonim of the said firm, who is my principal witness in this suit. I had been to the said firm to fetch the Moonim at about 11 A. M. but was told that the Moonim was out and would soon return. As I was told that he would soon return I waited for him. The said Moonim returned about 12-30 noon and soon after he returned, I came with him to the Court but I found that the suit was called on and dismissed. As the suit was fourteenth on the Board List for that day, I did not expect it to be called on before 1 P. M."

The learned Judge did not think that the facts alleged in that affidavit provided sufficient cause under Order IX, rule 9, (1) 31 C. 150; 8 C. W. N. 97.

(2) 13 B. 12; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 8.

and he said he was bound by the precedent in the case of Manilal Dhunji v. Gulam Husein Vazeer (2). But it is difficult to see how a decision of one Judge on the facts before him, that sufficient cause has not been shown for the restoration of a suit, can provide a precedent for other Judges on similar applications. On questions of fact or matters of discretion there can be no precedent. Each Judge is entitled to come to the conclusion he thinks right on questions of fact and in matters of discretion. Apart from that I agree with the remarks of the learned Judges in Lalta Prasad v. Ram Karan (3). Their Lordships say:

"On appeal, we are asked to hold that there was sufficient cause. While we think that it might be difficult to hold that there was sufficient cause in view of the fact that the case was actually called and repeatedly called for 20 minutes in the manner in which cases are called in Mofussil Courts both within the Court room and outside the Court room, so that persons in attendance in the Court compound were sure to hear, we are of opinion that the case is one of those in which the Court may exercise its inherent powers of passing orders necessary for the ends of justice. Nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure can limit or otherwise affect such powers under which, in our opinion, a Court can restore such a case as this on grounds other than sufficient cause for non-appearance. Order IX, rule 9, makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal under Order IX, rule 8, where the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for non appearance. It, however, cannot take away the Court's power to restore the case for any other valid reason."

I am of opinion that this is a case in which, whether there was sufficient cause or not, we should exercise the inherent jurisdiction of the Court for the ends of justice, provided the defendants are amply protected in the matter of costs.

The plaintiff must pay the costs of the adjournment and any costs caused to the defendants by his non-appearance, including the costs of his application of the 23rd of January 1919. Those must be paid before the suit can be restored. Then he must deposit Rs. 1,000 for the security of defendants' costs, and on those costs being paid and the security given the suit must be restored.

The costs of this appeal to be costs in the cause.

The security to be furnished within three weeks.

HEATON, J.—I concur.

Appeal allowed.

MURUKONDA LAKSHMIDEVI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Gift to female—Presumption—Construction of document—Absolute words of conveyance, effect of—Deed purporting to be sale in consideration of unpaid marriage present.

Where the words of a gift are capable of conferring an absolute estate, the fact that the donee is a Hindu female will not detract from the grant. It is not necessary that there should be express words to the effect that no restriction is placed on the donee's enjoyment or words expressly conferring rights of alienation. It is enough if, from the whole tenor of the document, it can be gathered that the donor intended that the donee should enjoy the property absolutely. The presumption in favour of a limited grant arises only in the absence of such an intention [p 255, col 2.]

Manika Mudali v. Muthachi Kavandan, 30 Ind. Cas. 685; 18 M. L. T. 346: 2 L. W. 857, dissented from.

Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram, 2 I. A. 7; 14 B. L. R. 226 (P. C.); 22 W. R. 309; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 505: 3 Suth. P. C. J. 47, explained.

A, a Hindu, by deed of sale conveyed to his wife, M., certain immoveable property, in consideration of a sum of money given on the occasion of his marriage for jewellery, but which sum was spent for the family maintenance. M. was put in possession with directions to cultivate the lands, enjoy them and pay the kist thereon Some years after A.'s death M. executed a deed of gift of the property in favour of her daughter, and the present suit was brought by the reversioners of A. for a declaration that the gift would not affect their reversionary interest It was contended that the conveyance to M. was not of an absolute estate, but only of an estate to be enjoyed for her lifetime, and, therefore, she was not competent to make the gift:

Held, that the plaintiffs' suit must fail; the facts that the conveyance to M. was by means of a deed of sale and that the transferee was given the same rights as the transferor possessed himself, viz, the right of one possessing an absolute estate, were strong circumstances indicating that the intention was to pass an absolute estate and the gift, therefore, in favour of the daughter was not open to attack. [p. 255, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in Original Suit No. 94 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. V. Lakshminarayana, for the Appellant.—The 1st defendant took only a life-interest in the so called sale to her by her husband and she could not convey a larger interest to the 2nd defendant. There is a general presumption in favour of limited grants to Hindu women. The Privy Council have laid down in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) that gifts to females should be construed in accordance with the notions and wishes of the Hindus in regard to the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of their families. Exhibit A is virtually a deed of gift and does not contain express words of alienation by the donee.

Mr. T. Ethiraja Mudaliar, for the Respondents.—There is no general presumption of law in favour of limited grants. It is only when the intention of the donor is not fairly clear from the terms of the document that the presumption can be resorted to. In this case there is consideration for the transfer, the transferor's interest is conveyed and there is a general direction to the transferee to enjoy the lands. It is clear that 1st defendant took an absolute estate.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—This is a suit to obtain a declaration that the gift deed, Exhibit C, dated 22nd June 1917, which was executed by the plaintiff's step-mother, the 1st defendent, in favour of her daughter, the 2nd defendant, is not binding on the plaintiff's reversionary interest.

It appears that in 1890 the plaintiff and his father, Lakshmanna, became divided. Shortly afterwards in the same year the father executed a document in the form of a sale-deed conveying certain immoveable property in favour of his wife. He died in 1900, and in 1917 the 1st defendant transferred her interest in this property by gift to her daughter by a document which is now attacked as being one not binding on the plaintiff. If the first defendant acquired an absolute right of disposal over the suit property, it follows that the gift in favour of the 2nd defendant will not be open to attack in this form from the plaintiff.

In a previous suit—Original Suit No 814 of 1907 on the file of the Bapatla Munsif's Court—it was decided that the sale by Lakshmanna in favour of his wife had no consideration but that it was not a sham transaction. The question we have to consider is whether by this document (Exhibit A) an absolute estate was conveyed to the 1st defendant or only an estate to be enjoyed for her lifetime. The document recites that as Rs. 200 were given for jewels at the time of the donee's (1st defendant's) marriage and as this sum was spent for the family maintenance, the donor discharges his debt, being unable to pay it in any other manner, by selling the property specified in the deed with the executant's right thereto. He adds that he puts the transferee in possession of this property and he directs that she should cultivate the lands, enjoy them and pay the kist thereon. Now in my opinion the fact that this document was executed in the form of a sale-deed is a strong circumstance to show that the transaction was intended to be an absolute one and not to convey a mere life-interest for the transferee's life, as that would not ordinarily be the estate that a sale-deed would transfer without anything being said to the contrary. There is also the fact that the executant says that he conveys the property with his own right thereto, i. e., that he gives the transferee the same right as he possesses himself, which was the right of one possessing an absolute estate.

We have been referred to Seshayya v.

(1) 2 I. A. 7; 14 B. L. R. 226; 22 W. R. 409; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 405; 3 Suth. P. C. J. 43 (P. C).

Narasamma (2) and other decisions, in which it has been held that in the case of a gift to a Hindu female we must infer an intention of the donor to act in accordance with the notions and wishes of Hindus regarding the devolution and enjoyment of property among the members of their families. That was the effect of the decision of the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1). That decision has been subsequently considered in several recent cases in this Court, including Appeal No. 1 of 1918 [Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (3)], Second Appeal No. 2018 of 1917 [Muthuvenkatanarayanan v. Athipandurenga Naidu (4)] and Second Appeal No. 2298 of 1917. In Gomattam Ramanuja Aiyangar v. Satagopachar (5) Seshagiri Aiyar, J., stated his opinion to be that where the words of a gift are capable of conferring an absolute estate on a person, the fact that the person is a female will not detract from the grant.

Similarly in Second Appeal No. 2018 of 1917, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., points out that the Privy Council decision in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) "should not be taken as laying down the broad proposition that a gift to a Hindu female (and especially to a wife or widow by her husband) should be construed with a prejudice in favour of the view that only a life-interest was intended." The learned Judge said that, in his opinion, no such rule of law should be deduced from the Privy Council decision. In this case even if there were such a general presumption against wives and other female relatives taking more than a life-interest in property, we have here sufficient indication in the document itself that the donor's intention was to pass an absolute interest. I am, therefore, of opinion that the case was rightly decided in the lower Court and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother and his construction of the deed executed by the 1st defendant's husband in her favour.

Having regard to the attendant circumstances which have been pointed out by my learned brother and the terms of the document, I am of opinion that the intention of the donor was to confer on the 1st defendant an absolute estate in the property. The main argument, so far as I can gather, of the appellant is that the document (Exhibit A) should be construed as a deed of gift and as it does not contain express words empowering the donee to alienate the property, it must be assumed that she had only a life estate. There can be no doubt that the observations in some of the earlier decisions of this Court support the view that, in the absence of express words empowering a widow or a limited owner to alienate the property, only a life interest is intended to be created. The later decisions of this Court, however, place a more liberal construction on documents executed in favour of persons who would get only a limited estate under the Hindu Law but for the deed of gift in their favour. A distinction has been drawn between cases where a gift is made to a widow or daughter who but for the gift would be heirs and cases of gifts to females not heirs. So far as the latter are concerned, there is no rule of law which constrains us to hold that in construing gifts in their favour we must start with a presumption that the donor gave property to them with the intention of giving them only a limited interest. The case, however, is different when we find gifts in favour of persons who would, under the Hindu Law, be heirs of the donor or the testator and where no words are used expressly giving them the right to alienate and no indication is given as to the nature of the estate conferred. I do not think there should be express words in a gift or Will to the effect that there should be no restriction placed on their enjoyment or words expressly conferring rights of alienation, if from the whole tenor of the document it can be gathered that the donor or the testator intended that the donee should enjoy the property absolutely. I would respectfully disagree with the view taken in Manika Mudali v. Muthachi Kavandan (6). I think the cases referred to by my learned brother, Appeal No. 1 of 1918 [Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (3)], Second Appeal No. 2018 of 1917 [Muthuvenkatanarayanan v. Athipandurenga Naidu (4)] and Second Appeal No. 2298 of 1917 are clearly in favour of the view that it is not necessary that in addition to the words indicative of the intention of the donor, the document should contain express powers of alienation. Where, however, a document contains no words indicating the intention of the donor one way or the other and where, from the surrounding circumstances, it is difficult to gather what his intention was, I think the decisions of the Privy Council in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shawukram (1) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (7) are clear and point to the duty of the Court to construe the document in the light of "what are known to be the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus with respect to the devolution of property." The decision their Lordships of the Privy Council in Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dossee (7) is, I think, quite clear on this point and leaves no room for doubt as to what the rule of construction ought to be in such cases.

Reference was made to section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is to the same effect as section 82 of the Indian Succession Act. Section 82 of the Indian Succession Act declares that "where property is bequeathed to any person, he is entitled to the whole interest of the testator therein, unless it appears from the Will that only a restricted interest was intended for him," and section 8 of the Transfer of Property Act says: "Unless a different intention is expressed or necessarily implied, a transfer of property passes forthwith to the transferee all the interest which the transferor is then capable of passing in the property, and in the legal incidents thereof." In Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (7) section 82 of the Indian Succession Act was strongly relied upon as showing that an absolute interest passed but their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that if, under the terms of the Will, there was an indication to limit the estate section 82 would have no application, and their Lordships came to the conclusion that there was an intention to limit the estate because of the notions which a Hindu would have in giving property to female relations.

If there is a rule of Hindu Law as regards the construction of gifts, section 2 of the Transfer of Property Act would prevent section 8 from being given full effect to. Section 2 provides: "Nothing in the Second Chapter of this Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist Law." I am, therefore, of opinion that in cases of gifts by a person to his widow or daughter or other persons, who would under the Hindu Law get only a limited estate, the presumption which the Privy Council pointed out as applicable in Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1) and Radha Prasad Mullick v. Ranee Mani Dassee (7), would prevent the Court from drawing any inference that the whole estate passed where there are no words in the Will which show that an absolute estate was intended to be conferred. But in construing gifts I think that where there are words which would indicate an intention to the contrary, they should be given a liberal interpretation and an absolute estate should not be cut down because of any presumption. It is not necessary that there should be express words giving powers of alienation to confer an absolute estate. In my opinion the plaintiff has failed to prove that the 1st defendant has only a limited estate in the property and she was, therefore, fully competent to convey the property to her daughter and the plaintiff has no right to question the alienation.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 149—Appeal—Insufficient Court-fee on memorandum of appeal—Permission to make up deficiency, when to granted—Discretion of Court.

Where insufficient Court-fee has been paid on a memorandum of appeal, the Court will not in its discretion under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, allow the deficiency to be made up on the day of the hearing, unless it is satisfied that some grounds exist for the exercise of its discretion

Where, therefore, a memorandum of appeal had been insufficiently stamped and it appeared that in the lower Court also the plaint was insufficiently stamped but upon objection being taken Court-fees were realized ad valorem upon the market-value of the land in suit:

Held, that under the circumstances the mistake was not a bona fide one and did not deserve the exercise of the discretion vested in the Court under section 149, Civil Procedure Code.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 10th November 1914, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i Hussain, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi, the Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this and in the connected Appeals Nos. 286 and 287 of 1915 Pandit Sheo Narain on behalf of Amar Singh, the chief defendant respondent, raises the preliminary objection that the memoranda of appeal are insufficiently stamped and asks that the appeals should, therefore, be dismissed. He points out that the stamps on these appeals are Rs. 195, 54-12 and 40 respectively, whereas they should be Rs. ,015, 385 and 285 respectively. In the lower Court the plaints also were insufficiently stamped and upon objection being taken, Court-fees were realized ad valorem upon the market-value of the land in suit in each case. The propriety of the lower Court's order in this respect has never been and is not now questioned. Counsel for the appellants say that they are now prepared to pay up the deficient amount of Court fees and ask that the Court should exercise its discretion under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and allow the balance to be now paid. All the appeals were filed by Mr. Asquith, Pleader, and the contention on behalf of the appellants is that the mistake was his and that they are not to blame. Pandit Sheo Narain, however, urges that the plaintiffs, having had to make up the deficiency of Court-fees in the lower Court, knew perfectly well how much they had to pay upon the memoranda of appeal and that their Pleader also must have known, as he filed copies of the decrees which shewed the amount of Court-fees upon the plaints. He urges that there was gross negligence both on the part of the appellants and on that of their Pleader. He cites the case reported as Saidunnessa v. Tejendra Chandra Dhar (1). In that case where insufficient Court-fee had been paid on a memorandum of appeal, it was held that the Court would not in its discretion under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, allow the deficiency to be made up on the day of the hearing, unless it was satisfied that some grounds existed for the exercise of its discretion. Of these grounds the principal one is that a bona fide mistake was made. It is contended by Pandit Sheo Narain that in the present case no bona fide mistake at all was made. For the appellants Sahibji v. Piru (2) is cited, but in that case the Court was satisfied that the deficiency in the Court-fee was due to a bona fide mistake on the part of the appellant's Pleader. The case is distinguishable from the present one. In our opinion Saidunnessa v Tejendra Chandra Dhar (1) cited by Pandit Sheo Narain is in point and after considering all the circumstances of the case, we do not think that we should exercise the discretion vested in us under section 149, Civil Procedure Code.

We accordingly dismiss the appeals with costs.

The dismissal of an application for the sale of property attached in execution of a decree does not in any way affect the continuance of the attachment. [p. 259, col. 2]

Where there is a subsisting attachment and a Court proceeds to sell the property in pursuance of that attachment, it would not be acting without jurisdiction if no notice is given of the application for an order for sale. The absence of notice is a mere irregularity and does not render the sale null and void. [p. 260, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated 15th April 1918, in Appeal Suit No. 92 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Cocanada, in Original Suit No. 106 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. V. Ramesam and U. Rama Rao, for the Appellant.—No notice is required on an application for sale when a valid attachment has been made. For the essential application in execution is the one for attachment, as execution is started by it; all further applications are only secondary. Compare sections 235, 245 and 248 of the Code of 1882. While the Code provides for notice in cases of attachment, it is silent on the point when dealing with sales. In this Court, the Rules of Practice have been expressly amended providing for a notice before proclamation is drafted. The general rule as to notice is laid down in Syam Mandal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (1), Subba Chariar v. Muthuveeram Pillai (2) clearly says that an application like the one in question does not initiate any new execution. See also Venkataramanamma v. Purushottam (3). Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (4) is exactly in point but it is not followed in this Court.

[ABDUR RAHIM, J.—What do you say is the reason for the amendment of the Rules of Practice? What, if no notice be given?]

Some inaccuracies may creep into the proclamation for sale and may furnish ground for setting it aside.

[Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.—The attachment has ceased, because a prior application in execution was dismissed. See Exhibit H.]

The attachment does not cease. That has always been held to be the law under the old Code. I. L. R. XXXI Madras and other cases. The new Code, Order XXI, rule 57, expressly provides that the attachment shall cease. Section 243 does not, therefore, apply to the present case.

See also Malharjan v. Narhari (5), Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (6), Ambica Pershad Singh v. Surdhari Lal (7), Paroosh Ram Das v. Kali Puddo Banerjee (8), Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (9), Bommarazu Venkata Perumal v. Subramanya Nayani Varu (10).

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.—An application for sale is an independent application in execution and so notice is necessary.

The attachment does not continue. For whether it continues or not is a question of intention.

[BAKEWELL, J.—There is nothing in the old Code to say that you are bound to apply for sale at all.]

Even as regards the preparation of the proclamations I had no notice. Section 248 contemplates personal service of notice.

See Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (6), Gopal Chunder Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi (11), Sahdeo Pandey v. Ghasiram Gyawal (12).

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The whole question in this appeal is whether the suit to set aside the sale held on 29th April 1899 is barred by limitation. The suit was instituted about 15 years from the date of the sale and at the date of the sale, the father of the plaintiff was living. Therefore, the suit will be barred unless the case be treated as a case where the sale is to be regarded as null and void. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the sale was void inasmuch as no notice had been issued under section 248 of the old Civil Procedure Code. That section says that the Court shall issue a notice to the party against whom execution is applied for, requiring him to show cause, within a period to be fixed by the Court, why the decree should not be executed against him (a) if more than one year has elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for its execution, or (b) if the enforcement of the decree be applied for against the legal representatives of a party to the suit in which the decree was made. The second clause has no application and the question is whether under the circumstances notice had to be issued under clause (a) and if so, whether the non-issue of notice made the entire proceedings null and void. It is somewhat strange that there is no authority bearing directly upon the point which arises in this connection. Here it appears that attachment was ordered on 1st December 1894 on the application made within one year of the date of the decree. But then this application, which apparently asked not merely for attachment but also for sale, was dismissed on 13th January 1895 for want of further prosecution. But it cannot be doubted that the dismissal of the application did not in any way affect the continuance of the attachment, and we must take it that the attachment subsisted until the date of the sale. After the first application Exhibit H, several other applications were made, Exhibit H, series. The next two applications after Exhibit H were made within one year of the decree, and admittedly no notice is required to be given of those applications under section 248. But the 4th application, Exhibit H 3, was made more than a year after the decree and no notice was issued or served upon the judgment-debtor. It would appear from the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the judgment-debtor had left his village and was living at Vijianagaram and, as often happens in such cases, notice was not properly served. So we may take it that the judgment-debtor did not receive any notice of the application for execution made subsequent to the attachment. But the attachment subsisted and the property was sold under the provisions of section 254 of the old Civil Procedure Code, which says that "any Court may order that any property which has been attached, or such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree, shall be sold, and that the proceeds of such sale, or a sufficient portion thereof, shall be paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same." It may be observed that this section does not speak of any notice being given to the judgment-debtor before the property is actually sold. But if an application comes within the purview of section 248, notice has undoubtedly to be given to the judgment-debtor in the terms of that section, that is, requiring him to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. Much reliance has been placed on behalf of the respondent on a ruling of the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (6). But in that case the property of the judgment-debtor had become vested in the Official Assignee after the attachment but before the sale. Their Lordships found upon the facts that the Official Assignee had not been properly brought before the Court and no order binding on him had been obtained, and it was upon that ground that they held that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property so as to bind the Official Assignee. The property having vested in the Official Assignee, it was necessary that he should be properly before the Court, otherwise an order for sale would not bind him so as to affect the rights of other creditors. That comes clearly under clause (b) of section 248. Their Lordships do not lay down that the absence of notice in any other case coming under section 248 would make the proceedings in execution null and void, being held without jurisdiction. The ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Syam Mandal v. Sati Nath Banerjee (1) by Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., has also been relied on before us. The learned Judges, however, do not appear to have noticed that in the Privy Council case the Official Assignee in whom the insolvent judgment-debtor's property had vested was not properly before the Court, while in the case they had to deal with the proper parties were apparently represented in the proceedings. Further, it was not a case where there was a subsisting attachment. It has been repeatedly pointed out that there is a distinction in law between an application for execution and an application for taking a step-in-aid of execution [Venkataramanamma v. Purushottam (3) and Subba Chariar v. Muthuveeram Pillai (2)]. Here the object of the application made after the attachment was to take a step in furtherance of an execution already initiated and even if we assume that such an application should comply with the provisions of section 235 of the old Civil Procedure Code, the further question remains whether failure to give notice of an application, made in order to bring the property to sale after attachment, goes to the root of jurisdiction of the executing Court or is merely an irregularity making the sale liable to be set aside under section 311 of the old Civil Procedure Code. It seems to us difficult to hold when there is a subsisting attachment that a Court proceeding to sell the property in pursuance of that attachment would be acting without jurisdiction, if no notice was given of the application for an order for sale when the property has been attached in accordance with law. It is not contended that the property in dispute was not so attached in this case. It may be presumed that the judgment debtor knew of the attachment, and as he was properly before the Court in the execution proceedings, the absence of notice of any further application can at the worst amount only to an irregularity. It seems to us, therefore, that the sale in this case cannot be said to be null and void.

Then the learned Pleader for the judgment-debtor further argued that this is a case of fraud and, therefore, the suit would be in time as the plaintiff came within three years of the date when the fraud came to his knowledge. No such case was really sought to be made in the Court of trial. Issue No. 2 does not raise any question of fraud and the plaint, so far as we can judge from the summary of it, does not contain any specific allegations of fraud. The Subordinate Judge, no doubt, in one or two places in his judgment says that the judgment-creditor acted fraudulently in not serving the judgment-debtor with notice. But in this he seems to have gone further than the issues properly raised in the case. As the sale was not void and as there was no case of fraud, the suit is clearly barred as it was instituted 15 years after the date of the sale which, as already mentioned, took place in the lifetime of the plaintiff's father.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

R. had two sons S. and I. S. had two sons, defendants Nos. 9 and 10, and I had two sons, defendants Nos. 11 and 12. R devised his properties to his four grandsons in equal shares. Plaintiffs obtained a settlement of an 8-annas share in the tenure from defendants Nos. 9 and 10. Subsequently in execution of a money decree against S. and I. the whole tenure was sold after the claims preferred by the defendants Nos. 9 to 12 were rejected. No suit was brought to set aside the order in the claim case. In a suit by the plaintiffs, who were not parties to the claim case, for a declaration of their occupancy right in the 8-annas share of the disputed property:

Held, (1) that defendants Nos. 9 and 10 were, as co-sharer landlords, entitled to make a settlement proportionate to their share; [p. 262, col. 1.]

(2) that though the order in the claim case and Article 11, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, were a bar to a suit by the defendants Nos. 9 and 10, the plaintiffs in the present case were entitled to prove that at the time of the settlement defendants Nos. 9 to 12 had a good title to the interest claimed by them; [p. 262, col. 1.]

(3) that Article 11 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act could have no application to the present suit, as the plaintiffs were no parties to the claim case. [p. 262, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Tipperah, dated the 19th January 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court at Brahmanbaria, dated the 11th January 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babu Gopal Chandra Das), for the Appellants.—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the appellants. The appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiffs' 8-annas ryoti right to a plot of land and recovery of joint possession with defendants Nos. 1—8. The plaintiffs' allegation was that defendants Nos. 9—12 settled 8annas with the plaintiffs in 1314, since when they had been in possession till 1321, when the defendants brought a section 9 case against them, which was decreed. Hence the suit. Our case was that the original tenant's son executed a Kobala for the entire ryoti interest in our favour and that he has been recognised by the landlord and has been in possession. The plaintiffs having dispossessed him, the section 9 case was brought. The first Court dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court decreed it.

My points are:—(1) That by the alleged settlement of the 8 annas from defendant No. 9, the plaintiffs could not and did not acquire any title under the law. See Kader Bakhsh v. Ram Manikya Das (1). (2) In view of the fact that no suit was brought by defendants Nos. 9 and 10 to set aside the order in the claim case, they had no subsisting title at the time of the suit. Order XXI, rule 63, Civil Procedure Code, is clearly in my favour. They ought to have brought a fresh suit and until this is done, the order in the claim case is conclusive. (3) In any view of the case the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 having effected a compromise giving them a title only to a 4-annas share, they can have no right to the whole land.

Babu Gobinda Chandra De Roy (with him Babu Monomohan Banerjee), for the Respondents.—It was not shown before the lower Appellate Court how title was extinguished. The first point was not formulated in the Court below Supposing Article 91 of the Limitation Act governs the case, my learned friend's argument is infructuous. The execution proceedings were against the sons of Ram Gopal. The execution sale is a nullity, because the property was Ram Gopal's. As regards the other point, two of the grandsons of Ram Gopal settled the properties with me. It does not stand to reason that I should be no ryot because all the co-sharers did not join in settling the land.

Dr. Basak replied briefly.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for declaration of their occupancy right in 8-annas share of a certain piece of land and for joint possession thereof with defendants Nos. 1 to 8.

It is found that the land in suit originally belonged to one Ram Gopal. Ram Gopal died leaving two sons Sarat Chandra and Ishan Chandra Sarat Chandra had two sons, Mohim defendant No. 9 and Sris defendant No. 10. Ishan had also two sons, Kailash defendant No. 11 and Nibaran defendant No 12. Ram Gopal left a Will and by that Will his property descended not to his sons but to his grandsons in equal shares. In May 1907 the plaintiffs obtained settlement of the 8 annas interest from the two grandsons of Ram Gopal defendant Nos. 9 and 10. About this time a money decree was obtained against the two sons, Sarat and Ishan. In execution of that decree the tenure which had belonged to Ram Gopal was attached as belonging to his sons, and his grandsons preferred a claim which was rejected. The whole tenure was sold on the 20th August 1908 and purchased by the defendant No. 11. No suit was brought to set aside the order in the claim case. Subsequent to the auction sale defendants Nos. 1 to 8 obtained a raiyati settlement from the defendants Nos. 11 and 12. The suit brought by the plaintiffs was dismissed in the Court of first instance, but has been decreed in the lower Appellate Court.

Three points have been argued in second appeal. The first is that the settlement by undivided 8-annas landlords cannot give the plaintiff any title. In support of this contention reliance is placed on an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 3402 of 1910 [Kader Bakhsh v. Ram Maniyar Das (1)] decided by a Bench of this Court on the 24th February 1913. That decision does not support the appellants' contention. In that case settlement was made by a person claiming the right to make settlement of a share in the land in which he had in fact no such right. The settlement was made in good faith and it was held that as the settlement was made by an undivided co sharer landlord, the principle of Binad Lal Pakrashi v. Kalu Pramanik (2) could not apply. It was not held in that case that a person who really had the right of a co sharer landlord could create no rights in a tenant with whom he made settlement proportionate to his interest.

The next point taken is that as no suit was brought by the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 to set aside the order rejecting their claim in the execution case, they had no subsisting title to the land at the time of this suit. But though this order in the claim case and the provisions of Article 11, Schedule I to the Limitation Act, would bar a suit by defendants Nos. 9 and 10, I see no reason why the plaintiffs in the present suit should not be allowed to prove that at the time the settlement was made with them the plaintiffs had a good title. They were no parties to the claim case and the provisions of Article 11 cannot apply to this suit. They have been able to show to the satisfaction of the lower Appellate Court, which is the final Court of fact, that when the settlement was made these defendants had a good title to the interest they claimed. The effect of failing in the claim case and omitting to sue within the time of limitation may deprive these defendants of their former title, but it cannot take away the right previously created by them in favour of the plaintiffs.

The last point urged is that on the case made, the defendants Nos. 9 and 10 after the failure of their claim case effected a compromise with defendants Nos. 11 and 12 and were content to accept 4 annas share only in settlement of their dispute and that consequently the plaintiffs at the most can only claim 4-annas share. This contention fails on the same ground as I hold the second contention fails, that is to say, the interest of the plaintiffs was not affected by the subsequent conduct of their lessor.

These are the only three points taken in this appeal; and I accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Malabar Law—Tarwad, incidents of- Karnavan, right of, to carry on trade out of tarwad assets—Trade carried on by member Right of succession by tarwad—Continuance of trade by karnavan—Liability of tarwad for debts contracted in course of trade—Malabar Wills Act (Mad. V of 1898*), s.* 9—Validity of oral bequests.

The pursuit of trade does not come within the ordinary powers of a Malabar karnavan, nor is trade the chief occupation or kolachar of the Nairs or Moplahs of Malabar. [p. 265, col 2; p 269, col. 1.]

The members of a tarwad are liable for debts contracted by the karnavan in the course of a trade carried on by him, if it is proved either that the business was a family business or that the members consented to the trade being carried on for and on behalf of the family. [p. 267, col. 2.]

Though it is the exception and not the rule to find a karnavan conducting a trade on behalf of the tarwad, any profit that might be made by an individual by trading would, on his death, become part of the tarwad assets in the absence of a valid bequest by the deceased. [p. 264, col. 1.]

There is no presumption of law that properties acquired by one member of a tarwad in his own name belong to the tarwad and that is a matter which must be proved like any other question of fact. [p. 269, col. 1.]

The fact that the male members of a tarwad habitually pursue trade as their occupation would not in itself make the trade which an individual member carries on on his own account and which, on his death, is inherited by the tarwad, a family concern, unless the tarwad inheriting the assets of the deceased member's trade can be held to have continued it as the business of the tarwad through its karnavan. [p. 266, col. 2.]

Under section 9 of the Malabar Wills Act all Wills, whether relating to immoveable property or not, must be in writing Oral bequests are invalid. [p. 264, col 2; p. 270. cols. 1 & 2.]

Incidents of a Malabar tarwad discussed.

Appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, North Malabar at Tellicherry, in Original Suits Nos. 29, 37, 2, 25 and 43 of 1917 and 15 of 1914, respectively.

Messrs. K. P. M. Menon, B. Pocher and K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The main question in these appeals is as to the liability of the Kochipalli Tarwad, of which the 1st defendant Kochipalli Ussain Kunyi Haji is the Karnavan, for debts incurred on hundis drawn in the course of a trade which he carried on along with Kotti Kollone Muhammad Kunhi alias Mamu Haji, the 2nd defendant in Original Suit No. 15 of 1914 (Appeal No. 417 of 1917), now deceased and represented in the suits subsequently filed by the present Karnavan of the Kotti Kollone Tarwad, Kotti Kollone Pallikunyi. The claim against the latter Tarwad has not been pressed.

The business was conducted in the firm name of "Kochipalli Ussain Kunyi Haji Muhammad Kunyi", the names of the two defendants above mentioned, and the hundis were signed in the name of the firm. As found by the Subordinate Judge, trade is the chief occupation of the male members of this Tarwad as it is, I may observe, of many Moplas, and the properties belonging to it were acquired by Kunyi Kuttali Haji, who was Karnavan until 1886, and by Bachikutty, who succeeded him in Karnavanship and held the position till his death in 1908 when he was succeeded by the 1st defendant. Kunyi Kuttiali Haji carried on his business in partnership at first with a stranger and then he and his younger brother Hussain Kunyi bought up that partner's share and Hussain Kunyi became a partner with Kunyi Kuttiali Haji and continued to be so until their business collapsed in 1901. Hussain Kunyi was not at the time the next in succession to Kunyi Kuttiali Haji but was only a junior Anandravan, the senior Anandravan being Bachikutty. That the business of Kunyi Kuttiali Haji and Hussain Kunyi did not belong to the Tarwad but belonged to them personally cannot be doubted and has not been seriously, disputed before us. It is sufficient in this connection to refer to the proceedings in Original Suit No. 485 of 1903, which was a suit instituted by Bachikutty claiming the shop in which the trade was conducted as belonging solely to Kunyi Kuttiali and that on his death it lapsed to the Tarwad. It was never contended that the shop belonged to the Kochipalli Tarwad. The other evidence in the case also amply bears out that the business which Kuttiali Haji carried on did not belong to the Tarwad. It is settled law that the self acquisitions of a member of a Tarwad fall at his death to be inherited by the Tarwad or, otherwise expressed, lapse to it. [See the Full Bench decision in Govindan Nair v. Sankaran Nair (1).]

Bachikutty during the lifetime of the then Karnavan, Kunyi Kuttiali, had a separate business of his own and apparently in his own name, since 1878. It is not seriously contended before us that that business belonged to the Tarwad and it could hardly have been so contended, considering that Bachikutty being an

(1) 2 Ind. Cas. 183; 32 M. 351; 19 M. L. J. 350; 6 M. L. T. 106 (B.)

Anandravan, he would not have the authority to carry on any trade on behalf of the Tarwad. When he died, all his properties including the assets of the business were inherited by the Kochipalli Tarwad of which he was a member. It may be taken to be proved that the 1st defendant, who became the Karnavan on Bachikutty's death, continued Bachikutty's trade along with Bachikutty's son the 2nd defendant, who, as already stated, is a member of a different family. This is the finding of the Subordinate Judge and it is amply supported by the evidence and the facts of the case. The 1st and the 2nd defendants purported to have acquired Bachikutty's business under an oral bequest from Bachikutty, and these two persons obtained a succession certificate to collect the debts due to Bachikutty. In that petition, Exhibit U, they alleged that "the deceased made a verbal Will on the 22nd of April 1908 (i.e, shortly before his death) that the outstandings due to him should be collected by the 1st petitioner, the direct Anandravan of the deceased and the present Karnavan of the Tarwad (meaning the 1st defendant), and the 2nd petitioner, the son of the deceased, and that the business of the deceased should be conducted jointly by the two petitioners together". It does not appear that there was any opposition on behalf of any of the members of the Kochipalli Tarwad to the petition; and on the strength of the alleged Will and the certificate so obtained the 1st and 2nd defendants, members of the two different Tarwads, continued to carry on Bachikutty's trade. The debts now in question were incurred in the course of that business by the first two defendants, for it is proved that when Bachikutty died he left no debts.

In the absence of a valid bequest the trade assets, including the outstandings and the goodwill, if any, would be inherited by the Tarwad and there can be little doubt that the alleged oral Will of Bachikutty, if true, is not valid. The provisions of the Malabar Wills Act, V of 1898, are, to my mind, clear on the point. Section 9 of that Act says, "All Wills and codicils made on or after the date of the commencement of this Act within the Presidency of Madras, and all such Wills and codicils made outside the said Presidency, so far as they relate to immoveable property situated within the said Presidency, must be executed according to the rules" laid down therein. And those rules contemplate that the Will must be in writing and signed by the testator and attested by two or more witnesses. The contention on behalf of the respondent that only Wills relating to immoveable property are required to be in writing is manifestly untenable, because that section and other sections of the Act undoubtedly imply that all Wills made within the Presidency, whether relating to immoveable property or other properties, must be made in writing. And it may be taken that so far as the 1st defendant the Karnavan of the Kochipalli Tarwad is concerned, the Tarwad having inherited the assets of the business in the absence of a valid bequest, he as Karnavan could not acquire any right to it by adverse possession against his Tarwad. That would not apply to the 2nd defendant, who is a stranger to the Tarwad. The question, however, now is, not as to the right of the Tarwad to the assets of Bachikutty's trade, but as to their liability for debts incurred in the course of the trade by the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant. The properties of the Tarwad, which are sought to be made liable for these debts, were not acquired by the 1st defendant or by him and the 2nd defendant with the profits of the business but had been acquired mainly, as already stated, by the two preceding Karnavans, Kunyi Kuttiali Haji and Buchikutty, with the income of their private and separate businesses.

The question, therefore, that has to be determined is whether the Karnavan of a Malabar Tarwad is entitled to carry on a trade on behalf of the Tarwad and thus saddle the Tarwad with liabilities arising in the course of that business. It is a significant fact that neither the learned Pleader for the appellants nor the learned Counsel for the respondents has been able to bring to our notice a single instance of a Malabar Tarwad carrying on trade in its corporate capacity. On the other hand, there are numerous instances in this Presidency of trading families governed by the ordinary Hindu Law, in fact there are trading castes like Nattukottai Chetties in which most families carry on trade as the concern of the entire family. In such cases, all the properties of the family which may and often do consist of minors are liable for trade debts. The nature of the liability of a member of a joint Hindu family for debts incurred in the course of an ancestral trade was fully discussed by Chief Justice Sausse of the Bombay High Court in the oft cited case of Ramlal v. Lakhmichand (2), and the law laid down there may be taken to be the accepted law in all the Presidencies. It is stated at page LXXI, "the case of Petumdoss v. Ramdhone Doss (3) before Sir L. Peel is an authority that an ancestral trade, like other Hindu property, will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family; and we think that such a family can, by its manager or its adult members acting as managers, enter into co-partnership with a stranger. In carrying on such a trade, infant members of the undivided family will be bound by all acts of the manager, or the adult members acting as managers, which are necessarily incident to and flowing out of the carrying on of that trade, whether it be singly or with a co-partner. The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade." In that case the trade was carried on by a Hindu widow, who had succeeded to it as the heiress of her deceased husband. To the same effect are the rulings of this Court: See South Indian Export Company v. Subbier (4) and Malaiperumal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (5). See also Joykisto Cowar v. Nittyanund Nundy (6). In Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (7) Chandavarkar, J., traces the law on the subject to ancient authorities. He observes at page 76:* "According to Hindu Law-givers from Manu downwards, traders formed a part of the Hindu polity, and the profession of trade was meant for the third and last of the twice-born castes, namely, Vaisbyas. The Brahmins and the Kshatrias were allowed to trade only in case of necessity and in times of distress. There are special rules laid down for traders. Where a caste or a joint family takes to trading and that is handed down from one generation to the next and so on, it is called a trading caste or a trading family and trade becomes its duty or practice. In that case the duty or practice is called kulachara." Later on at page 81:* "Where a minor is a co-parcener in a joint family, his share in the family property is liable for debts contracted by his managing co-parcener for any family purpose or any purpose incidental to it. If the family is a trading firm, the same rule must apply, with this difference that the term family purpose or purposes incidental to it must here give way to the expression trading purpose or purpose incidental to it having regard to the nature and objects of the family business". On the other hand, the manager of a joint family is not entitled to embark on a new business, that is, which is not a family or ancestral business, and bind the members of the family with liabilities incurred in the course of it. [See McLaren Morrison v. Verschoyle (8).]

Here what the family of the Kochipalli Tarwad inherited was not a business carried on by Bachikutti as Karnavan of the Tarwad but only a private and separate concern of his own. Therefore, it could not be said that the present case falls within the principle of the rulings above mentioned Even supposing that that principle could be applied to a Malabar Tarwad, it cannot be said that trade is the chief occupation or kuluchara of the Nairs, who mainly form the community in which the legal conception of a Tarwad is the peculiar feature of the family system. One of the earliest cases in regard to the competence of a Karnavan to engage in commercial pursuits on behalf of the family was raised in Original Suit No. 14 of 1874 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of North Malabar—Mr. K Kunjan Menon. That learned Judge held: "It is clear that as a rule the coffee or cardamom trade is not within the ordinary scope of a Karnavan's authority. It was simply a private concern which he chose to carry on. A Karnavan is simply a manager of the common property of the members of the Tarwad who are all joint tenants with him. This position entitles him to pledge their credit for all purposes requisite for the performance of the said duty and no further. The carrying on of a trade like this was clearly without the ordinary duty of a Karnavan and any liability he has incurred in the carrying on of it must be presumed to be an individual one." The judgment of the High Court in the appeal against the Subordinate Judge's decree is not available, but the above propositions were apparently confirmed as the decree would show.

A similar question arose in another case, Suit No. 145 of 1885, which came up on second appeal to the High Court. This Court directed the Subordinate Judge who had heard the first appeal to try two issues, "whether the trade carried on by the Karnavan was carried on with the knowledge and consent of the Tarwad", and "whether the amount secured by the bond sued on was borrowed by the Karnavan for the purpose of that trade." Mr. K. Kunjan Menon in his finding on the issues remitted to him observed in that case: "His evidence, read as a whole, would clearly lead to the conclusion that the trade he carried on was his own private trade, and mercantile pursuits do not usually fall within the scope of the ordinary duties of a Malabar Karnavan. * * *. He does not say that any part of the plaintiffs' money was utilised by him for his own trade, and there is nothing to show that the trade he carried on was a family trade or that the other members assented to his carrying on such trade. * * *. Even granting that this explanation is false, the mere fact that the Anandravans of a Tarwad had agreed to pay off a portion of a trade-debt contracted by their Karnavan cannot, in itself, render the Tarwad liable for all his debts contracted in such trade, unless there is clear evidence that the trade was a family trade or that the other members were assenting parties to such trade, and, as the evidence now stands, I have no alternative but to return a finding in the negative on both the issues remitted to me for trial." That finding was accepted by the High Court and a decree was passed accordingly. The fact that the male members of a particular Malabar Tarwad habitually pursue trade as their occupation, would not in itself make the trade, which an individual member carried on on his own account and which on his death is inherited by the Tarwad, a family concern unless the Tarwad inheriting the assets of the deceased member's trade can be held to have continued it as the business of the Tarwad through its Karnavan. Can, then, the Karnavan at his option and without any special authority or consent of his Tarwad carry on such a trade on behalf of the family and not merely for the purpose of winding it up? That again depends on the more general question whether the carrying on of trade is within the scope of his ordinary authority as Karnavan.

The legal incidents of a Malabar Tarwad differ in some important respects from those of an ordinary joint Hindu family. In the case of the latter, each member of the family has a share in the family properties, which he can enforce by partition and which he can alienate at least according to the law in this Presidency. The member of a Malabar Tarwad is not entitled to any share and he cannot sue for partition. All that he is entitled to is maintenance from the family properties. But neither the manager of an ordinary joint Hindu family nor the Karnavan of a Tarwad can alienate the family property without necessity. It may be said generally that, as regards the disposal of the income, the Karnavan of a Tarwad has a much larger discretion than the manager of a joint family. The ordinary function of a Karnavan, however, is to manage the family property to its best advantage and maintain the members of the Tarwad in a manner benefiting the position of the Tarwad. The law is well summarised in one of the older decisions of this Court in these words: "In cases where the Marumakkathayam rule of inheritance prevails, the property is considered indivisible, the management thereof and the collection of the rents and income being invariably vested in the senior male, on whom devolves the duty of providing for the support and maintenance, as far as the funds will admit, of the other branches of the family, especially of the woman and children." (See Moore's Malabar Law, page 95.) Then at page 99 the learned author cites another judgment of the High Court (Kernan and Kindersley, JJ.), in which the position of a Karnavan is thus described: "In him (i. e, the Karnavan) is vested actually (though in theory in the females) all the property, moveable and immoveable, belonging to the Tarwad. It is his right and duty to manage alone the property of the Tarwad, to take care of it, to invest it in his own name (if it be moveable) either on loans on Kanom or other security, or by purchasing in his own name lands, and to receive the rent of the lands. * * * . His management may not be as prudent or beneficial as that of another manager would be, but, unless he acts mala fide or with recklessness or incompetency, he cannot be removed from such management. Almost the only restraint on him in such management is that he cannot alienate the lands of the Tarwad." In Kunhamad Hajee v. Kuttiath Hajee (9) this is how the law is stated by Turner, C. J., and Muthusami Aiyar, J.: at page 175: "The respect for elders, which is a marked feature of all Hinduism, is nowhere stronger than in Malabar, and, consequently, although the individual interest of the manager of a Tarwad in Tarwad property is considerably less than that of a manager of a Hindu family, he has, in the management of the Tarwad property, somewhat larger powers than are accorded to a Hindu manager. While, equally with the manager of a joint Hindu family, he is incompetent to alienate the estate without the consent of the other members of the Tarwad, except to supply the necessities of the Tarwad or to discharge its obligations, he cannot only make leases at rack-rents ordinarily for the term of five years for cultivation, but also leases with fines repayable on the expiry of the terms, in the nature of mortgages (Kanoms and Ottis) in which little more than a right to redeem may be left to the family."

I am unable to find that the pursuit of trade comes within the ordinary powers of a Malabar Karnavan within the rule enunciated in the passages I have cited. I take it, therefore, that the unreported cases referred to above correctly indicate the circumstances in which the members of a Tarwad can be held to be bound by debts contracted by a Karnavan in the course of a trade carried on by him; that is to say, it must be shown that the business was a family business as explained above or that the members of the Tarwad consented to the trade being carried on on behalf of and for the family. As regards such consent, the presence of minors in the family would give rise to difficulties. But assuming that the consent of the adult members would be sufficient—and as at present advised, I am rather inclined to think it would—I have to see whether the evidence in this case makes out such a consent. There is no evidence to show that any of the Anandravans took part in the business or helped the 1st defendant in the conduct of it. The defendant, however, tried to suppress the accounts and it was only two days before the closing of the case that they were produced. The writer of the accounts examined by the plaintiff, as observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, was not willing to render any assistance to the plaintiff. From the accounts, such as they are (Exhibit A series), it is difficult to come to a definite conclusion that the proceeds of the business were used for the benefit of the members of the family. That some portion of the income might have been so utilised by the 1st defendant who was the Karnavan may be taken for granted. But without any clear evidence as to the amount of the income from the business which was so spent, or the way in which it was spent, for the benefit of the family and as to whether any of the members were aware of the source from which such moneys came, it is not possible to draw any very definite conclusion. The only other evidence on which reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant consists of certain statements made by the 1st defendant. In Exhibit EE, a power-of attorney executed by him in favour of the 2nd defendant in 1912, there is a passage to this effect: "As I desire to go to Calcutta on trade business, I hereby entrust you to manage till my return all properties, moveable and immoveable, and also all trade concerns that appertain to

(9) 3 M. 169, 1 Ind. Dec. (N. s.) 675.

Kochipalli Tarwad and to cause the same to be managed and conducted; and you have undertaken to do this, and you are to conduct my trade business with my partners and cause the same to be conducted, to conduct renewals of Tarwad properties, etc." This cannot be said to be at all a clear statement that the trade belonged to the Tarwad. Then in Exhibit XI, which is a power of attorney executed in the year 1910, he speaks of "our joint trade" which would prima facie read as belonging to himself and the 2nd defendant. It has already been noticed that soon after the death of Bachikutti he and the 2nd defendant obtained a succession certificate on the allegation that the trade had been bequeathed to them by Bachikutti and not bequeathed to them on behalf of the Tarwad. Upon these facts, though the matter is not free from doubt, I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that it was not proved either that the trade which gave rise to these liabilities was a family business or that it was carried on by the 1st defendant with the consent of the members of the Tarwad. There is also evidence, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, that the plaintiff and other creditors who dealt with the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 acted under the belief that the trade carried on by them was their separate trade.

I, therefore, concur in the conclusion of my learned brother, whose judgment I have had the advantage of reading, that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

The memoranda of objections are not pressed and are also dismissed with costs.

SPENCER, J.—The outstanding question in all these appeals is whether the trade conducted by the 1st and 2nd defendants, who are the Karnavans of Kochipalli and Kottikollen Tarwads respectively, was the trade of the Tarwads or whether it was their individual trade. Upon the answer to this question depends the liability of all the junior members of the Tarwads. As the plaintiff did not press his case against the 2nd defendant's Tarwad, we have only to consider the liability of the defendants in respect of the Kochipalli Tarwad. Decrees have been given against the 1st and 2nd defendants personally and the suits were dismissed as against the Tarwads of the defendants.

The history of the Kochipalli Tarwad is given in paragraph 5 of the lower Court's judgment. It appears from this that the trade was started by Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji and that up to 1873 he was trading as a partner with a stranger named Mammi Kutti. Under Exhibit LL he bought out this partner in 1873 and thereafter traded with his own brother Assam Kunhi. Bachikutti joined this partnership. Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji and Assam Kunhi were his cousins, that is to say, his mother's sister's sons. At that time Bachikutti was not the Karnavan of his Tarwad but he became so afterwards. Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji died in 1886, Assam Kunhi in 1907 and Bachikutti in 1908. After Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji's death, Assam Kunhi became involved in debts and his trade collapsed in 1901. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 continued the trade of Bachikutti after his death and in the course of that trade they executed the hundies, Exhibit BB and CC series, which are the subject matter of these suits.

The plaintiff has to prove that the defendants are liable upon these hundies. If this were a family with an ancestral trade, it might be presumed that all the members of the family were liable for the trade debts; but we have not been referred to any case of a trading Tarwad with an ancestral trade like the trade of a family of Nattukottai Chetties or Marwaris, in whose case a presumption would generally arise that the entire family credit and the joint family properties were devoted to the business of the family. See Malaiperumal Chettiar v. Arunachalla Chettiar (5), in which such a presumption was raised in the case of a Nattukottai Chetti family. There are other cases of Nattukottai Chetti families in which similar presumptions have been raised. The Subordinate Judge has found that in this case all the male members of this Tarwad have taken trade as their occupation. But he observes that "in the case of Marumakkathayam Tarwads it should be admitted that Tarwad trade is very rare". The defendants are Mappillas following Marumakkathayam Law. The junior members of a Tarwad cannot compel the Karnavan to partition the family property, nor can they ask him for accounts of the manner in which he spends the family assets. Even in the case of a Hindu family it has been held in Vadilal v. Shah Khushal (10) that there is no presumption that all the co-parceners are partners in the business because one of the persons carrying on business is a co-parcener in a joint family, and that partnership has to be proved by evidence of an agreement to combine property, labour and skill in the business and to share the profits and losses thereof. In the case of a co-parcenary it must be shown that at least the family funds were utilized in order to start the business. There is no evidence here that the Tarwad properties were made use of in the first instance. It is only proved that the properties of the Tarwad were required by the trade of the male members. There is no presumption of law that properties acquired by one member of the Tarwad in his own name belong to the Tarwad, and that is a matter which must be proved like any other question of fact, see Govinda Panikkar v. Nani (11). In the case of families governed by the ordinary Hindu Law there are certain trading castes among whom trade becomes the duty or habit of a particular caste and it is handed down from one generation to the next, and in such a case the trade becomes one of the kulacharas of the family, and that fact attracts to itself all the necessary incidents of trade, such is the explanation given by Chandavarkar, J., in Raghunathji Tarachand v. Bank of Bombay (7) of the origin of trading families. It is difficult to conceive of the existence of a kulachara among Mappillas, who are Mussulmans by religion and follow either the Muhammadan or the Marukkathayam Law of succession.

In Appeals Nos. 6, 12, 20 and 21 of 1875 this High Court confirmed a decision of the Subordinate Judge's Court of North Malabar in which the learned Subordinate Judge made several interesting observations on the powers of Karnavans to bind their Tarwads by trade transactions. He said that a Karnavan was certainly not authorised to embark on any hazardous enterprise by the usage obtaining in Malabar families. He observed that any Judge who had any experience in Malabar and who had any idea of the constitution of Malabar Tarwads could not for a moment doubt that the entering into any speculation connected with trade would be, not a duty of a Karnavan's office, but an individual act of a person of an enterprising character and, therefore, it was an exception to the general rule to find Karnavans conducting trading operations on behalf of the Tarwad. On the evidence he found that there was no hereditary trade made out in the case of the family in that suit. But he pointed out that the members of the Tarwad had no power to restrain the Karnavan from carrying on an individual business of his own so long as he committed no misconduct and the law would not make them liable for his private debts. In Second Appeal No. 223 of 1887 the Subordinate Judge's Court of North Malabar returned a finding, in a case where the question was raised 'whether the trade carried on by the Karnavan was carried on with the knowledge and consent of the Tarwad', that the trade carried on in that case was the Karnavan's private trade; and the learned Subordinate Judge observed that "Mercantile pursuits do not usually fall within the scope of the ordinary duties of Malabar Karnavans" and that "the mere fact that the Anandravans of a Tarwad had agreed to pay off a portion of a trade debt contracted by their Karnavan cannot in itself, render the Tarwad liable for all his debts contracted in such trade, unless there is clear evidence that the trade was a family trade, or that the other members were assenting parties to such trade". In a case reported as Sircar v. Unniravi Kunjen (12) where the Karnavan of a Tarwad rented an Abkari farm jointly with a stranger, it was held that the presumption was that it was not the concern of the Tarwad, but the learned Judge declined to express any opinion upon the general question whether the Karnavan of a Tarwad was competent to bind the family by trade speculations. In the present case the onus clearly lies heavily upon the plaintiff to prove that the trade conducted by the 1st and 2nd defendants, who happened to be the Karnavans of their Tarwads, was in fact the trade of their Tarwads. I will now deal with some of the more important documents. Exhibit EE is a power-of-attorney executed by the 1st defendant to the plaintiff's 5th witness. It contains the sentence: "All the powers of management and responsibility regarding all kinds of properties and the trade carried on in the town of Cannanore belonging to my Kochipalli Tarwad rest with me". It is argued that the words 'belonging to my Kochipalli Tarwad' govern both 'properties' and 'trades'. If this were so, it would be a significant admission that the Tarwad owned some interest in the trade conducted by the 1st and 2nd defendants. But the language is ambiguous and the effect is neutralised to some extent by the use of the words 'my trade' and 'my partners' further on in the document. On the side of the defendants there is also the evidence of Exhibits X and XI, which are Muktearnamahs executed by this 1st defendant to Kochipalli Mahamad Kunhi and Kottikollon Mahamad Kunhi respectively two years before Exhibit EE. It is a material fact in defendants' favour that separate documents were drawn up, one in favour of the 1st defendant's Anandravan for the Tarwad property and another in favour of his partner, the 2nd defendant, for the trade which he speaks of as our joint trade. Then there is Exhibit U, an application for a succession certificate which was granted to the 1st and 2nd defendants on the strength of an oral Will made by the deceased Bachikutti to enable them to collect the debts left by Bachikutti. In it Bachikutti is described as the 1st petitioner's Karnavan and the father of the 2nd petitioner. The certificate was granted without any opposition on the part of the junior members of Bachikutti's Tarwad. It is argued that an oral Will made in Malabar would be invalid under the Malabar Wills Act, V of 1898. This Act applies to Wills of all persons governed by the Marumakkathayam or Aliasantanam Law, whether they are domiciled in the Madras Presidency or not. It lays down that Wills executed, by such persons within the Madras Presidency, and even outside the Presidency if they purport to dispose of immoveable property within it, must be executed in a certain manner, namely, the testator must sign or affix his mark to the Will and the attestors, of whom there must be two, must sign in his presence and by his direction. It is not distinctly declared in the Act that oral Wills are not valid. But assuming that that is implied by the language of section 9, the inference of fact to be drawn in this case from the act of the parties would be the same. Bachikutti leaves his trade to be conducted after his death by the 1st defendant who happens to be the Karnavan of his Tarwad and by the 2nd defendant who is a total stranger and belongs to another Tarwad. This is an indication that the trade was not considered by Bachikutti to be a Tarwad trade.

Similarly we find in 1873 Kochipalli Kunhi Kuttiyali severing his connection with his then partner and taking in as partner, not his next Anandravan, but only his younger brother. Exhibit MM series are extracts from the income tax registers, in which a certain amount of income derived by house-rent is included in the income-tax assessment of the 1st defendant and the 2nd defendant's brother (6th defendant in these suits). There is nothing in these documents to prove that the Kochipalli Tarwad admitted their liability to contribute to the income of the firm. The houses upon which house-rent is valid for the purpose of this income-tax case were houses belonging to the Kotti Kollone Tarwad. No inference can be drawn against the Kochipalli Tarwad from this circumstance.

Exhibit Q is a judgment in Original Suit No. 485 of 1903 on the file of the Cannanore Munsif's Court in a suit brought by Bachikutti to recover a shop, and Exhibit R is the appeal judgment in the same case. A question arose whether the plaint property was the self-acquisition of Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji and whether after his death it lapsed to the Tarwad represented by the plaintiff in that suit. The District Munsif found that the shop did not become the property of the Tarwad and that the plaintiff's title, as Karnavan of the Tarwad, to recover it was barred by limitation. The District Judge on appeal also found that the shop belonged to Kunhi Kuttiyali Haji exclusively and dismissed the appeal. Exhibit AA series are the account-books of the firm, but as they have not been properly proved in evidence, no conclusion can be drawn from the entries therein.

On the oral evidence the Judge has come to the conclusion that all the male members of the Tarwad have taken up trade as their occupation. At the same time he says that there is no reliable evidence that the other members of the Kochipalli Tarwad assisted 1st defendant in this trade. In Exhibit Q, the judgment already referred to, it was found that the Anandravans did assist Kunhi Kuttiyalli Haji in his trade. But the statements of the plaintiff's 6th and 8th witnesses on this important point in this case have been discredited on account of their demeanours and, therefore, we cannot rely upon the fact as proved by the evidence in this case. The plaintiff's 7th witness states that the Tarwad jewels were pledged for trade purposes, but he admits in cross-examination that they were Mamu Haji's wife's jewels. He also says that the 1st defendant admitted to him that the trade belonged to the Tarwad and he states that he has seen the members of the Tarwad taking articles from the shop in the cantonment. But as this witness is the plaintiff in Original Suits Nos. 2 and 29 of 1916 out of which Appeals Nos. 375 and 254 of 1917 have arisen, no weight can be given to his evidence. This man, when getting a conveyance executed for a small portion of immoveable property (see Exhibit F), insists on all the Tarwad joining but not so when he lends money to the extent of Rs. 14,000 to the 2nd defendant's Muktear. Hundis, Exhibit BB and CC series, have been signed by the Muktear of the firm on behalf of the firm. There is no indication from these documents that the Tarwad incurred any liability. In Exhibit DD the 2nd defendant and the 2nd defendant's brother, who was his Muktear, notified to one of the persons with whom they had dealings that they were trading in partnership under the firm name of Kochipalli Hussain Kunhi and Kottikolone Mamed Kunhi, that is, the name of the 1st and 2nd defendants. These two persons belong to different Tarwads. There is no evidence that the Tarwad property has been used or pledged in the business with the exception of the case of the jewels already referred to, as to which there is no clear evidence that the jewels did not belong to the individual women who wore them rather than to the Tarwad as a body.

On the whole I am of opinion that the conclusion formed by the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff had failed to prove that the trade was that of the Tarwad of Kochipalli was correct. So far as the custom of Malabar Tarwads is known, it would appear to be an exception to the general rule to find a Karnavan conducting a trade on behalf of the Tarwad, though, of course, any profit that might be made by any individual by trading would on his death become part of the Tarwad assets. I must confirm the judgment of the lower Court and dismiss these appeals with costs.

The memoranda of objections have not been pressed and are dismissed with costs.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 544 AND 645 TO 656 OF 1918.

June 26, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Newbould.

RAKHAL CHANDRA CHATTERJEE AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

BHABADEB CHATTERJEE—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Putni Regulation Act (VIII of 1819), s. 11 (3) proviso—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 105, 195 (e)—Putni tenure—Resident hereditary cultivators—Enhancement of rent, whether permissible—Lease fixing rent in perpetuity, effect of—Bona fide engagment with putnidar, effect of—Occupancy rights, entry of, effect of.

Resident hereditary cultivators, to whom the proviso to section 11 of the Bengal Putni Regulation of 1819 is applicable, are not liable to pay higher rent on proof of the condition on which their rent is liable to enhancement under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Such tenants are not liable to pay any rent in excess of their engagements with the previous putnidar, unless such engagements are cancelled on the ground that they were not made in good faith. [p. 273, col. 1.]

The acceptance of a lease by a resident hereditary cultivator fixing the rent payable by him in perpetuity does not take away the status which he had as resident hereditary cultivator so as to make the rent payable by him enhanceable under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 273, col. 1.]

Sheikh Mahomed Assanoollah Chowdhry v. Shamshir Ali, 4 C. L. R. 165, Sarbananda Nath Bhowmik v. Rana Gazi, 21 Ind. Cas. 530; 18 C. L. J. 334, relied on.

RAKHAL CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. BHABADEB CHATTERJEE.

In the absence of a lease proving a bona fide engagement made with the tenant by the previous putnidar fixing the former's rent, the tenant as a resident and hereditary cultivator gets no protection from the proviso to section 11 of the Bengal Putni Regulation. [p 273, col 2.]

Where a putnidar can only enhance the rent of his tenants by special procedure under the Putni Regulation, he cannot do so by an entirely different procedure under the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p 273, col. 2.]

Where tenants hold land under a lease fixing the rent payable by them in perpetuity, the fact that they have allowed themselves to be entered in the Record of Rights as occupancy tenants does not put an end to their rights under their leases nor does their action amount to estoppel. [p. 273, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 8th December 1917, affirming the decrees of the Settlement Officer of that district, dated the 29th September 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with him Babu Surendro Nath Das Gupta), for the Appellants.—These appeals arise out of applications for enhancement of rent under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defendants are not liable to pay enhanced rents, because they are hereditary and resident cultivators within the meaning of section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819. Refers to the proviso to section 11 of the Putni Regulation. The engagements made between the tenants and the previous putnidar fixing the rent in perpetuity are binding upon the parties, and unless those engagements are set aside on grounds mentioned in the Putni Regulation, the rents cannot be enhanced. Their rents cannot be enhanced by proving conditions under which the rent is liable to be enhanced under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. See section 195 (e), Bengal Tenancy Act. Further to enhance the rent of a hereditary and resident cultivator under the Putni Regulation the putnidar must adopt a special procedure provided for in Regulation VIII of 1819 and he cannot get enhancement of rent of such tenant by adopting the special procedure under the Bengal Tenancy Act. My submission is that the putnidar must bring a regular suit for getting the enhancement of rent after setting aside the engagements made by his predecessor-in-interest.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal, for the Respondent.—So far as Appeal No. 655 of 1918 is concerned, it has not been proved by the defendant in that case that there was any bona fide engagement fixing the rent in perpetuity and so the proviso to section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819 does not apply to that case.

As regards the other appeals, my submission is that when the tenants have been recorded as occupancy raiyats and when they have allowed the landlord to treat them as such, they cannot fall back upon their engagements with the previous putnidar. They are now estopped from contending that by virtue of the terms in the lease their rent is not enhanceable.

The next point is that after having accepted the leases, the tenants cannot claim the benefit of the proviso to section 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819, because after the acceptance of such leases they cannot claim the rights of resident hereditary cultivators.

Further, the contention of my learned friend that a regular suit is necessary to get the enhancement of the rent has no substance in it, because the rent can be enhanced by means of proceedings under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen, in reply, referred to the cases reported as Sheikh Mahomed Assanollah Chowdhry v. Shamshir Ali (1) and Sarbananda Nath Bhowmik v. Rana Gazi (2) to show that after the acceptances of the leases the tenants continued to be resident and hereditary cultivators.

JUDGMENT.—These 13 appeals arise out of the same number of applications for enhancement of rent before the Settlement Officer and subsequent appeals to the District Judge of Burdwan. The applications were made under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Settlement Officer granted increase of rent at 6 annas in the rupee on the ground of the general rise in price of local food stuffs.

The defendants-appellants' main contention was that they were not liable to pay enhanced rent, as they had leases which gave them the right to hold the land at the same rent in perpetuity. There appears to have been some delay in producing them and pleading on the basis of these leases. But they were produced before the parties went to trial and an issue was framed: "Are these jamas not liable to enhancement on the ground that mokarari right was confirmed under contract by pattas granted by previous putnidars?" The first Court held that the mokarari right created by these leases was an incumbrance from which the putni right is free under section 11 of the Patni Regulation, VIII of 1819. The lower Appellate Court held that the Settlement Officer was wrong in treating the defendants as tenure-holders whose rights become voidable on the sale of the putni under the Regulation. He held that they were hereditary resident cultivators, to whom the proviso to section 11 of that Regulation was applicable. But he held that that proviso did not protect them from liability to pay higher rent on proof of the condition which made their rents liable to enhancement under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

(2) 21 Ind. Cas. 530; 18 C. L. J. 334.

Here I think the lower Appellate Court was wrong. On the finding that the defendants were resident hereditary cultivators, they were clearly entitled to the protection of the proviso in the 3rd clause of section 11 of the Patni Regulation. That clause provides that nothing contained in the section shall entitle the purchaser of a Taluk to cancel bona fide engagements made to such tenants by the late incumbent, except it be proved in a regular suit, to be brought by such purchaser for the adjustment of his rent, that a higher rate would have been demandable at the time such engagements were contracted by his predecessor. The language of the section seems perfectly clear, and in fact the learned Pleader for the respondent has not tried to support the view taken by the District Judge that it is sufficient to prove what is a fair rate allowable at the present moment. It has been proved in all the cases to which these appeals relate except one, and that is Suit No. 1688 of 1892 which corresponds to Second Appeal No. 655 of 1918, that there were engagements made between the tenants and the previous putnidar. No suggestion is made that these engagements were not made in good faith, and until these engagements are cancelled, the defendants are not liable to pay any rate in excess of these engagements.

It is contended that these tenants, by allowing themselves to be entered in the Record of Rights as occupancy raiyats and by allowing the plaintiff landlord to treat them as occupancy raiyats, in effect consented to the cancellation of the engagements under which they were allowed to hold the land at a fixed rate. It seems to me perfectly clear that such conduct on their part could not have the effect of putting an end to their rights under their leases, nor does their action amount to an estoppel.

It is also contended on behalf of the respondent that the tenants, by accepting these leases and becoming raiyats at fixed rates, lost the status which they had as resident hereditary cultivators. The answer to this objection will be found in the case of Sheikh Mahomed Assanoollah Chowdhry v. Shamshir Ali (1) and in the case of Sarbananda Nath Bhowmik v. Rana Gazi (2). The defendants, being protected by the provisions of this clause, that is, 3rd clause of section 11, are entitled to rely on their leases granted by the previous putnidar and are not liable to have their rents enhanced under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 95 (e) provides that the provisions of the Patni Regulation relating to putni tenures shall not be affected by the Bengal Tenancy Act. If under this Regulation the holder of a putni can only enhance the rent of his tenants by special procedure under that Act, he cannot do so by an entirely different procedure under the Bengal Tenancy Act. Further, even if it be held that a proceeding under section 105 for enhancement of rent is equivalent to a regular suit referred to in this proviso to section 11, it must be held that the plaintiff cannot succeed in this suit as he had produced no evidence whatever to show that a higher rate of rent would have been demandable at the time when the permanent leases were granted.

In Appeal No. 655 of 1918 already referred to, in the absence of a lease it cannot be held that there was any bona fide engagement proved to have been made with the tenant permanently fixing his rent. In the absence of proof of such engagement the tenant as a resident and hereditary cultivator gets no protection from this proviso.

In the result, therefore, Second Appeal No. 655 of 1918 is dismissed with costs. The remaining Appeals Nos. 544, 645 to 654 and 656 of 1918 are decreed, the judgments and decrees in these cases are set aside and the suits dismissed with costs in all Courts.

I assess the hearing fee in each case at one gold mohur.

Appeal No. 655 dismissed;
Remaining appeals allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908, s. 100, O. XLI, r. 27—Additional evidence, refusal of Appellate Court to admit—Appeal, second—High Court, interference by.

Per *Wallis, C. Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The High Court has power, in second appeal, to consider the propriety of the exercise of its discretion by a lower Appellate Court as regards the admission of additional evidence, though that discretion would not be interfered with lightly any more than the discretion of a Court rejecting a review petition would be lightly interfered with in revision. The question whether the Appellate Court exercised its discretion properly is a question of law as it is now settled that good grounds for review are also good grounds for the Appellate Court to allow further evidence to be adduced. [p. 28-, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 557 of 1914, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 10 of 1913.

The appeal coming on for hearing on the 2nd October 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar and Mr. S. Panchapakesa Sastri, for the Appellant and of Mr. S Viswanatha Aiyar, for the 1st Respondent, Mr. G. S. Ramachandra Aiyar for Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the 2nd and 3rd Respondents, and respondents Nos. 4 and 5 not appearing in person or by Pleader, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 5th December 1917, the Court (Abdur Rahim and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—In this case the point on which I felt considerable doubt was whether we could say that the decree of the District Judge was wrong on the ground that he refused to admit in evidence the decree in Original Suit No. 25 of 1 79. That document had undoubtedly a material bearing on the question whether the property in dispute was validly dedicated to charity as found by the District Judge. The decree was not produced in the Court of first instance, but the appellant's affidavit shows that the appellant who is the purchaser of the property was not aware of the existence of this decree. He discovered it after the Court of first instance had pronounced judgment and an appeal had been preferred to the District Judge. An application was made to the lower Appellate Court for admission of this decree, but it was rejected on the ground that if such an application was granted, there would be no end to litigation.

Can we in second appeal admit that document on the ground that the lower Appellate Court's refusal to exercise the power it had under Order XLI, rule 27 of the Code of Civil Procedure—supposing the application came within the scope of the rule—was wrong? The well-known ruling of the Privy Council in Kesowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) on the subject has been considered in a number of recent rulings of this Court. It may now be taken to be well established so far at least as this Court is concerned that the words "but if an Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause" entitle an Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence if it finds it necessary to do so to enable it to pronounce judgment to its own satisfaction. The words "any other substantial cause" should not be read in an ejusdem generis sense so as to confine the application of the rule to cases of lacuna. [See Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2), Ambuja Ammal v. Appadurai Mudali (3), Subba Naidu v. Ethirajammal (4), Peddibhotla Kameswaramma v. Bezwada Chelapathi (5), Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (6)]

It has been further held in Andippa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2) and Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (6) that an Appellate Court acting under rule 27 of Order XLI, clause (b) may admit fresh evidence on the same grounds as would justify the Court of first instance to admit a review. In all these cases, the Appellate Court had in fact admitted fresh evidence and the question discussed before the High Court was whether it had the power to do so.

In the present case the lower Appellate Court refused to admit the evidence produced by the appellant. Supposing it went wrong in this, as I am inclined to think it did; are we entitled to say that it ought to have 'required the document to be produced to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause'? The very statement of the proposition shows to my mind that it is untenable. It cannot come within the scope of the rule even interpreting it and the ruling of the Privy Council as liberally as any of the decisions mentioned above have done. As pointed out in Ambuja Ammal v. Appadurai Mudali (3) the test laid down by the Legislature has reference to the state of mind of the Judge hearing the appeal when he has heard the argument with a view to pronouncing judgment in the case. Here the order refusing to admit further evidence was passed on an especial application made by the appellant before the hearing of the appeal and the lower Appellate Court apparently found no difficulty in pronouncing judgment without that evidence. I am of opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the District Judge cannot be assailed on this ground. But as my learned brother takes a different view and the question is one of general importance I would refer it to the Full Bench for its opinion, in these terms:—'Whether the High Court can interfere in second appeal with an order of the lower Appellate Court rejecting an application made to it by a party to the appeal before the hearing of the appeal to admit certain material evidence discovered since the date of the decree appealed against and which was not available to the said party with the exercise of due diligence during the trial of the suit?'

I may mention that on the other questions raised before us, namely, as to the identity of the lands specified in Exhibit IX and mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit I agree with my learned brother and to this extent there should be a further enquiry and finding.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The 1st plaintiff is the appellant. He sued in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Negapatam to recover possession of certain properties sold to him by the 1st and 2nd defendants for 18,000 rupees. The 3rd and 4th defendants are the sons of the 1st defendant and the 5th and 6th defendants are persons claiming under an agreement to sell prior to the date of the sale to plaintiff. Several defences were raised by the defendants but the only question material to the second appeal is as to the dedication of certain items of property conveyed to the plaintiff to a charity. This defence was raised by the 3rd and 4th defendants. In paragraph 5 of their written statement they made the bald allegation that 36 acres of the said lands had been set apart by the family for charities; when or how is not stated. Issues were settled on the 24th February 1912, but no issue was asked for or raised as to this alleged dedication though as many as eleven issues were raised with respect to the allegations in the written statements. On the 3rd March 1913, two additional issues were raised but even then no issue was raised as to the dedication. After the commencement of the trial and the examination of the plaintiff's witnesses and on the 25th February 1914, the following additional issue was raised on a petition of the 3rd and 4th defendants. "Whether the items noted in the petition of the 3rd and 4th defendants, dated 25th February 1914 are properties burdened with charity and are not liable to be alienated by the 1st defendant?" The trial went on on that date, and on the 27th February, the case was adjourned to the 2nd March and was closed on the 18th March 1913. Judgment was delivered on the 23rd March. The Subordinate Judge held that the sale of the items referred to in paragraph 11 of his judgment making 31 acres and 5 cents was invalid "as they relate to an endowment for maintaining a choultry at Tagattur" and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the remaining items claimed. The defendants beyond filing Exhibit IX, an agreement of partition, dated 29th August 1870, adduced no evidence on the point. The plaintiff filed documents showing that the property had been dealt with by the 1st defendant as his own property from 1882.

Plaintiff appealed against the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it dismissed his suit and during the pendency of the appeal applied for the admission of a decree of the Subordinate Court of Negapatam in Original Suit No. 26 of 1879 which according to him showed that there was no dedication of lands in Ekkar village as alleged by the 3rd and 4th defendants but that on the contrary the lands fell to the share of the 1st defendant. He alleged he was not aware of the decree before the suit was disposed of by the Subordinate Judge. The District Judge dismissed his application, not on the ground that he was aware of the existence of the suit or the decree or could have known it if he had exercised reasonable diligence, but that the admission of the document would necessitate a remand and that "there would be no end to litigation if parties were allowed to call further evidence in this way."

I have already pointed out how the issue as to dedication was raised during the trial of the suit and what little time the plaintiff who is found to be a bona fide purchaser who paid the large sum of Rs. 18,000 had to adduce evidence on the point. He was a stranger and it is not suggested what means he had of knowing of a partition suit between the members of the family of the vendor about 32 years before his purchase. He did his best and the District Judge does not find that the non-production of the decree was due to any neglect or default of the plaintiff and the reasons he has given for refusing to admit it are unsound. There can be little doubt that the decree sought to be filed was a very material document.

The following table sets out the relationship between the parties :—

The agreement of partition, Exhibit IX, relied on by the 3rd and 4th defendants as evidencing the dedication to charity was executed by Vairappa Tevan, Kuppa Tevan, Palaniappa Tevan, Namasivaya Tevan and Vairappa Tevan and purports to set apart over 30 acres of land in Ekkur village for the upkeep of the choultry, besides other lands in other villages. Sattayappa Tevan and Shunmuga Tevan, the sons of Vairappa Tevan, who were alive at the date of Exhibit IX were not parties to the deed of partition and they filed Original Suit No. 26 of 1879 for a partition of all the family properties. The plea raised was that there had been a prior partition effected by Vairappa Tevan evidently under Exhibit IX. The parties entered into a razinamah and a decree was passed in terms of the razinamah. This is the decree sought to be put in. It appears from the decree that the lands in dispute in this appeal were not dedicated to charity but fell to the share of the 1st defendant. It is contended that the agreement of partition, Exhibit IX, would not bind the sons of Vairappa not parties to it as it purported to alienate a considerable extent of lands (about 120 acres) for the upkeep of the choultry and that the power of a Hindu father to effect a division is only validly exercised when it is a fair and equitable partition, he having no power to give properties to strangers. The decision of the Privy Council in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (7) is relied on.

It is also contended that when the sons not parties questioned the partition, Exhibit IX, and there was a razinamah decree between the parties whereby other lands were given for the charity it was prima facie the only valid source of title for all parties including the charity.

It may be that defendants have a good answer but unless they show that Exhibit IX continued in force in spite of the decree in Original Suit No. 26 of 1879 or was not affected by it, the decree will prima facie support the contention of the 1st plaintiff.

As the document was very material and as the allegations in the 1st plaintiff's affidavit (printed at page 68 of the documents) have neither been traversed by the other side nor found to be false by the District Judge, I think that, having regard to the fact that the issue as to dedication was raised only during the course of the final hearing, the decree in Original Suit No. 26 of 1879 (as to the genuineness of which there is no dispute) should have been admitted in evidence by the District Judge.

I am of opinion that the District Judge had power under the circumstances to admit the document in appeal. In Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2) it was held that the words "or for any other substantial cause" in section 563 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 (which corresponds to Order XLI, rule 27 of the present Code) need not be ejusdem generis with the causes stated in the previous part of the section. In Ambuja Ammal v. Appadurai Mudali (3) a similar view was adopted and it was held that the words confer a wide discretion on the Appellate Court to admit additional evidence when the ends of justice require it. The learned Judges were of opinion that section 107 of the Code of Civil Procedure conferred on the Appellate Court all the powers of the Court of first instance and were not inclined to follow the view taken by Abdur Rahim, J. (differing from Phillips, J.) in Subba Naidu v. Ethirajammal (8) that the expression 'any other substantial cause' in Order XLI, rule 27 is not to be understood in a wide and unrestricted sense but should be construed ejusdem generis with the causes in the other parts of the rule. The decision of Phillips, J. was confirmed in Letters Patent Appeal. See Vellayappa Chetty v. Nellaya Pillay (9). In Venkatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (6) it was held that the expression "for any other substantial cause" gave power to the Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence on the same grounds that would justify the Court of first instance in granting a review and that the discovery of fresh and material evidence after disposal of the suit, the decree in which is appealed against, would be a substantial cause within the meaning of Order XLI, rule 27. In Peddibhotla Kameswaramma v. Bezwada Chelapathi (5) the decision in Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2) was followed. Arasappa Pillai v. Manika Mudaliar (10) is distinguishable on the ground that the party had declared in the first Court that he had no evidence and the District Judge suo motu remanded the case for fresh evidence to be taken The learned Judges while referring to Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2) were not prepared to extend the rule to such cases. In Marimuthu Pillai v. Velu Pollai (11) no grounds were shown why the evidence was not adduced in the lower Court and the District Judge acted suo motu and remanded the case.

It is argued that where fresh evidence is discovered after judgment which would justify the original Court in granting a review, the party should withdraw the appeal and apply for a review. This would obviously work hardship where the fresh document or evidence would only cover one or more of the issues and would not affect the decision of other matters decided by the lower Court which are included in the grounds of appeal. Besides if Order XLI, rule 27, empowers the Appellate Court to admit the evidence so discovered there is no reason why a party who has paid Court fees for the appeal should be again compelled to pay Court fee for a review of judgment, especially as he will have to pay the full Court fee if the review is presented after 90 days and one-half if it is paid before.

As the District Judge had power to admit the document, there can be little doubt that he failed to exercise his discretion judicially. The only ground given by him for not admitting the document is that there would be no end to litigation if parties were allowed to produce further evidence in appeal. His duty was to see if the applicant's allegations were proved and the document sought to be filed was material and was discovered after the judgment in the lower Court was passed. If he had thought that the document was not material or that even if it was admitted it would not have influenced him in coming to a decision as to the correctness of the lower Court's judgment it would be another matter. But he did not apply his mind to any such question but dismissed the petition on a ground that is in my opinion irrelevant to the question in issue.

It is argued that the District Judge had a discretion under Order XLI, rule 27 and that the High Court cannot in second appeal interfere even if he did not exercise his discretion properly. It is well settled that an Appellate Court has power to interfere even if the matter is one relating to the exercise of discretion if the lower Court has exercised the discretion on a wrong principle or has disregarded any principle of law. Oriental Bank Corporation, In re (12), Berdan v. Greenwood (13), Terrell, In re (14). As pointed out by Lindley, L. J. in Young v. Thomas (15) the Appellate Court will interfere if the judgment of the lower Court proceeded on an erroneous principle and had not really exercised any discretion at all. In Sanderson v. Blyth Theatre Company (16) Sterling, L. J. was of opinion that to enable the Appellate Court to interfere there must be either a disregard of principle or a misapprehension of facts.

Section 100 clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code gives a right of second appeal when there has been a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by the Code which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits. This applies obviously to error or defect of procedure of the lower Appellate Court as well as the original Court.

I fail to see why the refusal of the lower Appellate Court to exercise its discretion under Order XLI, rule 27, when such refusal is based on a mis-apprehension of the law or the nature and extent of the powers of an Appellate Court under rule 27, cannot be said to be an error or defect in the procedure adopted by it in hearing the appeal, within the meaning of section 100, Civil Procedure Code. The evidence rendered may be such as to show that the decision appealed against cannot be supported and the party may have been perfectly bona fide. To hold that in such cases an Appellate Court may, on a totally erroneous view of its powers under Order XLI, rule 27, reject the evidence tendered, and that the High Court in second appeal though convinced of the error cannot interfere, would lead to obvious hardship. There is nothing in the provisions of section 100 which compel the Court to place such a restriction on its powers. In Moni Lal Bandopadhya v. Khiroda Dasi (17) which was a case where the District Munsif refused to grant an adjournment asked for to produce certain witnesses, it was held that this was a substantial error in procedure which would justify the High Court in interfering in second appeal. The report also contains a judgment by three learned Judges of the High Court where they held that it was open to the High Court in second appeal to examine the proceedings to see whether the Court below exercised a sound discretion or not. In Hafiz Abdul Karim v. Sri Kissen Rai (18) it was held that improper admission of evidence by the Appellate Court in the exercise of its discretion may be set aside in second appeal and in Arasappa Pillai v. Manika Mudaliar (10) and Marimuthu Pillai v. Velu Pillai (11) already referred to by me, the High Court in second appeal set aside the Appellate Court's decree on the ground that evidence was wrongly admitted. If a discretion wrongly exercised in admitting evidence under Order XLI, rule 27 can be set aside I fail to see why a wrong exercise of discretion in refusing to admit material evidence should be allowed to stand.

Two other questions remain for determination. There is nothing to show that the lands specified in Exhibit IX are included in the sale-deed to the plaintiff and form part of the plaint mentioned items. The lands in Exhibit IX are described by paimash numbers and there is nothing to show what the corresponding survey numbers are. I find no admission appearing anywhere to show that the items excluded by the decree of the Subordinate Judge as charity properties are the items in Exhibit IX. The allegations by the Vakil for the appellant that certain items specified in the 3rd defendant's petition to raise additional issues (printed at page 8 of the printed papers) are not in the decree, and certain items not in the petition find their place in the decree, is not shown to be incorrect. There should be a clear finding as to which of the items claimed in the plaint and covered by the sale-deed to plaintiff were included in Exhibit IX and dedicated to charity.

As regards mesne profits no reason has been assigned for not granting the prayer of the plaintiff for future mesne profits in respect of the lands which have been decreed to him. Order XX, rule 12 empowers the Court to assess future mesne profits and there is no reason to drive plaintiff to another suit.

I would reverse the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it dismisses the plaintiff's suit and direct the District Judge to dispose of the appeal after admitting the document sought to be filed in the light of the above observations. It will be open to the District Judge to raise further issues. Costs will abide and follow the result.

As my learned brother takes a different view as to the powers of the High Court to interfere in second appeal, I agree to the order of reference to the Full Bench proposed by him.

This second appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench on the 7th and 8th April 1919.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The High Court has the power to interfere. The second appeal comes under section 100 clauses (b) and (c). The admission or rejection of evidence by the Appellate Court is allowed under Order XLI, rules 26 and 27.

Abelakh Roy v. Guggun Bhuggut (19) is an exact case.

[WALLIS, C. J.—That was a case of improper refusal to admit evidence. Here the whole evidence was duly adduced and a decree passed.]

Suppose the lower Court has exercised a discretion, it is open to the Appellate Court to see whether the discretion has been wrongly or properly exercised.

Ram Piari v. Kallu (20). In the present case no discretion has been exercised, the only reason for rejection being that the trial would be lengthened. Grounds for admitting fresh evidence in review are grounds for the same in appeal.

Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2), Subba Naidu v Ethirajammal (4), Ambuja Ammal v. Appadurai Mudali (3). Section 107 is referred to. Venakatachela Pillai v. Ranga Pillai (6) which was a case where additional evidence was admitted. In Peddibhotla Kameswaramma v. Bezwada Chelapathi (5) it was held that, where a document is improperly admitted, that would constitute an error of law.

Arasappa Pillai v. Manika Mudaliar (1C), Marimuthu Pillai v. Velu Pillai (11), Muhammad Siddiq v. Mahmud-un-nissa Bibi (21) (evidence was admitted).

[WALLIS, C. J.—Where the lower Appellate Court has admitted evidence, the High Court can consider whether it was properly admitted or not. Does it follow that the High Court can do so where the lower Appellate Court has refused to admit evidence?]

The one equally applies to the other so far as the power to interfere is concerned. It cannot be said that a discretion when exercised one way can be controlled, but if exercised in another way cannot be controlled. But see Durga Prasad v. Jai Narain (22) following Ram Piari v. Kallu (20), Gauri Rai v. Bhaggina (23) (also a case of admitting evidence).

[WALLIS, C. J.—We are satisfied as to cases where evidence was admitted in the Court below.]

Compare section 35, Civil Procedure Code, with Order XLI, rule 27—entire discretion uncontrolled in the one case while not quite so in the other. But still it has been held that a wrong order as to costs can be considered by the Appellate Court.

[WALLIS, C. J.—The present case can be put upon a much narrower ground :— Where an issue, after the close of the case, is sprung unexpectedly upon a party so that he is not able to adduce necessary evidence, the Court should either vacate the judgment or ex debito justitiæ admit fresh evidence to enable parties to have a fair trial of the issue.]

Quite so. My point is that if the issue had been framed in time, I could have found out these documents to file them in time. So if it was a discretion, the discretion can be controlled, e g., in cases of adjournments, the discretion has been questioned. Moni Lal Bandopadhya v. Khiroda Dasi (24), Talewar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (25) following Minakshi v. Velu (26), Devidas Jagjivan v. Pirjada Begam (27). In Queen v. Adamson (28) a refusal to issue summons was held to be a failure to exercise discretion.

[AYLING, J.—What is there in it that can be compared with your case.]

The words are "as they think fit." See Leslie Williams v. Haines Thomas Giddy (29), ("a fraud on the exercise of judgment"). See also Veeraraghava Iyer v. J. D. Muga Sait (30).

Sanderson v. Blyth Theatre Company (16), Berdan v. Greenwood (13), Terrell, In re (14), Young v. Thomas (15), Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (31), Sharpe v. Wakefield (32).

Page 965 of the "Yearly Practice" of the Supreme Court 1918 gives all the English cases on the point.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Order XLI, rule 27, applies only if the Court "requires" the evidence for "any substantial cause" in clause (b). In other words clause (a) prescribes an external standard which has to be satisfied but in clause (b), the standard is internal. So the Court cannot be compelled to "require."

[WALLIS, C. J.—The word "may" in clause (a) means an application made by the parties.]

Still less can a second Appellate Court exercise that compulsion. The cases are:—Mohesh Chunder Sheet v. Shoshee Mookhee Debia (33), Golam Mukdoom v. Hafeezoonissa (34), Kulpo Singh v. Thakoor Singh (35), Prem Chand Moonshee, In the goods of, Upendra Mohan Ghose v. Gopal Chandra Ghose (36), (the test is the requirement of the Court itself), Beckwith v. Kishto Jeebun Buckshee (37), Ram Piari v. Kallu (20). Durga Prasad v. Jai Narain (22). This view is adopted in Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1). The test is laid down in Ambuja Ammal v. Appadurai Mudali (3), Garden Reach Spinning & Manufacturing Company v. Secretary of State for India (38). In fact the order and the judgment are on the same date and so it must be assumed that the discretion has been exercised.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Ayyangar, in reply.—Against the current of Madras decisions Order XLI, rule 27 contemplates these contingencies. "Or for any substantial cause" is separate from the requirement of the Courts.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Their Lordships perhaps have ignored this point. Is that what you want?]

See Andiappa Pillay v. Muthukumara Thevan (2) as to how Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) has been understood in the Court, see Satis Chandra Bose v. Takurdas Mandal (39), where three contingencies are set out. Kaniz Mustafa v. Musi Imran (40). The substantiality of the cause is therefore not dependent on the mind of the Judge and so is a matter which can be controlled by the High Court. When the exercise of discretion has not been judicial, the High Court can interfere.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—The attention of the learned Judges who made the reference does not appear to have been called to the long catena of decisions in Calcutta and to the decisions to the same effect in Allahabad. Shortly after the coming into force of the Code of 1859 it was decided by Sir Barnes Peacock and Jackson, J.—Beckwith v. Kishto Jeebun Buckshee (37) that no special or second appeal lay from a refusal by the lower Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence under section 355 of that Code which re appears as Order XLI, rule 27 of the present Code. The decisions in Mohesh Chunder Sheet v. Shoshee Mookhee Debia (33), Golam Mukdoom v. Hafeezoonissa (34), Kulpo Singh v. Thakur Singh (35), Prem Chand Moonshee In the goods of, Upendra Mohan Ghose v. Gopal Chandra Ghose (36) are to the same effect, as are the decisions of the Allahabad Court in Ram Piari v. Kallu (20) and Durga Prasad v. Jai Narain (22). There are no reported decisions in Madras and Bombay as there must have been if this long line of authorities had ever been questioned in these Courts. It has, I think, long been the practice of all the High Courts not to entertain second appeals from refusals of the lower Appellate Court to admit fresh evidence under this rule. I am not prepared to depart from this practice and would answer the question in the negative.

AYLING, J.—In my opinion the answer to the reference must be in the negative. The effect of Order XLI, rule 27, clause (b) is to empower an Appellate Court to admit additional evidence provided it requires the evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause. Whether it requires the additional evidence or not is for the Appellate Court itself to say, and it is not for a superior Court to control its discretion, or to say that it ought to have required it, where, as a fact, it did not. I would respectfully adopt the reasoning of Sale, J., in Prem Chand Moonshee, In the goods of, Upendra Mohan Ghose v. Gopal Chandra Ghose (36) which is in accordance with a long catena of early Calcutta decisions beginning with a judgment of Peacock, C., J., and Jackson, J., reported in Beckwith v. Kishto Jesbun Buckshee (37). That the word "requires" in the corresponding section 568 of the old Code means nothing more than "needs" or "finds needful" has been expressly decided by the Privy Council in Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (1) and this pronouncement, as it seems to me, concludes the matter if authority were needed.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I regret that I have the misfortune to differ from my Lord and Ayling, J., on this reference. It having been now settled in this Court that good grounds for review are also good grounds for the Appellate Court to allow further evidence to be adduced, the question whether the Appellate Court exercised its discretion properly in refusing to admit such evidence seems to be clearly a question of law which we are entitled to consider in second appeal.

As regards clause (b) of Order XLI, rule 27, I am clear that 'or for any other substantial cause' is not governed by the expression "the Appellate Court requires." The 355th section in the old Civil Procedure Code (Act VIII of 1859) from which this Order XLI, rule 27 has come down clearly shows that "or for any other substantial cause" is an independent ground and is not governed by the words in the first portion of clause (b), there being no division into clauses in the old Act of 1859, section 355. It cannot be argued for a moment that if the Appellate Court notwithstanding that the condition in clause (a) has been fulfilled, (namely, the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred having refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted) refuses in appeal to admit such evidence, the second Appellate Court cannot interfere with that discretion so improperly exercised by the first Appellate Court. I do not see why when the condition in what I call the third clause, namely, the existence of any other substantial cause is fulfilled and yet the discretion to admit additional evidence in such a case is wrongly exercised by the first Appellate Court, the second Appellate Court should be prevented from interfering. As regards the Allahabad and Calcutta cases, if they meant more than that the discretion given in cases falling under clause (b) to the first Appellate Court should not be lightly interfered with by the second Appellate Court, I respectfully differ from those decisions. Let me put the following illustration. The trial Court in a clear case where it ought to have granted a review on the ground of conclusive evidence which was not in the power of a party to produce having been afterwards discovered rejects the application for review—such rejection is not appealable. But this Court has power under its general revisional powers to direct the trial Court to accept the application for review. If so, why should the Court be powerless because a second appeal has been preferred from the decision of an Appellate Court which, in a similarly clear case, refused to exercise its discretion to admit additional evidence, such a case being (as I said) fully analogous to an application for review? Further section 105 clause (1) shows that even where an appeal might not lie from an order made by the Appellate Court (such as an order refusing to admit additional evidence) where the decree of the Appellate Court itself is appealed against in second appeal, the error in the interlocutory order refusing to admit additional evidence may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of second appeal.

Again, suppose that treating the order of a District Court refusing to admit additional evidence as an independent order, a revision petition had been filed to this Court against that order, I see nothing to prevent us, in a clear case, from setting aside that order in revision. Why should such a prayer for revision of that order be not embodied as a ground in the memorandum of second appeal,

In the result, I agree with Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in saying that this Court has power in second appeal to consider the propriety of the exercise of the discretion of the District Judge as regards the admission of additional evidence though, of course, that discretion would not be interfered with lightly any more than the discretion of a Court rejecting a review petition, would be lightly interfered with in revision. I think that the power to consider and decide on the question should be affirmed as existing in this Court in second appeal.

Answered in the negative.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Trichinopoly, in Original Suit No. 89 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The judgment under appeal was pronounced irregularly during the Christmas Holidays on the last day of the year, and it is easy to understand why it is obscure and ill-arranged. But the facts in dispute, taken in order, are fairly simple. The plaintiff's allegations, which are traversed at each stage by his brothers, the defendants, are that in 1911 he and they and another brother, Sivasami, became divided except as regards certain houses, which were retained in common for convenience. Plaintiff, however, found cultivation of the isolated plots he received difficult and induced the others, except Sivasami, to agree to a re-adjustment of the various items by 3rd defence witness who is described as an arbitrator and gave what is called an award, Exhibit A, on 13th May 1913. This re-adjustment gave plaintiff the whole of his share in one village, Pachampet, subject to his paying Rs. 4,000 to defendants; and he took possession of the Pachampet land and paid Rs. 1,800 of this amount. Defendants, however, have subsequently ousted him and he, therefore, sues, offering to pay the balance due, to recover the land with profits.

The first matter on which the parties are at issue, the partition of 1911, can be dealt with shortly. Third defendant denied it in toto. Fourth defendant did not plead as to it explicitly, but put plaintiff to proof of all his allegations. First, and 2nd defendants said that there was only an attempted partition which came to nothing after a document detailing each brother's share had been signed by them, Sivasami and 4th defendant, but not by plaintiff or 3rd defendant, and that common enjoyment continued until 1913, when Sivasami insisted on enjoying what was intended to be his share separately, they and plaintiff continuing common enjoyment of the remainder. This is no doubt consistent with the evidence of plaintiff that the cultivation owing to the inconvenience of separate management was managed by 2nd defendant. He added, however, that the income was being divided and this agrees with the statement of 6th plaintiff's witness, Sivasami's brother-in law, who alone besides the parties has given direct evidence on the point. But it is clear that plaintiff's account represents the truth, the evidence of 3rd defence witness proceeds on the assumption that a re-adjustment of a previous division was in question. The pre-amble of Exhibit A will be given in the sequel and, whatever the effect of that document it involves that one partition had already taken place and, as 1st, 2nd, 4th defendants signed it, there can be no further question as regards them, the probability being, as the lower Court held, that the partition lists are with the 1st defendant. Sivasami certainly accepts the partition of 1911 as completed. The evidence of 3rd defendant, like that of 1st defendant, contains admissions, to which the lower Court has referred at length, involving that they became divided in 1911. Third defendant no doubt says that he was absent in the course of his employment in the Police and knew nothing of what was done. But he was only in the adjacent district, Madura, and in view of the considerations already referred to it is impossible to believe him. The lower Court's finding that the family became divided in 1911 and that, although the land may have been managed by the 2nd defendant, it was divided among the brothers, must in these circumstances be accepted.

The occurrences in 1913 are more obscure. It is admitted by all concerned that plaintiff and 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants at least joined in the proceedings which resulted in Exhibit A, and signed at the end of that document. The first question is whether it is, as plaintiff contends, a valid award by 3rd defence witness, as arbitrator between him and 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants. My conclusion is that it is not, because 3rd defendant did not join in the proceedings at any stage and because it is not an award at all. On the first point we have no doubt the evidence of plaintiff that the allotment made in 1911 being found inconvenient, he says by 1st and 2nd defendants, he agreed at their request to a reference of the whole matter to 3rd defence witness in order to re-adjustment and that all the brothers, including 3rd defendant, but not Sivasami, concurred therein, although there was no submission in writing. 2nd plaintiff's witness said that about the end of April 1913, Exhibit A being dated 13th May 1913, 1st, 3rd defendants came to plaintiff's house and 3rd defendant agreed with plaintiff that their dispute might be settled by 3rd defence witness. There is nothing definite against this witness. But he is uncorroborated he was not mentioned by plaintiff and there is nothing in the latter's evidence which clearly refers to this conversation; plaintiff in fact only said generally that 3rd defendant agreed to the reference, that no one else was present when he and 1st and 3rd defendants made it and that they made it in his house in April—May 1913. But 3rd defence witness spoke to no such interview or agreement and could not remember when he saw 3rd defendant last, except casually, before July 1913. After Exhibit A was drawn up, he tried to obtain 3rd defendant's signature to it but 3rd defendant refused to look at it and plaintiff on hearing of this said he would bring him round; and the remainder of the account given by 3rd defence witness, who is the only impartial witness regarding this part of the case, shows that in fact 3rd defendant's previous concurrence was unnecessary and need not be presumed to have been obtained for what actually was done. Another portion of the evidence, given by 5th and 6th plaintiff's witnesses is that 3rd defendant asked the former, who is father-in-law of plaintiff's son, whether he had paid plaintiff the Varadakshinai of Rs. 2,000 in connection with that marriage, adding that plaintiff was expected to pay him and others out of it in connection with the partition of their land. But both these witnesses are connected closely with plaintiff (though not with defendants) by marriage and it would not be safe to base any conclusion on their report of a casual conversation to which very little test by cross-examination can be applied. First defendant admits that in fact he received Rs. 1,300 from plaintiff about this time, but not in connection with the partition, and 7th plaintiff's witness, who was present, does not say on what account the money passed. There is in the circumstances, no reason for preferring the evidence of plaintiff to that of 1st defendant on this point. It is possible that 3rd defendant may, as 2nd plaintiff's witness says, on some visit to Trichinopoly have expressed his general willingness to abide by decision of 3rd defense witness. But neither the evidence of that witness nor of 5th and 6th plaintiff's witnesses justifies the conclusion that he joined in any definite submission to him or in accepting its result.

The alternative case that Exhibit A was not a valid award has been argued first on the ground that there could be no such award without a valid submission and there could be none without a matter in difference between the parties, not merely as here, a question, which they desired to have determined by a reference to another person. That is consistent with the decision in Collins v. Collins (1) and Carus Wilson & Green, In re (2) followed in Chooney Money Dassee v. Ram Kinkur Dutt (3), Macnaghten v. Rameshwar Singh (4). But the facts of this case afford clearer ground for a similar conclusion. For they are that there was not a submission and arbitration, but after discussion between 3rd defence witness and plaintiff, a mere suggestion of a settlement which the others were always free to accept or reject.

It is clear from the foregoing that very little assistance can be looked for from the parties' statements, since it has been found impossible to act on plaintiff's as regards the division in 1911. The remaining evidence as to the origin of Exhibit A, the alleged award, was given by 3rd defendant's witness. He is a Public Works Officer of some standing and a friend of the family, and his somewhat remote connection by marriage with 1st defendant does not justify any belief that he would be inimical to plaintiff. His account, which is clear and consistent, may accordingly be accepted as substantially the truth. It is that he was asked by 1st defendant to settle the difference between the brothers and bring about a division between them, as the existing arrangement of shares was not convenient. He sounded plaintiff, who explained his views and asked him to effect a distribution in accordance with them offering to keep all the land in one village, Pachampet, and to pay Rs. 2—3,000 to the other defendants in order to equalize the shares. Third defence witness returned to 1st and 2nd defendants, who objected to the exchange in itself and he then gave up the matter. Later plaintiff increased his offer to Rs. 4,000 and 1st and 2nd defendants, accepting it, all three asked 3rd defence witness to reduce these terms in writing in the form (here the difficulty arises) of an award, and 4th defendant, who came at this stage, also agreed. Accordingly, 3rd defence witness put down the terms with a pre amble, given him by 1st defendant, a Pleader, as follows:—"whereas you brothers (the five names are given) have requested me to settle some re-arrangement in the properties possessed and enjoyed by you as per a partition already arranged so as to secure more profits, I award the following":— and to the whole clause, signed by those present, was added "all will sign in this document, if you accept these arrangements as irrevocably binding on you all." Lastly Exhibit A (sic) containing a clearer and fuller statement of the provisions in Exhibit A regarding the financing of a litigation then pending in connection with the Pachampet land, was added subsequently by plaintiff and 3rd defence witness in consultation and signed separately by 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants.

If this evidence is accepted, as in the absence of better it must be, there was nothing determined or to be determined by 3rd defence witness, as arbitrator. For although he said that he obtained the value of the lands from plaintiff and a relative, one Narayanaswamy Iyer, once it had been settled that one sharer was to have the Pachampet land, the only further question was how much he should pay the others; and that was settled not by any adjudication, but the acceptance of the last of plaintiff's successive offers. Third defence witness further said that he wanted to keep Exhibit A until regular documents of exchange were executed and that, there being no pretence of 3rd defendant's actual adhesion to Exhibit A at the time he himself added the last clause. This clause is clearly inconsistent with the character of the document as an award. In favour of that character there is only the pre amble and 3rd defense witnesse's signature. But for the former 1st defendant and the other parties were responsible and as regards the latter its position, not where an arbitrator's signature naturally would be, but at the left hand side, the prominent place being taken by the signatures of plaintiff and 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants, is significant. Neither the use of the word "award" nor the signature can prevail to fix a lay man, such as 3rd defence witness, with a quasi judicial character, which on his own showing he did not possess and with which the final clause cannot be reconciled. We have been pressed on these facts with Gobardhan Das v. Jai Kishen Das (5) in which an award was enforced, although it had been reached by the arbitrators without any judicial consideration of the matter in dispute and was merely an adoption of the settlement agreed on and brought to them by the parties. It is unnecessary to express an opinion as to the soundness of that decision, because it dealt with a regular submission to and appointment of arbitrators, whilst here there was none. The conclusion must be that 3rd defence witness was a mediator not an arbitrator, and that Exhibit A is operative, if at all, between plaintiff and 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants who signed its final clause, only as a contract, the terms of which are embodied in the prior portion. Against 3rd defendant, who never joined in it, it can have no operation whatever.

So far, therefore, as plaintiff's suit is founded on an award it must fail. But, although an award is referred to throughout the plaint and possession is claimed in pursuance of it, we have been asked to grant relief, after allowing any necessary amendments, on some other construction of the averments; and first on the basis that the claim is to a division of the property assigned to plaintiff and 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants in 1911. But plaintiff's own statement in paragraph 5 of the plaint is that a specific share was then assigned to each brother and no reunion has been alleged, in virtue of which any joint or common property can be available for division. Next the suggestion is that Exhibit A series constitute a contract, either a completed transfer of property entitling plaintiff to an immediate decree for possession, or an agreement to transfer it, on which the suit lies against 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants for possession and specific performance. But, apart from other difficulties, the claim in the first of these forms is open to the objection that it depends on Exhibit A which must for this purpose be read as creating a right to property of the value of more than Rs. 100 and, being unregistered cannot be proved, and the decision in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (6) which after full consideration of Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (7) and Venkayyamma Rao v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao (8) has been followed by a majority of a Full Bench of this Court in Ramanathan Chetty v. Ranganathan Chetty (9) entails that no decree for possession can be given unless the title is completed by one for specific performance. The claim, therefore, can be considered only in the 2nd form above referred to, Exhibit A being regarded as covered by section 17 (2) (v) Registration Act. As was the case in Kurri Veera Reddi v. Kurri Bapireddi (6) plaintiff here alleges that he was in possession and was ousted by defendants; and no doubt his plaint, which at present asks only for possession, can easily be amended by the addition of a prayer for specific performance by execution of conveyances by the defendants concerned. In these circumstance if the evidence, on which a decree can be passed on the plaint as amended, is before the Court or can easily be obtained and defendants can be compensated by costs for any prejudice they have sustained or may sustain, the proper course is clear. It is, however, denied that these conditions are fulfilled as regards the defence based either on limitation or the merits.

Turning to the merits, the suit was filed against four persons for possession on the award and the proposed amendment will convert it into one against three of them, each of whom is to exchange his land in Pachampet for that, which plaintiff received in other villages in 1911. The first question which 1st, 2nd and the 4th defendants will be able to raise will accordingly be whether Exhibit A with their signature represents a completed agreement at all. For they may urge with reference to the absence of the 3rd defendant's signature and even, though the form of the final clause of the document does not support their contention directly, that "the mere fact of execution by one does not bind him conclusively, when that has been done on the faith that all shall execute, and any one shall refuse." Latch v. Wedlake (10).

And if it is found that the agreement was formally completed, that will be only the beginning of the inadequacy of plaintiff's averments and of the necessity for fresh enquiry. Exhibit A provides, as already stated, for the exchange of the land of 1st to 4th defendants and also for the payment by the plaintiff of Rs. 4,000 to the four in order to equalize his share with theirs. As regards this payment plaintiff has repeated here his offer made at the trial to pay this sum for the share of 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants only without abatement on account of that of 3rd defendant, which they cannot give him. But as regards their inability to perform the agreement, as it was made, by the conveyance of the 3rd defendant's share with their own, he is constrained to rely on sections 15 and 16, Specific Relief Act. These two sections provide for distinct classes of cases in which part performance can be claimed. But the separate provision made for these classes does not entail that the defence implicitly referred to in section 16, that the two parts of the contract are interdependent and must be performed together, if at all, is not always available; and that is what defendants rely on here contending that they have had no opportunity to put it forward hitherto and should not be called on to make it after the interval which has elapsed.

This defence is relied on in its more peremptory form as resting on what is referred to in Lumley v. Ravenscroft (11) as the general rule that, when one person is jointly interested in an estate with another and purports to deal with the entirety, performance will not be granted against him as to his share and this is no doubt the basis of the decision in Price v. Griffith (12). But both these cases related to property enjoyed jointly or in common, the one to part of a London house and the other to a Colliery, whereas here defendant's position is much weaker, since they are to be treated merely as persons who have combined to sell land, parts of which each of them and another person own individually and both decisions must be read in the light of the observations of Farwell, J. in Hexter v. Pearce (13) with reference to the susceptibility of the different portions of the property of separate enjoyments. If the plaintiff is able to show that the portions of the property, which he now claims, can reasonably be enjoyed independently of the remainder he can succeed.

The decision on this question will involve not only further inquiry, but at least further pleading. Exhibit A contemplates a surrender by plaintiff to all four defendants jointly of his land outside Pachampet since it includes no specification of the particular portion of it, which each is to take. Plaintiff has not offered 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants more than a three-quarter share of that land; and it will first be necessary for him to show that, if there was a contract by the three at all, it was a contract to accept only this three-quarter share. It will next be necessary for him to specify the lands he offers as composing this three-quarter share; and, when it has been ascertained that this share has been fixed fairly with reference to extent and quality it will still be necessary to enquire whether the fact that the plaintiff, and not 3rd defendant, holds the remaining quarter will so affect the enjoyment with reference to access, convenience of management and the like that the contract as to the remaining three quarters can reasonably be separately enforced.

The difficulty of the various enquiries, the necessity for which has been indicated, must necessarily be increased by their postponement; and their postponement is the consequence of plaintiff's unjustified attempt to secure 3rd defendant's share in the Pachampet land by improperly representing Exhibit A as an award. In the circumstances 1st, 2nd and 4th defendants will be prejudiced substantially and in a manner for which costs cannot compensate them, if they are asked to submit to such enquiries at this stage; and the claim to an amendment, which would entail them, or to a decree on the basis now proposed must, therefore, be rejected.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The administration of a mutt, asthal or similar religious endowment in India must be not for the personal ends of the manager, but entirely for and on behalf of and in the interests of the institution itself. In whomsoever the ownership of the property of such institutions vests, the nature of the ownership is an ownership in trust for the institution itself. [p. 298, col. 2; p. 299, col. 1.]

It is the duty of the manager of such a mutt to refrain from the personal enjoyment of surplus income, and to add it to capital, and this is equally the case whether the title is in the gurukkal or spiritual head, which is the more common case, or in trustees. [p. 300, col. 2.]

The general case in such mutts is that the ownership of the property is vested in the mohunt or spiritual head. But this is not an invariable rule, and there are many exceptions depending on the constitution, usage and custom of the particular mutt. [p. 299, col. 1.]

It is sufficient to constitute adverse possession that the person now claiming to be owner should have stood by while others continued to possess not by derivative title but in practical contravention of his alleged rights. It is not necessary to prove that such claimant protested against the violation of his rights, and that the possession went on despite such protest. [p 299, col. 2.]

In suits to obtain control or management of a religious institution, when no misapplication is proved, and the defendant admits himself to be a trustee for the institution, the ordinary limitation of 12 years applies. [p. 300, col. 1.]

The ultimate purpose of the Inam Register, compiled in Madras in or about 1864, was to determine whether or not the lands comprised therein were tax free. But the preparation of that register was a great act of State and the result of elaborate enquiries and though the statements as to tenure set forth in the register cannot displace actual and authentic evidence in individual cases, they are entitled, in the absence of such evidence, to very great weight. Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court (Wallis, Offg. Chief Justice, and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.), dated the 10th August 1914, printed as 33 Ind. Cas. 216, varying two decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Madura (East.)

FACTS.—This case related to the management of an ancient Mutt, known as the Patharakudi Mutt, of which the plaintiff became head (Mathadhipati) in 1867. In 1906 he instituted two suits before the Subordinate Judge. In the second suit (No. 51 of 1906) which related to Patharakudi village, one of the villages owned by the Mutt, plaintiff alleged that from the date of his appointment in 1867 he assumed charge of the Mutt and its properties, and managed its affairs: that as he was rather young at the time, and some of the disciples of the Mutt, who were rich and influential Nattukottai Chetties, offered to assist him, he allowed them to manage such affairs as his agents under his direct control and supervision: that for some years he was satisfied with the management, "but latterly the Chetties began to create documents without the knowledge of the plaintiff in their own names in respect of the Mutt properties with the fraudulent intention of asserting a title as trustees to the Mutt and its properties:" that he, therefore, dismissed them from their position as agents, but that they then, after unsuccessfully charging plaintiff with rioting, took proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, with the result that the Magistrate ordered that the Mutt should remain in plaintiff's possession but that the village should remain under attachment until the decision of the Civil Court. Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to a declaration of his right to the said village as head of the said Mutt, and asked for a decree,

"to declare that the defendants have no right to the village of Patharakudi and that the plaintiff as head of the Mutt, is entitled to the possession of the village of Patharakudi, being item No. 1 in the schedule annexed to the plaint, and to receive the income of the same from the hands of the Receiver."

In their written statement of defence the present appellants set out from their point of view the history of the institution and its management, and point out that the term "Mutt" was not accurately descriptive of the institution, and in paragraphs 12, 14, 15 and 16 they pleaded as follows:—

(12) Plaintiff and his predecessors are known as Nagara Gurukkal, and the matam erected by Chetties as aforesaid at Patharakudi for their own private accommodation possesses none of the essential characteristics of a Mutt. The expression Patharakudi matam is only a loose, convenient and compendious mode of describing the charity founded by the Nagarathars as aforesaid.

(14) These defendants submit that from time immemorial it is the Chetties that have been exclusively managing the said villages and applying the income for feeding Brahmins in the Chattram and other purposes aforesaid.

(15) That owing to the manifest difficulty and inconvenience of the whole body of Chetties, or Nagarathars as they are called, taking part in the executive management of the charity and its endowments, eight families, representing eight out of the nine broad divisions into which the Chetty community (according to the temples to which they belong) is divided, were entrusted with the said management, and by way of avoiding the drawbacks inseparable from such a system of administration, it has been the immemorial custom for the senior members for the time being of the said families to undertake the management of routine matters by rotation, two for each year, except in matters calling for the co-operation and conjoint action of all the term-holders.

(16) These defendants state that on the death of the former Gurukkal in 1863, the then representatives of the eight families aforesaid, in accordance with the usage by which the Nagarathars alone have the right of appointing and removing their Gurukkal, appointed plaintiff as their priest.

They further denied that they were ever the plaintiff's agents, and pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation.

The first suit (No. 50 of 1906) was on similar lines, but related to some other villages, which the Chetties as trustees of the Mutt had leased to a tenant. The Magistrate had decided that these villages should remain in such tenants' possession pending the decision of the Civil Court.

In the first suit plaintiff claimed three years' profits at Rs. 3,000 a year, and in the second suit he claimed the income actually in the Receiver's hands

The Subordinate Judge tried both suits together and disposed of them in one judgment, the material parts of which were as follows:—

"On the whole, I think that the plaint institution is a religious institution of Acharayas or Gurus, whose disciples are the Nattukkottai Chetties, more or less analogous to the Udipi and other institutions which also are institutions and seats of the Acharyas of different sects of Brahmins or Sudras according as the institution is a Brahmin or a Sudra one, and is presided over by a celibate Brahmin instead of by a Sanyasi or Pandaram as in these classes of Mutts, and has been endowed by Rajahs for supporting the Gurukkal in his dignity as Guru or head of the institution as well as his dependants, for the support of the Poojah of his private idol or Lingam and for feeding Brahmins, as appertaining to his institution. In the absence of any evidence about a special constitution regarding its management, &c., the head of the institution is the beneficiary entitled to the income of the endowment, granted in this manner, subject perhaps to his liability to maintain and perpetuate the institution as a corporation sole according to the ruling in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (1). I, therefore, hold hat the Gurrukkal of the plaint institution, i.e., the plaintiff is the person who is ordinarily, according to the nature and character of the institution, entitled to the management and possession of the plaint villages which are its endowments and is both the manager and the absolute beneficiary of the income during his life as regards the entire income, subject only to his liability to maintain the institution.

"Apart from the nature of this institution, which leads to the aforesaid conclusion, I am further of opinion, on the clear evidence in the case, that the Gurukkals of the plaint institution, as the successors of the original grantee of the endowments for this institution, are the persons who are the beneficiaries and trustees and managers of the endowments, and are entitled, therefore, to their possession and enjoyment, as well as to the enjoyment of the income, so long as they are the Gurukkals and the heads of the Mutt. I further held that the defendants, Chetties, had no such right as managers or trustees in their own right either by virtue of the original constitution or of any special custom or valid scheme for management. On the evidence I cannot find this to be in its nature a caste institution of the kind of Dharma Sivacharya's Mutt of the Madras Beri Chetties caste [Thambu Chetti v. A. T. Arundel (2) and Krishnasami Chetti v. Virasami Chetti (3)] belonging to the Nattukottai Chetties and the endowments consisting of the plaint villages to have been granted to it as such institution . . . . . Thus, for these reasons, I hold that, according to the nature of this institution and according to the evidence in the cases, the plaintiff's predecessors and the plaintiff have been the holders, superintendents, and managers and the beneficiaries of the endowments of the plaint institution and are, therefore, entitled to its income subject only to its maintenance; and I further find that the hereditary title of eight families of Chetties on behalf of Nagarathars to be its huqdars and trustees, either according to the original constitution of the institution or the terms of the original grant of the endowments or according to any custom sprung up subsequently, has not been made out.

"The evidence clearly establishes that the Chetties have assumed possession of the Mutt and its endowments on the death of Senapathy Gurukkal, as the persons interested in the institution and, therefore, entitled to its management, and as its trustees, that they have been claiming to be acting and have acted as such trustees, and that the plaintiff has all along acquiesced in such management by them and abstained from interfering with the same. At the same time I have further found that the defendants have not proved such rights to have sprung from the nature or constitution of the institution as originally founded or from any scheme of management made by them and the Gurukkals, or from any custom attaching to the institution, and that the defendants' case of the hereditary title of eight families to the management has not also been made out. Nor is it clearly made out that though the plaintiff is not shown to have interfered with their management and administration of the endowments from 1863, he was still excluded from participating in such management. The evidence shows only that some Chetties or others, sometimes two, and sometimes only one, and sometimes more than two, managed the endowments, exercised supervision and control, not as agents or in behalf of the plaintiff, but professedly in behalf of the general body of the Nagara Chetties, alleged to be their huqdars who apparently acquiesced in such management, as the absence of objections on their part may be supposed to imply, just as the plaintiff's acquiescence also is implied in the same-way. In these circumstances I find the first part of issue No. 6 in each suit against the plaintiff. I further find the Chetties to have been holding the management as trustees and not as the plaintiff's agents, during the plaintiff's pleasure ever since 1863, though I have held on issue No. 5 that they have not established the hereditary right as founders and their representatives; the express exclusion also of the plaintiff from such management and administration has not been affirmatively made out."

The result of the said findings was, that the said Subordinate Judge held that because the plaintiff had not interfered with or had acquiesced in the joint management of the Mutt properties by the Chetties, the defendants were entitled to manage the properties along with the plaintiff. The Court, therefore, made decrees declaring that the plaintiff as head of the Mutt was entitled to be a trustee and manager conjointly with the Chetties and to possession and management thereof along with the defendants representing the Chetty community, and that the plaintiff as head of the Mutt was entitled to the entire beneficial enjoyment of the income of the said properties, and dismissing the plaintiff's claim to exclusive possession and trusteeship and mesne profits.

Both parties appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Madras. The four appeals were heard together by a Division Bench composed of Sir John Wallis, Officiating Chief Justice, and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., who delivered separate judgments on the 10th August 1914. The learned Judges of the High Court reversed the finding of the said Subordinate Judge in so far as it was based on the alleged acquiescence of the plaintiff and affirmed all his other findings. They concurrently held that the defendants had failed to establish that the Chetties or any of them had ever held possession of or managed the endowed properties of the Mutt adversely to the plaintiff. The learned Chief Justice observed as follows:—

"As already stated, the Subordinate Judge has found, and the evidence bears him out, that after the plaintiff's appointment the management was left very largely in the hands of individual Chetties, who are not shown to have been appointed in any particular way, but are treated by him as representing the Chetty caste as a whole, and he has come to the conclusion that through them the caste acquired by prescription against the plaintiff the right of managing the endowment, though as the plaintiff was not altogether excluded, he finds that the right of management acquired by the caste was not exclusive of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff is entitled to manage jointly with the caste. It is not easy to imagine what sort of joint management there could be by the Guru and the whole Chetty caste, but it is not necessary to go into this as, in my opinion, the large part in the management taken by certain influential and energetic Chetties is not shown to have been adverse to the plaintiff. It is not enough to show that the plaintiff knew of the large part in the management taken by individual Chetties, it must be shown clearly that it was adverse to him; and this in my opinion should be very clearly made out where the relation between the parties was that of religious teacher and adherents, and for some time after the plaintiff's succession the facts proved admit of the interpretation that they were acting as de facto guardians of the minor. In view of the intimate and confidential relations of the parties, the Courts, I think, should require adverse possession to the knowledge of the plaintiff to be very clearly made out, and I think that in this respect the defendants have failed to discharge the burden which lies on them . . . . . The evidence appears to me to lend itself as readily to the view that the acts done by these individual Chetties were done on behalf of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge has not taken the view contended for by either side, but has come to the conclusion that the Chetties acquired a right of managing jointly with the plaintiff. I do not say such a right of joint management could not be acquired but I should certainly expect evidence of incidents of joint management, and it cannot be based upon the ground that, though the Chetties actually managed, there is no evidence that the plaintiff was excluded from the management. I find no evidence of such joint management or of the manner in which it was to be enjoyed."

Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri came to the same conclusion.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. Frank Romer, K. C. (with him Mr. Kenworthy Brown), for the Appellants.—In each case of this kind the position and rights of the Mohant and the manner in which the property is held, depend upon the custom of the particular institution.

Ram Parkash v. Anand Das (4).

There is no direct evidence as to the original constitution of this religious endowment, but there is a large body of evidence of usage which establishes our contentions, which are that the Chetties have a right to be the trustees of the Mutt, and as such trustees to manage Patharakudi and other villages belonging to the Mutt. This is not a Mutt in its primary sense: it is a religious endowment of the Chetties, and the plaintiff was the Gurukkal or priest of the Chetty community. We do not deny that the plaintiff is the head of the Mutt or that he is entitled to something out of it, but we deny his right to take possession of the endowment villages from us. We do not claim to be entitled for our own benefit or otherwise than as trustees but we claim the right to manage. The evidence establishes that the plaintiff's predecessor Senapati was Mohant for fifty years prior to 1862, and that the Chetties have been in possession and have managed as trustees from before Senapati's time. Under Madras Regulation VII of 1817 the general superintendence of all endowments in the Madras Presidency was vested in the Board of Revenue, and provision was made in sections 10 and 13 for the appointment of managers to exercise superintendence. In accordance with that Regulation petitions were filed and it was recorded that the villages of this Mutt belonged to the Nagara Chetties, who were the trustees. In 1852 there were other proceedings showing that the Chetties were the managers. Apart from anything else, however, the proceedings of the Inam Commission in 1864 were, we submit, conclusive: the Inam Register of that year shows that the Chetties were "huqdars" of the villages as trustees of the Mutt. Before making that entry the Commission carefully examined all the title deeds of the Mutt. Tickets were given to the Chetties in respect of Patharakudi village: and following the Inam Commissioner's Report, a formal grant was made to one of the Chetties as Dharmakartha or manager of the Mutt. Under the "rules for the adjudication and settlement of the Inam lands of the Madras Presidency" the Chetties have the right, after these proceedings, to remain in management of the village.

It is not, however, a case of whether we are entitled or not: the onus is on plaintiff who claims possession and has to prove his right to it. The Subordinate Judge rightly disbelieved that we were in possession as plaintiff's agents. The High Court have come to a contrary conclusion, but their finding is not supported by any reliable evidence. Both the lower Courts seem to have been obsessed with the word "Mutt;" the Subordinate Judge has mainly on that ground held that plaintiff is entitled to share in the management, the High Court that he is entitled to the sole management. Cases are not infrequent where the management of a Mutt is vested in a Dharmakartha other than the Mohunt: Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v. Vidyanidhi Tirtha Swami (1).

[VISCOUNT CAVE referred to Navroji Manekji Wadia v. Dastur Kharsedji Mancherji ( ).].

Further, the suit is long since barred by limitation. The defendants do not claim to be entitled otherwise than as trustees, and the ordinary twelve years' limit applies: Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (6).

Here the Chetties have admittedly been in possession, and exercising all acts of ownership, for over 50 years. It is not for me to prove that plaintiff explicitly recognised our ownership: it is for him to show we were his agents, which he has completely failed to do.

The plaintiff here claimed to be entitled as sole beneficiary: to have the income to do just what he liked with. Strictly his suit should be dismissed: but such a result would be unsatisfactory, and we are willing the case should be referred back for the settlement of a scheme as to the trust property, should the Board think such a course desirable.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown followed, and referred to Castes and Tribes of Southern India, by Thurston, Volume V, pages 250—254. Though called a Mutt, this is not a monastic institution: if it were, plaintiff could not be its head: he is not a celibate: he lived in the agraharam with his natural family: he is neither a monk nor a prior. The evidence shows that he had resources independent of the Mutt property, e. g., Upadesam fees: that alone distinguishes this from a Mutt properly so called. You can have in India a religious endowment which is a purely caste institution. Krishnasami Chetti v. Virasami Chetti (3).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr Dube, for the Respondent.—The only point is whether the grant here was made to the plaintiff's predecessors or to the Chetties. The lower Courts have concurred in finding that this is a Mutt of the usual type such as Udipi and other Dharmapuram Mutts in Southern India. The village being part of the Mutt property, the plaintiff by virtue of his office as head of the Mutt is entitled to hold and manage it and to enjoy the proceeds. The findings of the Inam Commission are not against plaintiff's contention: at the time of the Commission there was no head of the Mutt and so the proceedings in connection with the Mutt properties had to be taken by the worshippers and the well-wishers of the Mutt. It is not shown that the Chetties ever asserted any right adversely to the head of the Mutt, and both Courts find that no such adverse assertion of right has ever been made. According to the evidence, the Chetties helped in the management with the express or implied consent or acquiescence of the plaintiff, and there is no evidence that they ever did anything against his wishes until the events referred to in the plaint. Before plaintiff's appointment the title was throughout recognised to be vested in the Mathadhipati or head of the Mutt. The title deeds which the Chetties put forward in 1832 and in the Inam enquiry were in the name of the head of the Mutt.

Plaintiff is not claiming the income in the Receiver's hands for his own personal enjoyment, but as head of the Mutt and on behalf of the Mutt. Defendants' case is that the institution is not a Mutt and that plaintiff is a paid servant of the Chetty community and liable to dismissal by the Chetties: this case has been negatived by both Courts below. This is not a caste institution but a Mutt: the management of all the Mutt property vests in the head of the Mutt: Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kunari Debi (7); Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (8). There is nothing to show that the position of this Mutt differs from that of an ordinary Mutt. There is no certain evidence as to the constitution of the Mutt, but throughout its history it has always been assumed that the whole property vested in the head. The Chetties have adduced no reliable evidence that they were appointed trustees of the Mutt in regard to any of its property.

The Courts below were right in holding that plaintiff's suit was not barred by limitation. It is not really a suit in ejectment, but one for declaration of title: it followed on proceedings under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The defendants have failed to establish any possession adverse to the head of the Mutt.

The terms of the decree made by the Court below indicate that plaintiff is entitled to draw the surplus income in the Receiver's hands as head of the Mutt; this does not mean he is to spend it on himself.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 10th August 1914,* which varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, dated the 19th October 1908. The exact terms of these judgments will be afterwards referred to. It is necessary, however, in order to understand them to keep clearly in view the form and nature of the suit as brought.

The suit was brought by the present respondent "to declare that the defendants have no right to the village of Patharakudi, and that the plaintiff as head of the Mutt is entitled to the possession of the village . . . and to receive the income of the same from the hands of the Receiver."

The village is part of the property of a Mutt. It has been long administered by the appellants, who are Nagara Chetties. Broadly speaking, the contest in the case—and for the purpose of stating this contest colourless terms are employed—is between the head of the Mutt on the one hand, who claims in virtue of his office to be entitled to the management and possession of the entire property of the Mutt; while, on the other hand, the appellants claim that they are entitled as trustees or managers of the part of the property of the institution which is in suit to be continued in the possession and management thereof. The form of the action brought in these circumstances is a suit for possession instituted by the head of the Mutt, who does not have that possession, against the trustees or managers, who and whose predecessors for very many years have had it.

In such circumstances there naturally arises a subsidiary question of limitation, but their Lordships are unwilling to have the suit disposed of merely on the latter ground, and the case was argued before the Board with much fulness on its merits. In the Courts below this appears also to have been done, and in these Courts judgments of much elaboration were pronounced. Again, however, it must be stated that the suit is one the substantial aim of which is the eviction of the present possessors at the instance of the respondent, with the substitution in lieu thereof of possession and enjoyment by the respondent of the property in question, and of its entire income.

In the village of Patharakudi there are:—

(1) A temple of the god specially revered by the Nagara community, of which the appellants are members and have acted as representatives. This community forms a sub caste of the Chetties;

(2) A residence for the Nagara priest or Gurukkal;

(3) A shelter house or matam, for the use of agarathars when they resort to the place for religious exercises;

(4) A choultry, where food is distributed to Brahmins; and

(5) A street of houses forming part of a great enlargement made in recent times by the Chetties—that is, by the appellants and their predecessors. This street of houses is an agraharam. It is said to be the usual adjunct of a Hindu temple, and to be for the accommodation of Brahmins or Brahminical worshippers; while

(6) There is the village itself and the lands belonging to it, the income of which falls into the general revenue of the Mutt as an institution.

In consequence of a certain assumption throughout the evidence of the knowledge of distinctions between these various parts of the property, there is a lack of clearness on that subject notwithstanding the voluminous evidence; but, speaking generally, their Lordships may assume that the temple or place of worship, together with the residence of the respondent as spiritual head of the institution, the shelter house, and the choultry, or place for the feeding of Brahmins, stand on one side, while on the other stands the remainder of the property.

The latter is now in the hands of the Receiver, and has been so for some years. Their Lordships are relieved of difficulty in regard to the distinctions referred to by this fact of a Receivership. The suit has reference, and reference alone, to the property which is in the Receiver's hands. His management has not interfered with the purely spiritual functions of the gurukkal and with those parts of the property, like the place of worship and his own residence, which naturally attach to the performance of such functions by him.

In the plaint the respondent treats the other parts of the property under the general term "village", and this is quite a convenient term. His position on the pleading is that he, the Mohunt, was all along in the possession and enjoyment of the village. In the course of the case, however, no substantial denial could be offered to the fact, which was notorious, that the actual possessors were the Chetties. The averment is that "the Chetties were managing the affairs of the Mutt only as agents under the plaintiff and under his supervision, and were at no time in possession of the village of Patharakudi, the same having all along remained in the possession and enjoyment of the plaintiff." This is the case attempted to be set up by the respondent and by certain witnesses whom he produced, but they were disbelieved.

The respondent was appointed head of the Mutt in the year 1867. There seems little reason to doubt that a decree in the terms sought by him would, to say the least, involve a very considerable subversion of the mode of occupation, possession and management which have obtained during his entire term of office. Under a decree in terms of his plaint he could dismiss the Chetties from office, and assume possession and management himself or by his nominees. Of course, if he had hitherto been, as is alleged in his suit, in possession and management himself, the demand made in the plaint would have been the natural relief sought. It is, therefore, important to see how the facts on this point stand.

Their Lordships have very carefully considered the evidence; and they see no reason to doubt the soundness of the conclusion thereon arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge in that part of his pronouncement which is now cited. It is as follows:—

"Except the vague and meagre oral evidence, there is not much evidence on the plaintiff's side in this period, while considerable documentary evidence, consisting of accounts, receipts, official correspondence and other papers, has been adduced on the defendants' side to prove their management as trustees and huqdars. I may at once state here that the general effect of the entire evidence of this period is to show, beyond all doubt, the full and complete management, control and supervision of the endowments and their income by some Chetties or others to the knowledge of the plaintiff, who appears to have all through acquiesced in the same and not to have interfered with the Chetties in such management. The plaintiff has virtually conceded this state of things, not only in the present case, but has also done so in his previous depositions (Exhibits IV, VI and VIA), in all of which he has unequivocally admitted the management of the Chetties and the fact of the accounts, etc., being kept, checked and controlled by them. His explanation for this state of things, which his witnesses also try to make out, and which, he contends, is corroborated by a few documents on his side, is that the Chetties did all that business only under his orders, and that their management was never independent and exclusive of his rights as the proprietor and head of the Mutt and its sole beneficiary entitled to appropriate the income as he wished. . . . . .

"The Chetties constructed the houses and the new matam, etc. (Exhibits VI, XVI, XXI, VII, VIIIE, VIIIF, XXVIIIA and the defendant's 1st, 7th and 10th witnesses), repaired tanks, etc., paid road-cess, etc., and in fact did everything which an owner or manager or trustee must do for the management and administration of the property. It is also shown by the same evidence that money and paddy payable to the plaintiff's house and to the plaintiff for pooiah were treated as amounts standing to their credits and were paid accordingly; that moneys for the plaintiff's expenses for his trips to Chidambaram immediately after the installation, for his visit to Sringeri Swamigal at Kunnakudy, and for his Benares trip on pilgrimage, were all paid after correspondence between the servants and the Kariakkar Chetties.

"The Revenue and Zamin Officers also seem to have recognised the Chetties as huqdars and issued the road cess pattas and notices, etc., sometimes generally, to huqdars or managers without names, and sometime to Nachiappa Chetty, one of the eight persons already referred to as huqdar."

Other portions of the learned Judge's opinion deal with the case attempted to be made by the plaintiff that all this possession and management by the huqdars was as his agents. He brings that matter to a point by saying, "In this case the Chetties were in management in their own right as huqdars before the plaintiff's appointment, and continued as such afterwards also. The plaintiff does not prove his case of their management as his agents, or the commencement of their management with his or his predecessors' permission." It might, in the view of the Board, have been open upon the evidence to make upon the allegation of agency a much more emphatic pronouncement in the negative, but it is not necessary for their Lordships to go into that; they are in agreement with the learned Subordinate Judge that the case of agency is not made out, and that accordingly the attempt of the plaintiff either to ground or to fortify his right on possession either by himself or by others has entirely failed. They see no reason to differ from the view of the Judge, who holds that the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses upon this topic cannot be believed.

The period of time over which the possession referred to extends covers more than half a century. But the documents in this case are of an important public character and carry the record of this Mutt much further back. As already stated, the plaintiff's appointment to the headship took place in the year 1867. But the Inam Register for the year 1864 has been produced, and to it their Lordships attach importance. It is true that the making of this Register was for the ultimate purpose of determining whether or not the lands were tax free. But it must not be forgotten that the preparation of this Register was a great act of State, and its preparation and contents were the subject of much consideration under elaborately detailed reports and minutes. It is to be remembered that the Inam Commissioners through their officials made enquiry on the spot, heard evidence and examined documents, and with regard to each individual property the Government was put in possession not only of the conclusion come to as to whether the land was tax free, but of a statement of the history and tenure of the property itself. While their Lordships do not doubt that such a report would not displace actual and authentic evidence in individual cases; yet the Board, when such is not available, cannot fail to attach the utmost importance, as part of the history of the property, to the information set forth in the Inam Register.

From that it appears as follows:—

"Villages of Variyanendal, Surakudi, Kanjiram Kurchi Yendal and Hamlet Padattanendal.

"1. These are the four villages in the Zemindari of Sivaganga. These were granted by Savundara Pandiyan King in column 11 for the support of a matam in Pathirakudi village. This has no patta. This is an ancient grant. It appears by the tradition that the object of the grant is to keep the matam which is presided by the priest of Yalayattangudy Nattukottai Chetties efficiently by feeding Brahmins in a chattram situated close to the matam, by worshipping the Swamy in Palambady Nader Koil situated close to the matam, and by maintaining the dignity of the priest or Guru. Now the object of the grant is efficiently kept up by doing all the above things. The Chetties, who are very rich, spend considerable sum annually for feeding Brahmins, etc. The priest of the matam died about fifteen months ago. The Chetties are in contemplation in electing a priest for the matam. It appears that when the priest was alive, some of the principal Chetties, whose names are given in column 16, were managing the affairs of the matam and of the villages attached to it. The managers or trustees are elected by the Chetty community itself. Thus, the grant falls under rule III, clause 1. Tax free.

"This is a hereditary grant. This is in uninterrupted possession of its holders since the date of the grant. The village is entered as Pathirakudi matam village in all the accounts in column 12. The persons in column 16 are now trustees of the matam. They are managing the affairs thereof."

In further observations made by the Deputy Collector who signs the Register, it is stated that "the trustees in column 16 added 126½ acres of wet and 250 acres of dry to the area entered in the account;" and in another note it is added: "The matam is under the management of the trustees with their villages." Further, a matter of not inconsiderable importance is contained in these words:—"The Zamindar has no objection to registering the names of the trustees here." The names of the trustees are duly set forth in the column headed "Particulars regarding present owner;" and these particulars are headed "Pathirakudi matam Trustees." Eight trustees who are Chetties, beginning with Natchiappa Chetty, are then mentioned, the name and age of each Chetty being given. As to the title to the property, that is set forth in a further column as "To be confirmed under rule III, clause 1. Tax free."

This makes it of importance to consider the rule thus referred to. It is one of the "Rules for the adjudication and settlement of the inam lands of the Madras Presidency," being part of Order 116 printed at page 211 of the Standing Orders of the Board of Revenue. It is in these terms:—

"If the inam was given for religious or charitable objects, such as for the support of temples, mosques, colleges, choultries, and other public buildings or institutions, or for services therein, whether held in the names of the institutions or of the persons rendering the services, it will be continued to the present holders and their successors, and will not be subject to further interference, so long as the buildings or institutions are maintained in an efficient state, and the services continue to be performed according to the conditions of the grant."

It thus appears to their Lordships to be quite clear that the eight Chetties named, who are stated to be trustees, were in 1864 confirmed, after enquiry and in terms of the Rule, as holders of the village. And unless the Rule was to be departed from, the inam "will be continued to the present holders and their successors and will not be subject to further interference" so long as two things happen, namely, the buildings are efficiently maintained and the services are continued. Both of these things have happened, and accordingly the adjudication stands: the Chetties were the holders, they were continued as such, and they were not to be interfered with.

Two points may be mentioned in connection with this adjudication. In the first place the most important person, apart from the institution itself, was the Zemindar, from whose predecessors undoubtedly the original title to the lands had flowed; and it will be noted that the Zemindar had no objection to the registration of the trustees as proposed. In the next place, it is a mistake to treat the transactions of 1864 as merely bearing upon that year. They form, in their Lordships' judgment, a record of an anterior state of matters, from which record of possession, etc., a conclusion is formed by the Commissioner as to what was the real state of the title.

Following the report, a title deed was granted by the Inam Commissioner, on the 3rd June 1864, to the Dharmakartha of Patharakudi Mutt, that is to say, to the trustee or manager of the charity, and in this title deed it is stated, first:—

"On behalf of the Governor in-Council of Madras I acknowledge your title to a religious endowment matam or inam, situated in . . . . held for the support of the Pagoda called . . . in that village . . .

"(2) This inam is confirmed to you and your successors, subject to the existing quit rent of Rs. 132-11 1 per annum, to be held without interference so long as the conditions of the grant are duly fulfilled."

But at least one further section of the earlier history of this Mutt can be found. Their Lordships attach weight to the transactions of the year 1832. On the 30th of April of that year a petition was presented by the Zemindar, narrating that the Nagara Chetties originally came from the Tanjore Division and settled long ago in his Zemindari and that their family deities are in that jurisdiction. He stated that "on account of the performance of those charities, the said Chetties have been paying the poruppu due to the Sircar in respect of the villages in our Zemindari jurisdiction, managing the said temples, matam, etc., and by sperding certain moneys out of their own pocket in addition to the income... are conducting in the said temples, matams etc.," the worship, and that "they have constructed tanks and have been performing the feeding charity and other charities." He then sets forth that the Chetties had reported to him that the Amildar had contrary to practice appointed Monegars and Samprathis and called for accounts. Then follows the petition in these terms:—

"We, therefore, beg to submit that orders may be issued to the Head Tahsildar to the effect that poruppu amount in respect of the said devastanams, matams, etc., may be collected as was being done up to last year, that the Monegars and Samprathis now newly appointed therefor may be recalled, and that no trouble be caused by calling for any account whatsoever, so that the Chetties may, day by day, do on a grand scale the established poojah, annadanam (feeding charity), etc., in the said temple, and matams."

The Board again notes the significant fact that the Zemindar is himself the petitioner.

On the 25th June of the same year a petition was presented on behalf of the Nagarathars by Venkatachallam Chetty to the Principal Collector of the Madura District, which narrated that "We ourselves have been managing the said temples, matams, etc., from the days of our ancestors up to date, spending large sum of money from our private funds," and it prayed that orders might be passed "to the effect that, in accordance with the provisions of Act VII of 1817, we alone should without violating the mamul (practice) have claim over the said charities and conduct them, and that the Monegars and Samprathis now newly appointed by the said Amildar be recalled."

It is important to observe what was the Regulation founded upon. It was that of the 30th September 1817, passed by the Governor-in-Council of Fort St. George "for the due appropriation of the rents and produce of lands granted for the support of mosques, Hindu temples and colleges, or other public purposes; for the maintenance and repair of bridges, choultries or chuttrums, and other public buildings." Under the tenth head of the Regulation it was provided that the local agents should ascertain and report "the names of the present trustees, managers or superintendents of the several institutions, foundations or establishments above described together with other particulars respecting them, and by whom and under what authority they have been appointed or elected." Then follows the thirteenth branch of the Regulation, which is in the following terms:—

"On the receipt of the report and information required by the preceding clause, the Board of Revenue shall either appoint the person or persons nominated for their approval, or shall make such other provision for the trust, management or superintendence, as may to them seem right and fit, with reference to the nature and conditions of the endowment, having previously called for any further information from the local agents that may appear to them to be requisite."

The Regulation of 1817 seems to have been complied with in terms. The language of the petitions by the Zemindar and the Chetties was adopted in the decree issued, namely, that the Chetties should be left in their possession and that they would perform the charities according to mamul. The operative words were these: "Let orders be issued to the effect that, in accordance with mamul, the temples, matams, etc., and their villages mentioned above, belonging to the said Nagara Chetties, be delivered over to them alone, without Monegars and others being appointed thereto."

This is the most remote period to which the authentic history of this Mutt can be said to reach. From the fact that it was a Mutt it follows that it must have had a head as such, with all that that implies, as hereinafter to be referred to. But with regard to the village which is now under Receivership, and which is a part of the endowment of the Mutt, the management and possession thereof were in the hands of the Nagara Chetties at least for a period of about eighty years prior to the institution of this suit, and their dispossession and the substitution for such management and possession of that of the plaintiff would, as already said, be a subversion of the history of the property. Such subversion may be a necessity of the case on account of the nature of the institution; and this, which is an important point, will be dealt with. Apart from that point, the right of the plaintiff either to the eviction of the Chetties or to possession for himself is not supported by the history of the lands.

No question arises in this case of misappropriation by the defendants; such a thing is not suggested against them. On the other hand, they admit that their administration must be, not for their personal ends, but entirely for and on behalf of and in the interests of the Mutt itself. This is the settled rule of administration with regard to such institutions under the law of India.

In the circumstances above set forth the demand made in the plaint does not appear to their Lordships to be warranted by law.

It may be difficult to trace the origin of the property under Receivership in the sense of ascribing its acquisition either to gifts from the Chetties out of their own private resources, or to offerings of worshippers, or to accumulations of income: but, however that may be, the case of possession by the Chetties in their own right, and not as agents for the Gurukkal, appears to be made out and is not indeed challenged in the Courts below. The difficulty on this head which the learned Judges in the Courts below have experienced arises from two causes, which will now be dealt with: first, in regard to the rights of the Gurukkal or Mohunt, which are construed as necessarily equivalent by law to the ownership of the village; and second, in regard to the possession itself, which, although protracted and undoubted, is treated, particularly in the judgment of the High Court, as being ineffective because it was not, according to the view that Court takes, adverse possession.

With reference to the first point, the Board has recently had occasion to deal with the position and rights of a Mohunt of an Asthal, or, as in this case, of the Gurukkal of a Mutt, in the two cases of Ram Parkash v. Anand Das (4) and Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (8). In the former of these cases the body of authority upon this subject was dealt with. Two propositions may be cited as now expressing the general state of the law with regard to these institutions. In the first place, the nature of the ownership is an ownership in trust for the institution itself. Secondly, while it may no doubt be true that the ownership in the general case is with the spiritual head of the institution, still, to use the language of Sir Charles Turner in Sammantha Pandara v. Sellappa Chetti (9), "We do not, of course, mean to lay it down that . . . the property may not in some cases be held on different conditions and subject to different incidents." As pointed out in Ram Parkash's case (4), there are varieties of circumstances and tenure, and in respect to these the usage and custom of the Mutt falls to be determined. Once that usage and custom are clear they form the law of the Mutt.

In the opinion of their Lordships, it would be a contravention of the usage and custom of this Mutt, as disclosed by the evidence during the long course of its history, to affirm that the ownership of the village in suit was in the Gurukkal. It is in the Chetties, whose title has been officially and apparently quite properly recognised as the "holders." But even this latter proposition is not in truth necessary for the determination of the case, for if the plaintiff's own title as owner fails, and the Board is clearly of opinion that it does, the suit as laid by him cannot be maintained.

With regard to the second point mentioned, namely, that the possession by the Chetties has not been adverse to the Gurukkal, their Lordships fail to understand on what the difficulty of the Court below rests. Here was possession, not as in right of the Gurukkal, but as in the Chetties' own right, with all the incidents of possession, namely, the purchase of lands, the borrowing on lands, the erection of buildings, the letting of holdings, the making payments to the priest for his support and spiritual services, the keeping of the village accounts. The Mohunt was presumably aware of these transactions, extending now in his own time for over half a century, yet the first real challenge thereof appears to be the institution of this suit itself. This is a very ordinary case of possession nec vi, nec clam, nec precario. The person now claiming to be owner has stood by while others continued to possess not by any derivative title but in practical contravention of his alleged rights. The law does not require that the claimant to ownership must in such circumstances be shown to have protested that his rights were being violated, and that the possession went on adversely to his protests. In short, their Lordships cannot agree with the legal view upon this subject of possession adopted by the Court below.

In these circumstances there seems to the Board no reason why the law of limitation should not apply. In Balwant Rao v. Puran Mal (6) it was held that limitation applied to cases where the defendant admitted he was a trustee, and the plaintiff, without proving misapplication, brought a suit more than twelve years after the cause of action arose, the object of the suit being to obtain control of the management. As Lord (then Sir Arthur) Hobhouse observed, in words which are applicable to the present case:—

"Here there is no question of recovering the property for the trusts of the endowment, because the defendant admits that he is a trustee and says that he is applying the property to the trusts of the endowment. There is no evidence that he is not applying the property to the trusts of the endowment, and there is no reason to conclude that the property would be more applied to those trusts if the plaintiff were to succeed in his suit than it is at this moment. The plaintiff is suing only for his own personal right to manage, or in some way to control the management of the endowment."

The present case is still stronger for the application of the rule of limitation, as the assertion is made not only of the right to management, but of the right of beneficial ownership. But while, in their Lordships' opinion, the suit would be excluded by the twelve years' limitation, they have, on the ground already stated, thought it right to deal with the whole breadth of the argument presented.

Their Lordships desire in conclusion to say that no objection was made out to the personnel of the defendants as true successors of the Chetties to whom the rights of ownership for the benefit of the Mutt were confirmed as already narrated; and no challenge is made of the substantial accuracy of the narrative on that subject contained in the evidence of Annamalai Chetty, the son of Natchiappa Chetty, on page 703 of the record.

By the judgment of the Subordinate Judge it was declared that the plaintiff, as the Gurukkal and head of the institution, and "consequently as a trustee and manager of the same conjointly with" the Chetties, was entitled to the possession and management along with them, "without prejudice to the rights of the latter to continue in actual possession and direct management of the same as they have been holding and managing them till now from 1863." Underlying this part of the judgment it is plain that the learned Judge desired to make clear the propriety of continuing the Chetties' possession, but the decree given does not appear to be in workable form. A further objection thereto arises from the latter portion thereof, under which it is declared that the Gurukkal "is further entitled to the entire beneficial enjoyment of the income of the said villages during his life and continuance as the spiritual head of the institution, subject only to the maintenance of the said institution," etc.

A ready test of the application of this is with regard to the accumulated income, amounting to Rs. 20,000 or thereby, now in the hands of the Receiver. Under the decree quoted the Gurukkal would be entitled to instant possession and entire beneficial enjoyment of that sum. If the present purposes of the Mutt did not consume it, he could employ it for his personal use quite apart from the dignity of his office. It is plain to their Lordships that this would be not only a subversion of the usage and custom of the Mutt, but would be a violation of the law applicable to such institutions. A fair test to be applied in such cases is to demand what is the true principle or nature of the administration of surplus income. It is, of course, the duty of a trustee to refrain from the personal enjoyment of such surplus and to add the same to the capital of the estate to be administered; and this law also applies to the property of a Mutt or Asthal, and that whether the title to the same is in the Gurukkal as spiritual head of the institution—which is an ordinary case—or is in trustees like the Chetties according to the usage and custom of the institution as in the present case. This law appears to have been complied with by the defendants and their predecessors during the past history of this institution, and should be continued. This would not be done by an affirmance of the decree of either of the Courts below.

The view of the High Court on this topic was even stronger than that of the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff was declared to be entitled solely to possession and enjoyment of the village, and as head of the Mutt to be "entitled to draw the surplus income realised by the Receiver and deposited by him to the credit of the suit, and also to receive from the Receiver any further surplus income which may have been realised by him subsequently." In their Lordships' opinion this declaration cannot be made.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty to recall both of the decrees of the Courts below and to dismiss the suit, the appellants being entitled to a decree for costs of the suit and of this appeal against the respondent, and failing payment thereof, to be entitled to charge the same against the funds and property now in the hands of the Receiver.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS JUDICIAL CASE NO. 74 OF 1919.

August 14, 1919.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Atkinson and Mr. Justice Adami.

In the matter of THE BHIKANPUR SUGAR CONCERN IN THE DISTRICT OF MUZAFFARPUR.

Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), ss. 2 (1) (b), 4—Profits derived by factory from sale of finished product manufactured from raw material grown by its servants, whether assessable.

The profits derived by a factory from the sale of a finished product, such as sugar, manufactered at the factory from the raw material grown by its servants on its own land is not exempt from the payment of income tax, as the income so derived is not agricultural income within the meaning of section 2 (1) (b) of the Income Tax Act. [p. 303, col. 2; p. 305, col. 1; p. 303, col. 1.]

Reference made by the Officiating Member of the Board of Revenue, Behar Province.

FACTS.—The Bhikanpur Sugar Concern was established at a village called Bhikanpur in the district of Muzaffarpur in the year 1906. The factory manufactures sugar partly from cane grown on its own lands by its own servants and partly from cane purchased from Indian cultivators. In 1916—17 the factory had a net profit of Rs. 1,75,000, on which an Income Tax assessment of Rs. 10,937 was made. The factory lodged an objection in respect of Rs. 7,084 of the assessment, which is calculated to be the amount levied on profits derived from the cane grown by it on its own lands. The question referred by the Board of Revenue, Behar and Orissa, to the High Court under section 51 of the Income Tax Act (VII of 1918) was whether the Bhikanpur Sugar Concern was liable to pay income tax on that portion of its profits which was derived from sugar manufactured from cane grown on its own lands by its servants. The factory admitted its liability to pay tax on the profits derived from sugar manufactured from cane purchased from raiyats and others.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This case has been referred to the High Court by the Member of the Board of Revenue of this Province under the provisions of section 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918. The reference was made in the course of proceedings under the Act relating to the assessment to income tax of the Bhikanpur Sugan Concern. The question upon which the opinion of the High Court is sought is whether the Bhikanpur Sugar Concern is liable to pay income tax in respect to that portion of its profits derived from the sale of the finished article in so far as it is manufactured from sugarcane grown by its own servants on its own land, or whether it is exempted on the ground that such income is 'agricultural income' within the meaning of sections 2 and 4 of the Act. By section 4 income of this nature is not chargeable to income tax. By section 2 agricultural income is defined. By clause (1) (b) of that section agricultural income includes any income derived from (i) agriculture, or (ii) the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market.

It is contended on behalf of the factory that the income derived from the sale of the finished product manufactured by them at their factory from the raw material grown upon their own land is covered by the words of section 2 (1) (b) which I have just quoted. In order to determine this question it is necessary to consider the circumstances under which the factory carries on its business. It is owned by a private company, the business being conducted under the direction of a manager who is also a share-holder in the company. It owns a sugar factory equipped with modern machinery by which the sugarcane is converted into refined sugar ready for domestic purposes. It carries on business on a large scale. During the year of assessment 7,44,398 maunds of sugarcane, of which rather more than half was grown on the factory's own land, passed through the mills, the remainder being purchased from cultivators of sugarcane in the neighbourhood. The gross proceeds of this sugarcane amounted to nearly 6 lakhs of rupees and that of molasses for the same period to about Rs. 44,000. The net profits for the year were stated to be Rs. 1,75,000, on which income tax has been assessed at Rs. 10,937. The factory has lodged an objection in respect to Rs. 7,804 of this assessment as representing a tax on the profits derived from sugarcane grown by themselves. From the accounts it appears that the agricultural branch which deals with the cultivation of the raw material and the factory branch are kept separte. It is not stated what the profits of the agricultural branch are but these would appear to be exempt from taxation. The process of manufacture adopted by the factory is similar to that employed by other sugar refineries in other parts of the world.

The main question for determination is whether the process of manufacture carried on by the company can be said to be the performance by a cultivator of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator to render the produce raised fit to be taken to market. In order to determine this it is necessary to enquire as to what are the processes ordinarily employed by cultivators of sugarcane. It is common ground that the vast bulk of the sugarcane in this country is cultivated by raiyats of agricultural villages. This they either sell in a raw state to middlemen or owners of factories or country mills, or they reduce it by certain simple processes of crushing and boiling to a substance known as rab, a kind of molasses in a crude state, and then sell it to the factories where it is subjected to a further process of refinement in order to make it fit for domestic use as sugar. It is also not disputed that a very small fraction of the sugarcane produced in this country is grown by the owners of factories themselves The facts of which I have given a short summary are more fully referred to in the order of reference of Mr. McPherson, the Officiating Member of the Board of Revenue, but I have stated enough to show that the processes employed by the factory are in kind as well as in degree vastly different from those ordinarily employed by a cultivator in order to render the produce fit for the market. Indeed the market to which the cultivator ordinarily takes his wares is not the same market as that in which the refined sugar manufactured by the factory is sold. The market of the vast majority of cultivators of sugarcane is the sugar refinery itself or the country mill. The market of the sugar factory is the retail dealer of the finished product fit for domestic use, and in my opinion it is not possible to hold that the processes employed by a sugar factory in order to render it fit for their customers are those ordinarily employed by a cultivator to render it fit for his. It is true that the cultivator in some cases subjects the raw material to certain manufacturing processes resulting in the production of the juice or rab before disposing of it to his customers, but even assuming that the performance of these processes by the cultivator would come within the meaning of section 2 (1) (b) (ii), the matter so far as he is concerned stops there, and a great deal more has to be done by the factories to refine and crystallise the product before it is fit for the market with which they deal.

It was contended on behalf of the objector that the words "process ordinarily employed" have reference to the processes ordinarily employed by sugar factories or anyone else, if they happen to be cultivators, in rendering the produce fit for the market and that if a person is a cultivator and employs such processes in the ordinary course of his business, he comes within the exemption created by the section. I do not think the section can be read in this sense. It refers to the performance by a cultivator of a process ordinarily employed by a cultivator, which I think means in ordinary use amongst cultivators and not to a process ordinarily employed by anybody else, and had the meaning been that contended for, it is difficult to see what operation can be given to the words "by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in kind."

It is next contended that as this is a taxing Statute, it should be strictly construed in favour of the subject and if there is any ambiguity in the meaning he should be allowed the benefit of the doubt. I do not think the construction of the section gives rise to any difficulty. The real question for determination is one of fact, viz., whether the process employed by the factory is that in ordinary use by cultivators, and in my opinion the evidence shows that it is clearly not.

It is further contended that the history of the assessment to taxation of the income of the Bhikanpur Factory throws some light upon the intention of the Legislature. In 1912 the Commissioner of Tirhut on an objection by the factory exempted them from assessment on the profits of their home-grown produce, his decision being based upon an opinion expressed by Sir G. C. Paul, Advocate-General of Bengal, in the year 1896 relating to the assessment of indigo and tea concerns. We have no information as to the processes adopted by indigo or tea planters and are unable to judge how far that opinion may be relevant to the facts of the present case, but it is contended that notwithstanding the decision of the Commissioner of Tirhut the Legislature in passing the Act of 1918 re enacted in section 2 the provisions of the previous Acts in practically identical language and must, therefore, be taken to have concurred in the interpretation placed upon the Act by the Commissioner of Tirhut in 1912. It appears, however, that in 19 4 the Board of Revenue were not satisfied with this decision and placed the matter before the Local Government and finally before the Government of India, with the result that the Bhikanpur Factory was assessed on the whole of its profits for the year 1916-1917. This assessment has been paid under protest and a suit is still pending in connection with it, which it has been agreed shall abide the result of the present reference. I agree where there has been a long course of decisions determining the construction of a Statute, this may be taken into consideration in construing a new enactment passed in the same terms as pre existing Statutes but a single decision such as that referred to cannot, in my opinion, form the basis of any presumption as to the intention of the Legislature in the present case. Moreover, as is pointed out by Mr. McPherson in the order of reference the word "factory," which appears in the proviso to sub-clause (c) of section 5 of the old Act, has been omitted from section 2 (1) (b) (iv) of the present Act "presumably lest its presence might lend colour to any claim of the nature now under consideration."

It is further contended that the factory was never taxed before the year 1916-1917 and for many years they have made an income from sugar. There is, however, no evidence on the record to show how long the manufacture of sugar by this factory has been going on. We are told that it turned its attention to sugar in the year 1906, as did also many indigo planters at a time when the synthetic process of indigo manufacture in Europe materially interfered with the business of indigo planters in this country. What the process of manufacture adopted by the Bhikanpur Factory at that time was we do not know, but in any case I do not think the fact that it has escaped taxation in the past is in itself a good reason why it should still escape, unless it is in fact exempted by the Income Tax Act itself. In my opinion they are not exempted under the clauses of the Act relied on for the reasons above given, and I would answer in the affirmative the question submitted to us whether the Bhikanpur Concern is liable to income tax in respect to that portion of its produce which is derived from sugarcane grown by its servants on its own land and in the negative the question whether it is exempted by reason of the provisions contained in section 2 (1) (b) (ii) of the Act.

A further point was taken by the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Board of Revenue, viz., that a company in the position of the Bhikanpur Concern cannot be said to be a cultivator within the meaning of section 2 of the Act. He pointed out that the company really consisted of two distinct entities, one interested only in the production of sugarcane and the other in the manufacture of refined sugar, and the accounts shew that the factory branch really bought from the agricultural branch the raw sugarcane at a fixed valuation of 7 annas per maund, which was credited to the agricultural branch in the factory accounts, and that in such circumstances the cultivation of the raw material was only ancillary to the manufacture of the finished product, whereas in the case of a cultivator contemplated by the Act the process of manufacture, such as it is, is merely ancillary to the cultivation of the raw produce in order to make it fit for the market. In support of this contention the case of the Stamp Reference (1) was relied upon. That case dealt with the meaning of the term cultivator in the Second Schedule of the Stamp Act of 1879 and held that it did not include farmers, middlemen or lessees even though cultivation was to some extent carried on by them in the area covered by their lease but included only those persons who actually cultivated the soil themselves or by members of their household or by hired labour and with their own or hired stock. The question in that case was whether a kabuliyat executed by a lessee of certain land, the greater portion of which was not cultivable or susceptible of being treated as a cultivator's holding, was exempted from stamp duty under the Act of 1879. The Court found that although some small portion of the land might have been brought under cultivation by the lessee, he was not a cultivator within the meaning of the Act, having regard to the purposes for which the land was held. That case does not in my opinion support the contention of the learned Advocate-General in the present case. Having regard to the purposes for which the company's land was used and the fact that they did cultivate it for their own purposes by their own servants, I think they must be held to be cultivators within the ordinary meaning of that term. But in so far as they were carrying on a business of sugar manufacturers, I do not think that the processes used by them for that purpose were those ordinarily employed by cultivators for the purpose of rendering the produce fit to be taken to market. The truth is, in my opinion, that the Bhikanpur Concern was really acting in a dual capacity. In so far as they were cultivators of sugarcane, their operations ceased when they handed over the raw material to their factory branch. In so far as they were manufacturers of refined sugar, they were carrying on a business which required the adoption of manufacturing process not ordinarily used by cultivators before disposing of their produce in the market. In fact there is no evidence to shew that any other sugar factories of this nature convert into refined sugar produce grown on their own farms but even assuming that there may be a few isolated instances in which this is done, it cannot in my opinion be said that this process of manufacture is one ordinarily employed by a cultivator.

ATKINSON, J.—I concur in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice.

I desire, however, to add a few observations of my own.

The question for decision is, whether the Bhikanpur Sugar Concern is exempt from liability to income tax under the provisions of section 4, read with section 2, clause (b) (ii), of the Indian Income Tax Act, Act VII of 1918?

Before we consider the construction of section 2 (b) (ii) with a view of imposing liability on the Bhikanpur Sugar Company for the payment of income tax, it is necessary to ascertain two facts.

First, is the Bhikanpur Sugar Concern a cultivator of land? And secondly, is the process which the sugar company employ in the manufacture of sugar the process ordinarily employed by a cultivator in order to render the produce raised by him fit to be taken to the market?

The Bhikanpur Concern is a private company carrying on two separate and different classes and kinds of business. The company carry on an agricultural business in respect of a large area of land which they hold as Mukarraridars; and secondly, the company also carry on a very large and extensive business in the manufacture and refining of sugar for sale to consumers generally.

The respective branches of the company's business are independent of each other and are presumably worked and managed by independent staffs.

(1) 5 A. 360; A. W. N. (1883) 113; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 987.

In the reference the position of the Bhikanpur Company with regard to its different businesses is stated to be as follows:—

"The Concern is divided into two branches; an agricultural branch, which deals with the cultivation and purchase of the cane; and a factory branch, which is concerned solely with the manufacture of sugar"

The sugar business of the company is managed by a European manager; and for the purpose of carrying on the business of the sugar factory, the company buy sugarcane from ordinary raiyats and cultivators at the price of four annas per maund; and in addition to the purchases of sugarcane made by the company from raiyats, the sugar factory also buys from its agricultural branch such sugarcane as that branch produces from the land under its cultivation.

The Board of Revenue found in the reference that the cane which is purchased by the company from cultivators is purchased at the rate of four annas per maund, and the cane grown by the Bhikanpur Company itself in the course of its agricultural business is transferred from the agricultural branch to the factory branch at a uniform valuation of seven annas per maund; and it is further stated in the reference that the amount of sugarcane purchased by the sugar factory from the Bhikanpur agricultural undertaking is debited in the books of the sugar factory in favour of its agricultural branch.

Thus the position seems to be that the sugar factory purchases from its agricultural branch the sugarcane produced by it at a price higher than the ordinary market price payable for sugarcane to the ordinary cultivating raiyat. This being the situation, in my opinion the sugar factory cannot be said to be the cultivators of the sugarcane produced by the agricultural branch of its business. The sugar factory in my view is in the position of an ordinary purchaser from its agricultural branch business, just in the same way as the sugar factory purchases sugarcane from individual cultivators.

They (the sugar factory) convert the product of the agricultural business into stock, suitable and convenient for the carrying on of their manufacture of sugar referable to that portion of their business connected with the sugar factory.

I hold, therefore, that the sugar factory as such is not a cultivator within the meaning of section 2 (b) (ii) of the Income Tax Act; and consequently that the Bhikanpur Sugar Factory is not within the class of persons contemplated as entitled to exemption from liability to pay income tax under the Income Tax Act of 1918.

Assuming, however, that the Bhikanpur Sugar Factory is a cultivator within the provisions of the Income Tax Act, the next question that requires to be considered is, does the company in respect of the sugarcane which it raises or produces as part of its agricultural business submit the produce so raised by them to a process ordinarily employed by cultivators generally to render such produce fit to be taken to the market? In other words, the question is whether the operations of the sugar factory can reasonably be described as a process ordinarily employed by a cultivator to render his produce fit to be taken to market.

The Bhikanpur Company is an industrial trading concern enjoying a large and extensive business in the manufacture and refining of sugar; and it purports to buy raw material in its raw condition or in a crude state, and convert it into the refined and finished article for human consumption in the market of the consumer; and for the purpose of its business the sugar factory has erected costly machinery of the most improved and scientific character in order to produce the most finished article in the shape of sugar fit in its condition, as it leaves the factory, to be used for all domestic purposes.

Having considered the evidence in the case, I am satisfied that the process employed by the sugar factory in the manufacture of sugar is not that ordinarily employed by a cultivator in rendering the sugarcane produced by him fit to be taken to the market; and in my opinion the argument addressed to us by Mr. Kennedy begs the whole question when he contends that because the sugar factory has to treat the sugarcane in a certain way in its initial stages in order to render the raw material fit for more perfect manufacture as a finished article, that such process as is employed in the operations of the factory in the manufacture of sugar runs on parallel lines with the methods ordinarily adopted by a cultivator in rendering the produce of the sugarcane produced by him fit to be taken to the market.

Holding as I do that these two questions which I have mentioned should be answered in the negative qua the rights of the Bhikanpur Sugar Company, there is an end of this reference; and there is no necessity to apply one's mind to a more minute consideration of the provisions of section 2 (b) (ii).

However, I would like to add two observations with regard to the construction of that section.

In my opinion the process ordinarily employed by a cultivator in rendering the produce produced by him, so far as sugarcane is concerned, for the purpose of rendering it fit to be taken to the market is the more crude and primitive method or process referred to in the deposition of Abilak Dhobi, Annexure G, which is the process ordinarily adopted by a cultivator in preparing the raw sugarcane for purchase by the manufacturer or the millowner, as the case may be; and, therefore, I am of opinion that the market contemplated in section 2 (b) (ii) is the market available to the producer as such, and not the market for which the sugar factory cater, viz., the market of the retailer or consumer.

Section 4 read with section 2 of the Income Tax Act of 1918 is, in my opinion, a section designed to protect the producer, by giving to him exemption from liability from income tax, as a bona fide agriculturist carrying on the business of a farmer in the ordinary course of good husbandry.

For these reasons I respectfully concur in the judgment of the Chief Justice, and think that the answer to the reference should be that the decision arrived at by the Board of Revenue is right, and that the Bhikanpur Sugar Company are not entitled to the exemption which they claim under the Income Tax Act of 1918.

ADAMI, J.—The circumstances leading up to this reference have been fully stated by the learned Chief Justice. The question referred to us is whether a company owning a sugar factory equipped with up to date machinery and manufacturing sugar for the consumption of the public, can claim exemption from the payment of tax on so much of its income as is derived from the sale of refined sugar manufactured from sugarcane grown on, lands belonging to the company and cultivated by its own servants, whether in fact such income is "agricultural income" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section (1), clause (b) (ii) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, and is, therefore, exempted from tax under section 4 of the Act. Under section 2 (1) (b) (ii) of the Act, "agricultural income" includes income derived from "the performance by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind of any process ordinarily employed by a cultivator or receiver of rent-in-kind to render the produce raised or received by him fit to be taken to market."

We have, then, to determine what process is ordinarily employed by cultivators or receivers of rent-in-kind to render the sugarcane raised or received by them fit to be taken to market, and whether the Bhikanpur Sugar Factory, assuming it to be a cultivator so far as sugarcane grown by it is concerned, is in fact able by a like process to convert the raw material into a substance fit for the market on which the Concern depends for its profit and to which it ordinarily resorts.

The affidavit, Annexure G, to the reference shows that the ordinary cultivator of sugarcane cuts and strips his cane, crushes it in a kolhu with the help of two bullocks and extracts the juice, which is run into an earthen vessel. The juice is strained through a piece of cloth and then removed to an iron pan wherein it is boiled slowly until it becomes rab. The rab is then sold by the cultivator to sugar refiners for the manufacture of sugar. Instead of converting the juice into rab, cultivators will often boil and re-boil the juice until it becomes a thick jelly, which is then converted into gur or molasses and is used in the cultivator's own house or is sold for domestic use as gur in the local market.

The next class are the Indian manufacturers of sugar on a small scale as described in Appendix F to the reference. They carry on the business of buying cane from cultivators in the locality and of stripping and crushing boiling and straining, make gur cakes which are soaked in water. This substance is boiled and strained and then stored in tanks covered with simar (tank weed) which causes the molasses to drain away and leave coarse white sugar which is then, after being broken up, fit to be taken to the market to be sold.

The next superior class described in Annexure H are the Indian sugar refiners, who buy rab from the cultivators and grow no cane themselves. They place the rab in pans and boil and strain and re-boil it allowing it to thicken. It is then covered with simar which makes the molasses trickle off and sugar remains. These men are not cultivators, but they form the market to which the cultivators take the rab they have made from the cane grown by them.

In the processes followed by these three classes no machinery is used other than the kolhu (wooden crusher) or the Behea Mill, both of which are worked by bullocks.

Lastly we come to the sugar factory such as the Bhikanpur Concern. There the process up to the stage of the extraction of the juice is similar to that followed by the ordinary cultivator and small Indian manufacturer, only, instead of bullocks, machinery is used for crushing and the arrangements are more elaborate. A much more scientific process, however, is followed in treating the juice, various retorts, defecators, eliminators, settling pans, triple effect boilers, and centrifugals are used for converting the juice into rab and the rab into sugar. The crushing, heating and evaporating are done by machinery and steam. The process followed by the factory, as far as the stage of conversion into rab, is in its essentials the same as that followed by the cultivator though far more elaborate, but for the cultivator the conversion of the juice into rab is the end of the process. He has then performed the process which has made the sugarcane fit to be taken to his market, and his market is to be found in the smaller sugar refineries or larger sugar factories, otherwise, if he does not trouble to perform any process at all, he sells the cane he has grown to a factory or to an Indian refiner who extracts sugar from the cane on a small scale as shown in Annexure F. The cultivator, then, renders the produce of his sugarcane crop fit for the market in which he is to sell it either by merely cutting it or by converting it crudely into rab, and the market he sells it in is the market in which the manufacturers and refiners of sugar are purchasers.

On the other hand, the object and sole business of the sugar factory is to produce refined sugar. It has no sale for rab but instead may purchase it. It finds its market among the general consumers of sugar and the grocers who sell it to the public.

Assuming that the concern, by reason of its growing its own sugarcane on its own lands, is a cultivator for the purposes of section 2 of the Act, it cannot be held that the process performed by it in order to render that sugarcane fit to be taken to the market, which it is the object of its business to command, namely, the sugar-market, is a process ordinarily employed by a cultivator who merely converts sugar-cane into rab to be sold to manufacturers or refiners. Were we to decide otherwise, and follow the contention of the Bhikanpur Concern to the logical conclusion, we would have to admit that a firm carrying on the business of the manufacture of confectionery, which, for the purpose of that business, grew its own cane and refined its own sugar, could claim to be exempted from tax on the income it derived from the sale of the confectionery.

It is not necessary to dispute the assertion in the affidavit that the process performed in the Bhikanpur Factory is the same as that performed in all sugar factories in India and the world. The point is that the processes performed by the factory to render the sugarcane fit to be taken to its market are not the same as those ordinarily employed by a cultivator to render the sugarcane he has grown fit to be taken to the market in which he can find a sale. The factory cannot claim that, because up to the preliminary stage of conversion of sugarcane into rab the process performed by it is essentially the same as that ordinarily employed by a cultivator who sells his rab to the refiners and manufacturers, therefore, the whole process, which produces the refined sugar ready for the consumer by the treatment of the rab by elaborate machinery, is the process ordinarily employed by the cultivator. The produce of the factory's cultivation may be the same and the preliminary stage of manufacture may be the same as in the case of a cultivator, but the final produce of the process is not the same and the market is altogether different.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that section 2 (1) (b) (ii), read with section 4, of the Income Tax Act does not apply to the case of a sugar factory of the nature of the Bhikanpur firm, even though a moiety or more of the sugar manufactured is the product of sugarcane grown on its own lands by its own servants.

Answer accordingly.

Nagamma v. Subba, 11 M. 197; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 137, followed.

The plaintiff, as trustee of a temple in the Tanjore district claiming to be entitled to both varams, sued to eject the defendants alleging them to be purakkudis or tenants liable to be ejected at will. The latter claimed occupancy rights and objected to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court. The Munsif decreed the suit, holding that the Civil Court had jurisdiction. On appeal the Subordinate Judge, without recording a distinct finding on the question of jurisdiction, dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the merits, holding that the land was comprised in an estate and that under section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act the defendants should be treated as occupancy tenants:

Held, (1) that on the said finding the lower Appellate Court should not have assumed jurisdiction but should have returned the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court; [p. 309, col. 2.]

(2) that a distinct finding as to jurisdiction should have been recorded [p. 310, col. 1.]

The person seeking to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court in which an action has been laid should establish its want of jurisdiction. [p. 310, col. 1.]

The non-maintainability of a suit on the ground of want of jurisdiction depends on the relief claimed and not on the plaint averments. [p. 309, col. 2; p. 310, col. 1.]

The decision of Wallis, C. J., in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar, 44 Ind. Cas. 894; 34 M. L. J. 234; 23 M. L. T. 161; 7 L. W. 380, does not authorise a general presumption against occupancy rights in the case of lands belonging to temples in the Tanjore district, but only indicates the conclusion justified by authority in any case in which similar facts are found. In each case the Court must decide whether such facts exist. [p. 310, col. 2.]

Courts cannot refuse to consider terms in pattas and muchilikas negativing occupancy rights on the general ground of the tendency of land-holders since the decision in Chockalinga Pillay's case, 6 M. H. C. R. 134 to import such terms, but should consider each contract on its merits and with reference to the burden of proof. [p. 311, col. 1.]

Kandada Narasimhacharyulu v. Kavicherla Ramabrahmam, 20 Ind. Cas. 759; 24 M. L. J. 656; (1913) M. W. N. 774 and Zemindar of Chellapalli v. Rajalapati Somayya, 27 Ind. Cas. 77; 27 M. L. J. 718; 16 M. L. T. 576; (1915) M. W. N. 1; 2 L. W. 17; 39 M. 341, distinguished.

The use of vernacular descriptions of tenures in some places is elastic and the definitions of these terms derived from glossaries and works of reference must be accepted with caution as corresponding at most to their normal meanings and subject, in each particular case, to revision in the light of its circumstances. It is because such terms are often used in different senses that attention to collateral indications of sense, in which they are actually used, is most necessary. [p. 311, cols. 1 & 2.]

The term 'purakkudi' is ordinarily inaplicable to a permanent tenancy. [p. 311, col. 2.]

It may, however, be shown with reference to the evidence that that interpretation is inapplicable to a particular case. [p. 312, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Negapatam, in Appeal Suits Nos. 11, 10 and 12 to 16 of 1915 respectively, preferred against the decrees of the Court of the District Munsif, Patukota, in Original Suits Nos. 21, 9, 23, 24, 22, 7 and 28 of 1913 respectively.

These second appeals coming on for hearing on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th of July 1918, and having stood over for consideration till the 6th of August 1918, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These are second appeals by a land-holder, plaintiff, from decisions dismissing his suits for the ejectment of his tenants, defendants, from their holdings.

The plaints set out that the holdings are in villages granted as Sarvamaniam Inam of the temple, of which plaintiff is trustee; that the grants comprised the right to both Varams; that defendants, like other cultivators of the villages, are Purakudis cultivating from year to year with no further interest in the land and liable to be ejected at plaintiff's will, and that they have damaged the holdings, have not rendered the customary services and have not paid rent for three years. Defendants denied these allegations and in particular that they are tenants from year to year. They claimed occupancy right and alleged that they were holding in virtue of such right from before the grant and had been treated as doing so since it. They also denied the jurisdiction of the Civil Court.

Issues Nos. 1 and 2 raised the question of the extent of defendants' interest in their holdings and the former also raised the question of jurisdiction. On both questions the District Munsif found in plaintiff's favour, giving him a decree. On defendants' appeals, however, the lower Appellate Court did not consider the question of jurisdiction separately and there was in fact no ground of appeal, requiring it to do so. It dismissed the suits on their merits, holding, firstly, that the plaintiff did not discharge the burden of proof as to his ownership of both Varams and defendants' ownership of occupancy rights, and secondly, that the holdings being part of an estate and defendants having admittedly been in possession in 1908 when the Estates Land Act came into force, they must in any case be deemed to have acquired occupancy right at that date, whether or not they had it before, with reference to section 6 thereof.

This result is open to the objection that the lower Appellate Court should in consistency with its findings have returned the plaints for presentation to the Revenue Court, which on them alone had jurisdiction, vide, Estates Land Act Schedule, Part A, Nos. 17 and 19. For authority is clear that the direction in Order VII, rule 10, Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, corresponding with section 57 of the former Code, is mandatory. Muttirulandi v. Kottayan (1) and Nagamma v. Subba (2). It is suggested in justification of the lower Appellate Court's procedure that (1) plaintiff did not ask for a return of the plaints and has not done so here, (2) a return would have been futile, when the averments in the plaints did not comprise any cause of action, such as sections 151 and 153 specify, and the suits, even in the Revenue Court, must have failed. As regards (1) the answer is that plaintiff, who has throughout alleged the jurisdiction of the Civil Court and his right to relief there on the merits, was entitled to restrict himself to pointing out, as he has done, that the assumption of jurisdiction on the footing that the suit holdings are not in an estate is irreconcilable with the finding on the merits that they are, and this is in no degree affected by any change in the incidence of the burden of proof, such as some authorities contemplate in this connection, since the lower Appellate Court imposed it on plaintiff. Nor can his conduct be regarded as, to quote from Ledgard v. Bull (3), a "consent which would make the Judge an arbiter" and his decision "binding on the merits, when these are submitted to him." For, even if he had waived his objection more explicitly than is the case, the prohibition in section 189 (1), Estates Land Act, would still deprive the Court, even in case of acquiescence by either party, of the right to assume jurisdiction. As regards (2) it is sufficient that it confuses the nature and sustainability of the suits and that the former, depending on the relief claimed, not the averments on which plaintiff claims it, is alone material in this connection. For, if (as the latter view involves) the defects in those averments, whether of fact or law, were open to consideration at this stage, the mischief to be prevented, a trial on the merits by an unauthorized Court, would be entailed; and there is further the possibility that in a competent Court, amendments, which would cure such defects, might be allowed. In the circumstances the issue as to jurisdiction should have been decided distinctly. In the present case, in which both parties have adduced full evidence, the incidence of the burden of proof is of little importance. It may, however, be pointed out that it has been imposed on the defendant, who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, not only in Tadikonda Buchi Virabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna (4) to which the lower Appellate Court refers, but also in Indety China Nagadu v. Potu Konchi Venkatasubbaya (5), Srimath Kidambi v. Pidiriti Kutumbarayadu (6) and Ramala Venkataswami v. Kanumalla Narasimhayya (7).

(1) 10 M. 211; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 900.
(2) 11 M. 197; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 137.
(3) 9 A. 191; 13 I. A. 134; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 741; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 323.

To return to the lower Appellate Court's grounds of decision, as stated above, both involve a finding that the suit holdings are parts of an estate. The first involves further that the grants included or that plaintiff's temple owned at their date both Varams; and the second raises the question whether the Kudivaram interest has been acquired by it within the meaning of the exception to section 8, Estates Land Act. It is on objection to the second ground of decision that the lower Appellate Court has not dealt with this question. But the main contentions here are that (1) the burden of proof as regards these parts of the case should have been imposed on defendants, and (2) that the greater part of plaintiff's evidence has not received proper consideration.

The first of these contentions rests on the judgment of Wallis, C. J., in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8), in which no doubt it is said that, apart from the general law applicable, there is a long series of decisions as to temple villages in Tanjore district (such as that now in question) which recognize and enforce the presumption against the existence of occupancy right, and no doubt some of those decisions, for instance Chidambara Pillai v. Thiruvengadathiengar (9) and Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10), relate to Inam villages, although the general law was being considered by the learned Judge with reference to a temple holding as a ryot. But it is not clear and it is not likely that he intended to apply any special rule to Tanjore temples on account of either of their location or their management, like all temples in the Presidency, by the Collector up to 1860 or on account of anything except the agreements between him and the ryots about 1830, which were established in the case of each of the temples concerned in the cases in question and would have to be established in the case of any other temple, if a similar inference were proposed. The learned Judge's intention appears to have been, not to authorize general presumption as to Tanjore temples, but only to indicate the conclusion justified by authority in any case, in which similar facts were found. Whether such facts can be found in the present cases will have to be decided.

The second contention is in effect that, although the decisions as to the extent of the temple's rights under Exhibits A, A2, the grants, or independently of them and as to its subsequent acquisition of the Kudivaram must turn wholly or partly on the conclusion reached regarding its subsequent relations with the cultivators and so far as Exhibits A, A 2 are ambiguous or defective, on the manner in which they were understood and acted on later the evidence as to those relations and the later period has been almost entirely neglected.

For this the lower Appellate Court has given two reasons. The first, which it supports by references to Kandada Narasimha- charyulu v. Kavicherla Ramabrahmam (11) and Zemindar of Chellapalli v. Rajalapati Somayya (12), would appear to be that in view of the tendency of land-holders, especially since the decision in Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundara Sannady (13), to import new terms negativing occupancy rights in the Pattas and Muchilikas no contract of any date containing such terms deserves consideration. But the first of these cases is not in point, since it merely decided that certain newly introduced clauses in Muchilikas by persons, who did not claim occupancy right, did not rebut the presumption in its favour in the case of others, who claimed it and the second expressed at most the attitude, which Courts should take towards admissions in Muchilikas after the decision of Chockalinga Pillai's case (13) about 1870, and can have no application to documents such as those before us, of which the majority, including Exhibits B and E series, are earlier. If, moreover, there is reason for suspecting the existence of such a tendency in the particular case under consideration, it can only be taken into account in estimating the value of the evidence, which those who impugn the validity of their predecessors' contracts have to adduce in order to show that they are void for fraud or coercion. It cannot in itself be a ground of decision or justify a refusal to consider each contract on its merits and with reference to the burden of proof.

The lower Appellate Court's other reason for neglecting plaintiff's documentary and other evidence was the loose manner, in which the word Purakudi, of frequent occurrence in the former, is used in Tanjore district and, although it will be necessary to return to this particular instance, it may be conceded at once that there and elsewhere the use of vernacular descriptions of tenures is elastic. In the translation for example made in this Court for the present case the word 'Kudi' is reproduced throughout as ryot, notwithstanding the implication of the latter term in the Estates Land Act and in Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10), Sadasiva Aiyar, J., writing with knowledge of Tanjore, referred to alternative meanings of 'Kudivaram' as importing indifferently a permanent tenancy or one at will. The definitions of such terms, derived from Wilson's Glossary or other works of reference, must be accepted with caution, as corresponding at most to their normal meanings and subject in each particular case to revision in the light of its circumstances. It was for instance unsafe for the lower Appellate Court to adopt, as it did in construing the terms of Exhibits A, A 2, the definition of "Shrotriem" from Wilson's Glossary and the judgment in Papala Narayanasawmi Naidu v. Pensalani Kanniappa Naidu (14) as "a grant, which gives no right over the lands," without considering two of the documents before it, Exhibits E and E 1, in which the Kudis of villages actually referred to therein as Shrotriem are described as liable to be ousted by plaintiff's predecessors and the temple's right is described as Kudikaniachi. It is exactly because terms of this sort are often used in different senses, that attention to collateral indications of sense, in which they are actually used, is most necessary and, whatever the case as regards the term 'Purakudi,' the lower Appellate Court's refusal on this account to consider the documents and other evidence in detail is unsustainable.

In fact, however, its reference to the unsettled meaning of that term is particularly unfortunate. For in Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (15), a Tanjore case, the Privy Council held that it had "a well-understood and definite meaning," interpreting it as inapplicable to a permanent tenancy, and we have been shown no authority for its use in any other way. That, as the lower Appellate Court observes, it is sometimes used to denote "a resident cultivator, known as Ulkudi, who is sometimes called also Ulpurakudi" and has occupancy right, rests on Mahomed Meera v. Ramalingam (16), but the fact must be regarded as doubtful in view of the explanation in the fuller judgment in a later case, Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10), of the term Ulupurakudi as applicable to Purakudis with permanent residential rights in the village, but not permanent rights in their holdings. It may, of course, be shown with reference to the evidence that the interpretation adopted by the Privy Council is inapplicable in the present case. But the lower Appellate Court erred in holding that authority was prima facie against plaintiff.

The lower Appellate Court's failure to give full consideration to important evidence for plaintiff involves that there must be a re-hearing. It is, therefore, inadvisable to deal at this stage with that evidence in further detail or with plaintiff's case as to receipt of compensation and enjoyment of trees on the holdings. The remainder of the lower Appellate Court's judgment relates first to the evidence that holdings or portions of them have been transferred freely, a uniform rent having been paid throughout, although, the tenure being varam, the significance of the last mentioned fact is not clear. There is then a reference to Exhibits E—17 and E—22, as showing that the permission of the previous holder was obtained for two such transfers. But these documents have been misconstrued, since they only show that, when in 1838 and 1840 certain lessees could not comply with the terms of their leases, the land was let to others, in the latter case after an explicit resignation by the defaulter. Lastly, there is a reference to certain judgments, from which no inference is drawn. Nothing, therefore, in this part of the judgment justifies a decision for defendants. The whole being vitiated by failure to come to close quarters with plaintiff's evidence, there must be a remand in order that it may be dealt with properly and findings submitted on the various issues, including that relating to jurisdiction, in the light of the foregoing. It will, as observed above, be necessary for the lower Appellate Court in dealing with the plea based on section 6, Estates Land Act, to decide not only whether the holdings are in an estate, but also whether the Exception to section 8 is applicable to it. Findings will be returned in six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Negapatam submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I am directed by the High Court to submit findings on the various issues in the suits from which these appeals have arisen after dealing with the evidence properly. The only issues in these cases were those framed by the District Munsif, the 1st Appellate Court (my predecessor) not having framed all the points for determination. In addition to those issues the following points are framed by me for determination for the sake of clearness in the light of remand order of the High Court:—

(1) Whether the original grants, Exhibits A and A2, by which the plaintiff's temple acquired title to the suit properties comprised both Varams (Melvaram and Kudivaram) in the lands from which the defendants in the various suits are sought to be ejected?

(2) If it acquired only the Melvaram right, whether the Kudivaram right was acquired by it subsequent to the grants: and if so, how was it acquired?

(3) Whether the tenants acquired occupancy right under 6th section of the Estates Land Act?

2. 1st point:—Exhibit A evidences a grant of 26 villages and Exhibit A(2) a grant of 10 villages. The villages in which the suit lands are situated are some of them included in Exhibit A, some in Exhibit A2, and the rest in a third grant not produced comprising 12 villages. All these 48 villages are included in the Inam Sanad, issued by the present Government at the Inam Settlement in 1865 (Exhibit C). Exhibits A and A2 did not evidence new grants, but were only confirmatory of grants which had been already made to Sri Athmanathaswami, the presiding deity of the famous temple in the Tanjore district known as Avadayar Kovil or, to pronounce it more correctly, Aludayarkoil. Exhibit A recites (an almost similar recital being found in Exhibit A (2) also) "total villages 26 including Nanja, Punja, Samudayam, fruit-bearing and wood-bearing trees and all, have been in enjoyment and in possession as Sarvamanyamdar Sanad from year to year, from generation to generation

Now the Karkoons are objecting on the ground of Maharaja's signature (document)," and concludes by confirming the grant directing the local officials to continue the Sarvamanyam without obstruction and without raising any objection on the score of the absence of new Sannad every year. Exhibit A (2) also contains similar terms. Two important points to be noted in these documents are (1) that the lands themselves, wet and dry, with trees thereon (as distinguished from the land revenue alone) had been in the actual possession and enjoyment of the temple from the date of the original grants, (2) that they were in such enjoyment as Sarvamanyam.

3. Exhibits A and A (2) did not in any manner derogate from the nature of the grants originally made in favour of the temple, and the British Government also when issuing the Inam Sanad, Exhibit C, did not presumably intend to do so. On the other hand, Exhibit C1, Inam Ticket dated 1863, describes the 48 villages as Poora Shrotriem. Exhibit C, Inam title-deed dated 1865, describes 36 of those villages in which the suit villages are included as whole villages: and, moreover, the lands wet, dry and garden "besides Poramboke" as distinguished from the land revenue due thereon to the Government are mentioned in it as the subject of the grants. The particulars given in the various columns of the Inam Faisal register, Exhibit C3, also show that the actual lands were the subject of grant at the Inam Settlement and not merely the land revenue due to the Government.

4. Exhibits A and A (2) were addressed by the Maharaja Raja Sri Ekoji, Raja of Tanjore, to the local officials and inhabitants of that portion of the kingdom in which the suit villages were situated and which was described as Kallapathu and Vellalapathu country; and the appellant's learned Vakil, Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, based an argument on this; for he suggested that the description of the country as Vellalapathu and Kallapathu shows that the 48 villages granted to the temple by Ekoji Maharaja were before the grants in the occupation and enjoyment of ryots owning Kudivaram rights therein, the Maharaja being entitled only to collect a share of the income derivable therefrom as his royal share or revenue and that, therefore, it must be taken that he granted to the temple the mere right to collect that share from the said ryots. But the language of Exhibits A and A (2) does not countenance the view that any Kallars or Vellalars were in occupation of the villages granted to the temple. The address to the local officials and the inhabitants of that part of the country, described as Kalla inhabited and Vellala inhabited, simply corresponds to the usual introductory words of a grant now in vogue "know all men by these presents, etc." It may also be noted that the cultivators in the suit villages belong to Odayan caste (Nathaman caste) and are neither Kallars nor Vellalars. His reference to the fact that an undivided $\frac{1}{3}$rd of Avadayarkoil, one of the villages included in the grants, was first granted by Exhibit A and that the rest, $\frac{2}{3}$rds of it, was subsequently gifted by Exhibit A (2) as an indication that the Melvaram alone was the subject of grants, can carry no weight when it is seen that both the grants were made in the same year and at about the same time. Under column 12 of Exhibit C (3), Inam Register, "reference is made to Sikka Sannad Register of 1809 prepared under Regulation XXXI of 1802 and Pymash Chitta of Fasli 1238, Register of 1258." The Pymash Chittas for the villages in question, Exhibit B series, are on record and they all describe Sri Athmanathaswami as the Ekabogam Mirasdar, except with regard to Avadayarkovil in which there are other Mirasdars (Inamdars) and the cultivating tenants as Parakkudis. With regard to the lands in Avadayarkovil belonging to the temple also, Sri Athmanathaswami is entered as the Mirasdars and the cultivating tenants as Porakkudis. (Vide Exhibits B and B1.) The same remark is entered against Punja lands; and the trees on the Pymash numbers are also referred to as belonging to the temple. The houses in which the cultivators lived are referred to and their occupants are described as mere Parakkudis. In the light of the above facts disclosed in the documents of an unquestionable nature, I think that the only interpretation that can be given to Exhibits A and A (2) is that the Maharaja Ekoji Raja purported to grant the proprietary right in the soil of the several villages, and not merely the right to collect the royal revenue thereon, to the grantee, Sri Athmanathaswami.

5. No doubt according to the strict Hindu jurisprudence of old the King was not entitled to the soil in the land if occupied by the cultivators and he was entitled only to collect a portion of their income as revenue, which was $\frac{1}{6}$th in the golden days, as the following extract from Vyavahara Mayukha shows:—

* * * * * * *

"But the property in each village, house, or other portion of a whole country or a district of it belongs solely to the owner of the soil (Bomika) or other proprietor. The revenue only may be taken by the Prince. Therefore, in gifts or other alienations of such lands as are here made mention of, a gift of the land is not brought about; we must only suppose a mere livelihood given by the Prince out of his revenue. But in purchases from the owner of the soil, even ownership accrues in the property transferred, whether houses, land or other. Then indeed the benefits of a gift of land also may be obtained from it by buying land from the owners and then giving it away in charity."

But this theory has not been accepted by the present administrators of Hindu Law; for in the latest Privy Council case, Adusumilli Suryanarayana v. Acchutta Potanna (17) dated 1st July 1918, their Lordships of the Privy Council have expressly disapproved of this theory on which an argument was based in that case and stated: "That is an assumption which no Court is entitled to make and in support of which there is, so far as their Lordships are aware, no reliable evidence. The fact that Rulers in India generally collected their land revenues by taking a share of the produce of the land is not by itself evidence that the soil of lands in India was not owned by them and could not be granted by them: indeed, that fact would support the contrary assumption, that the soil was vested in the Rulers who drew their land revenue from the soil, generally in the shape of a share in the produce of the soil, which was not a fixed and invariable share, but depended on the will of the Rulers. The assumption contended for on behalf of the respondents was not recognised in Regulation XXXI of 1802. The opening words of that Regulation are instructive, it is there recited:—

"'Whereas the ruling power of the provinces now subject to the Government of Fort St. George has, in conformity to the ancient usages of the country, reserved to itself and has exercised the actual proprietary right of lands of every description; and whereas, consistently with that principle, all alienations of land, except by the...authority of the ruling power, are violations of that right; but whereas considerable portions of land have been alienated by the unauthorised encroachments of the present possessors by the clandestine collusion of local officers, or by other fraudulent means; and whereas the permanent settlement of the land-tax has been made exclusive of alienated lands of every description; it is expedient that rules should be enacted for the better ascertainment of the titles of persons holding, or claiming to hold, lands exempted from the payment of revenue to Government under grants not being Badshahie or royal, and for fixing an assessment on such lands of that description as may become liable to pay revenue to Government; wherefore the following rules are enacted for that purpose'." As it must be taken from this ruling of the Privy Council that the Maharaja Ekoji Raja had full rights in the lands which he granted to Sri Athmanathaswami through Exhibits A and A (2), there can be no presumption that the Melvaram right alone was granted, as my predecessor thought while pronouncing his judgment in these appeals (vide paragraph 4 of his judgment). In fact, in the said Privy Council case it has been expressly laid down that there is no presumption in the case of an Inam grant, that the land revenue alone was the subject of the grant. The decisions of the Madras and Bombay High Courts, apparently to a contrary effect, were also noticed by the Privy Council when laying down the said proposition. In the absence of such presumption, therefore, the circumstances already pointed out, which clearly show that the lands themselves were granted as distinguished from the land revenue due on them, must be given their due weight. In the above mentioned case, the description of the village granted (as Ekabhogam) as distinguished from the land revenue as the subject of the grant in the register of 1809, prepared under Regulation XXXI of 1802, was taken by the Privy Council to be conclusive evidence of the fact that the soil in the lands and not the land revenue alone was the subject of the original grant. In the present case, not only do the Pymash Chittas Exhibit B series make mention of lands (wet, dry and house sites) as being in the ownership of Sri Athmanathaswami, but they also describe Sri Athmanathaswami as the Ekabhogam Mirasdar of all the villages except Avadayarkoil and the cultivating tenants in all the villages as Porakkudis, which terms presumably show that all the rights in all the 48 villages belong to the plaintiff's temple as the subject of the original grants [Exhibits A and A (2)]. The description of the villages in the Sanad, Exhibit C, as whole villages as already noted also supports this view.

6. Though there is no presumption with regard to a grant, that it included both Melvaram and Kudivaram rights, there is no presumption that it included Melvaram right alone, nor is there any presumption that the Kudivaram right was not owned by the grantee at the time of the grant. It has not been shown by the appellants that their ancestors or others were in possession of the suit land at the time of the original grants or the subsequent grants by Ekoji Maharaja: nor have they shown that the temple was not in actual possession of those lands then. On the other hand, the extracts from Exhibits A and A (2) already referred to, to the effect that the temple was in actual possession of those lands from the date of the original grant till the date of Exhibits A and A (2), show that the plaint temple must have been in possession of the soil itself of the suit villages on the date of Exhibits A and A (2), i. e., must have owned the Kudivaram interest in them. It might be that when the grants were originally made the villages were not in the actual possession of anybody, or it might be that the rights of those in occupation were purchased by the King at the grant. This view receives support from the meaning of the word "Sarvamanyam" as given in Ellis's Mirasi Papers. It is stated there "sometime, however, when the Sircar is desirous to give to any one in Sarvamanyam tenure either the whole of a Mirasu village or the waste lands or any extent of ground within the limits of the village, the value of the proprietary right therein is paid to the Mirasdar and the land becomes Sarvamanyam; if the proprietary right be not so purchased then the holder of the Manyam is entitled only to Melvaram; if the Mirasdar should refuse the price offered his consent must be obtained or an exchange made for other ground. This has been practised in the Chola country in the villages of Needamangalam and Kallanni and many others." The foot-note under the word "Sarvamanyam" states "Sarvamanyam signifies land entirely free, of which both the Melvaram, the Government share, and the Kudivaram, the inhabitants' share, is enjoyed by the holder of the Manyam; his tenure can only be lawfully created by the joint act of the Prince and the people. Ardhamanyam is land half free, of which the holder enjoys only the Melvaram; it is created by the Prince only. The confounding of these tenures under the general foreign term 'Inam' has in latter times been the cause of great uncertainty and long continued disputes." The extract from Vyavahara Mayuka above given also shows that if a King wanted to make (bhu dan) (gift of land), he might do so if he purchased the occupier's right and gifted it and his right to collect revenue on it, which together would constitute land in the strict sense of the term. The recital in Exhibits A and A (2) already noticed, to the effect that the suit villages were on their dates in the enjoyment of the plaint temple as Sarvamanyam, shows beyond doubt in the light of the above extracts that originally and on the dates of Exhibits A and A (2), the subject of the grants was the proprietary right in the soil itself including both the Melvaram and Kudivaram rights.

7. The learned Vakil for the appellants contended that the question whether both Varams were the subject of grants or not is solely one of interpretation of the grants (Exhibits A and A 2). But the above result that the grants included both Varams has been almost entirely deduced from the language adopted in Exhibits A and A (2), Exhibit C, the Inam Sanad Exhibit C (1), the Inam Ticket issued prior to the Inam Sanad, and Exhibit C (3), the Inam Register, and Exhibits B series, the Pymash Chittas referred to in Exhibit C (3), which can all be properly referred to for the right interpretation of Exhibits A and A (2). The above argument of the appellant's Vakil overlooks the fact that Exhibits A and A (2) were only confirmatory of still older grants which have not been produced but for the interpretation of which Exhibits A and A (2) and the other documents above mentioned can properly be looked into. I have no hesitation to find the 1st point framed by me in plaintiff's favour.

8. 1st part of the 1st issue and 2nd issue framed by the District Munsif:—Under these issues it would be appropriate to deal with the large mass of documentary evidence which has been let in to show that subsequent to the grants, the relations between the temple and the defendants or their ancestors have been such as to clearly indicate that the latter were mere Porakkudis or cultivators having no permanent right in the lands which they cultivated. For the sake of convenience the documents may be classified under 3 heads:(1) those relating to the period before the Collector assumed management of the temple properties under Regulation VII of 1817, i.e., from the date of the grants up to 1819, (2) those relating to the period when the temple properties were under the management of the Collector under the above Regulation (1819 to 1850), and (3) those relating to the period subsequent to the handing over of the management to the temple trustee (Thambiran) in 1850.

9. The most notable document during the 1st period is Exhibit N, copy of judgment of the Zillah Court of Kumbaconam in Suit No. 4726 brought by Nagappa Udayam and another against Karuthar Udayan, Santhappa Udayan, Kutti Udayan and others, some of whom appear to be ancestors of the present defendants. It was a suit for the recovery of lands in the villages of Paranthini and Karungodu (two of the plaint villages). The plaintiffs, describing themselves as Porakkudis and alleging that the Miras rights in them belonged to the Avayarkoil temple, sought to eject the defendants who contended that they were Porakkudis under the said temple and had entered into possession of those lands under the authority of the then Thambiran (trustee). The defence allegation being practically admitted by the plaintiffs and also proved by evidence, the Court dismissed the suit. It would appear from the judgment that the plaintiffs were in possession of the said lands for a long time as Porakkudis under the Avadayar Kovil temple and that the defendants had before that suit dispossessed them of those lands on the strength of the Thambiran's authority to cultivate them. This judgment clearly shows that even at the earliest time, the people who cultivated the temple lands in the said villages were acting under the consciousness that the temple was the Mirasdar of its lands and that the only right they possessed was to cultivate them if authorised by the Thambiran to do so, and that this position was recognised by the Civil Court.

10. The 2nd period may be divided to facilitate the appreciation of the evidence relating to it into two periods, (1) from 1819 to 1828, (2) from 1828 to 1850. During the first period the Collector, in whose superintendence the temples of the District had been placed and who was consequently managing the temple lands and its other properties, was realising the income of the temple lands under what is known as the proposal Izara system. Under that system all the temple villages used to be leased by him to one person, called the proposal lessee, from whom what is known as proposal Izara lease was taken. The facts in support of the plaintiff's case which are proved by these Muchilikas are: (1) leases were all for a fixed period. (2) Izaradars or the proposal lessees were placed in actual possession of the lands leased out to them by the Tahsildar. (3) A fixed amount of money is made payable under them to the temple as Swamibhogam, the lessee himself paying the Government revenue due on the villages, and also bearing all the village charges including the payment of Porakkudivaram to cultivating tenants. (4) The temple villages used to be cultivated under Amani, i.e., by the Collector through his subordinates, whenever proposal lessees were not forthcoming to accept leases and when subsequently proposal leases happened to be granted, the lessees used to be put in possession of those lands by the Tahsildar. (5) The Varam paid to the Porakkudis or the cultivating tenants was treated as an item of expenditure in the temple accounts, as it was paid by the temple as Mirasdar to the Porakkudis instead of the latter taking it themselves directly from the produce which they raised. Exhibit E (6), dated 9th November 1821, a report by the Tahsildar to the Collector, for instance shows that one Peria Thambia Pillai, who had taken a proposal lease of the temple villages for Faslis 1230 to 1232, had failed to pay arrears of rent and that, therefore, a fresh lease was granted to another for 3 years from Fasli 1231 to Fasli 1233, the rent payable being 7,500 pons annually as Swamibhogam. The further Arzi from the Tahsildar in the matter (Exhibit E7, dated 8th December 1821) shows that the possession of the temple lands which had already been under Amani (i. e., temple's own cultivation) was actually handed over to the lessee by the Tahsildar. After the expiry of Fasli 1233, the Collector took steps to have the temple lands cultivated through his subordinates and the report by the Tahsildar to the Collector, Exhibit E (8), dated 4th August 1824, shows that a regular establishment was started for the purpose of carrying on the cultivation operations in the temple villages from Fasli 1234 onwards under the supervision of the Devastanam Amin until a proposal lessee was forthcoming. Exhibits D and D1 are the Izara Muchilikas (i. e, proposal leases) executed to the East India Company by Avadai Pillay and Parimanatha Pillay respectively. They show that proposal lessees were as a matter of fact forthcoming for cultivating the temple lands from Fasli 1234 and that accordingly an Izara lease for the 58 villages of the temple (48 villages included in the Sanad Exhibit C and 10 villages in Pudukottah State) including wet, dry and garden lands, etc., was taken from Avadai Pillay for 3 years from Fasli 1234. Parimanatha Pillay, the executant of Exhibit D (1), took a lease of the topes and stray trees in the villages agreeing to pay an annual Swamibhogam of Rs. 530 in addition to the tax payable to the Government. The executant of Exhibit D agreed to pay an annual Swamibhogam of Rs. 12,594 7 2 to the temple in addition to the Government tax Rs. 4,418-13-1 and also agreed to bear the village charges, viz., Porakkadivaram, Kalavadi, Swatantaram, etc. An additional fact is proved by these Muchilikas, viz., that the lessees undertook in their leases to supply labour for the conduct of the various festivals in the temple. Exhibit E (31), an Arzi by the Tahsildar to the Collector, dated 27th August 1827, shows that after the expiry of Fasli 1236, no proposal lessee offered to take up the temple villages on lease, that the cultivating ryots expressed their inability to take them upon lease on the ground that the Mirasu in them belonged to the temple and that they were mere Porakkudis, that consequently the cultivation had to be carried on by the temple employees themselves in Amani (own cultivation) and that, therefore, an increase of establishment had to be sanctioned for cultivation, estimating crops, harvesting, etc. It further appears from this document that the temple lands were Shrotriem Sarvamanyam. Exhibit E (32), dated 1st February 1828, shows that Porakkudi Varam had to be paid by the Devasthanam to the cultivators and that a portion of the payment was withheld in order to induce them to cultivate the lands left uncultivated and to raise the 2nd crops on some lands and to guard paddy stored on the threshing floors. Exhibits E (11) and E (33), dated 20th July 1828 and 3rd September 1829 respectively, show that during Fasli 1237 the Collector himself cultivated the temple villages through hired agencies but that the temple Stanik, Arunachala Thambiran, offered himself as proposal lessee for 2 years from Fasli 1238 to Fasli 1240, agreeing to pay an annual rental of 7,000 pons; while the net income of the temple, which it was able to derive under Amani cultivation in the previous Fasli, was 5,899 pons after deducting Porakkudi Varam and other village charges. Thus much with regard to the proposal Izara lease.

11. The Pymash Chittas ranging from 1828 to 1829 are the earliest documents of public nature under the latter portion of the 2nd period. As already noted, they describe all the temple villages as Yekabhogam except Avadayarkoil, which is admittedly a Palabhogam village as it is owned by the temple and other Inamdars. This word Yekabhogam presumably shows that the cultivating ryots could not then have had any permanent rights in the soil of the temple lands, vide Nainz Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10). Exhibit B further shows that the temple was directly cultivating a portion of its lands as pannai, and the evidence of defendants' 1st witness also shows that even now it is carrying on such cultivation in some of its villag s. In Exhibit B series the plaint temple is entered as Mirasdar and the cultivators of lands in it are described as Parakkudis.

12. The Privy Council has held in Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (15) that the word "Parakkudi" has a well-understood and definite meaning and has interpreted it as inapplicable to persons claiming a right of occupancy. No authority has been shown to the contrary; nor has it been shown that this interpretation is inapplicable to the present case owing to the existence of any peculiar circumstances in it, (vide the High Court's remand order, page 8).

13. In the period from 1828 to 1850 during the Collector's management of the temple lands leases of them began to be granted under what is known as Tharam Faisal system, which was introduced by the then Collector, Mr. Kindersley, and under which lands were leased out for cultivation for an indefinite term at an annual paddy rent fixed on the then cultivable area, with provisions for the commutation of such paddy rent into its money value. It has been held by the Madras High Court and the Privy Council in more than one case [vide Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundara Sunnady (13), Thiagaraja v. Gnanasambantha (18), Thiagaraja v. Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannidhi (19) and Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (15)] that tenants holding lands under such Muchilikas can have no permanent right of occupancy in their holdings. As regards the usual term in these Muchilikas that the Tharam Faisal was to hold good permanently, the following extract from the judgment of Scotland, C. J., in Chockalinga Pillai v. Vythealinga Pundara Sunnady (13), quoted with approval by the Privy Council in Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (15), will show what value that term possesses in favour of the defendants' contention as to their having permanent rights of occupancy: "The language of the agreement had, I think, no greater effect than the ordinary form of Muchilika given by a ryot in exchange for a Patta, except so far as it indicated the intention that its terms should apply to every successive Fasli for which the holding might be continued by neither party exercising the right to terminate it at the end of a Fasli." In fact the term in Exhibit D (2), 'As we have agreed thus, we shall, so long as the said villages remain in our possession, pay according to the instalments of kist, etc.,' contemplates that the lessee might not continue necessarily in possession of the lands for ever. The principal features of these Muchilikas, so far as they can be gathered from Exhibit D (2) are, (1): A fixed money rent calculated on the income derivable from Nanja, Punja and garden lands and fishery was made payable annually so long as the lands remained in the possession the lessees and the tenants agreed to this settlement permanently. The permanency referred to here relates, I venture to think, to fixity of rent payable annually under the Muchilika and not to the right of cultivator accepting the Muchilika to hold the lands permanently. (2) If garden crops, such as betel leaves, plantain, sugarcane, tobacco, onion, garlic, etc., were raised on Nanja lands of the temple or if cultivation was carried on waste or Poramboke lands special rents were payable. (3) The tenants should supply labour for conducting Kudi Maramath and for the conduct of the various festivals in the plaint temple, including the carrying of paraphernalia of the temple on those occasions. (4) If the 2nd crop was raised on an area in excess of that mentioned in the Muchilika, special 2nd crop assessment must be paid. Exhibits D (2) and D (7) are Tharam Faisal Muchilikas. Exhibit D (2) refers to Avadayarkoil, one of the suit villages, and Exhibit D (7) relates to Kalagam, one of the 48 villages included in Exhibit C. These terms clearly support the inference that the executants of Tharam Faisal Muchilikas could not have had any occupancy rights in the lands which they agreed to cultivate on the basis of such Muchilikas.

14. The rent payable is described as Swamibhogam and the Melvaram paid on the basis of which the rent is fixed is arrived at after deducting from the gross produce, Purakkudivaram, Swathantram and other village charges. The word "Purakkudi," by which the cultivators are described and which has been construed by the highest tribunal to connote the absence of a permanent right of occupancy, and the word "Swamibhogam," which has been understood to mean the share of the produce or rent which is paid to the Mirasdar or hereditary proprietor by the tenant cultivator holding the land in farm for a fixed period vide Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10) are almost conclusive as to the full proprietorship of both the Melvaram and Kudivaram rights being with the temple.

(18) 7 M. 374; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 844.
(19) 11 M. 77; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 54.

15. When occupancy right was claimed on basis of similar Muchilikas, it was negatived by the Madras High Court in Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10) on a consideration of terms therein almost similar to those above pointed out. Exhibit E (14), which is an Arzi by the Tahsildar to the Collector, shows clearly what rights were possessed by the lessees under Tharam Faisal system in the lands leased to them. It appears from it that the Tharam Faisal lessees of Punyavayal and other villages, who were called upon to pay the arrears of rent due by them, found themselves unable to do so on account of there being no yield owing to drought and as the crops which were standing on the lands had been grazed by cattle owing to the ryots who raised them having quitted their homes for other places. The chief objection raised by the tenants for refusing to pay the rent was that they had no right in leased lands, which they cultivated merely as Purakkudis and that the temple itself was their Mirasdar. The Tahsildar concludes the Arzi by stating that as the tenants in arrears owned no properties except thatched houses and as the lands which they cultivated belonged to the temple and they owned no right in them, it was difficult to collect the arrears. The contents of this Arzi, which is dated so late as 1837, make it fully clear that the tenants under Tharam Faisal Muchilikas could not have had any permanent rights in the lands which they cultivated.

16. During this period also leases for small periods used to be granted; for it is seen from Exhibits D(3) and N(32) that Ramasami Servai and others agreed to cultivate the lands in Pranthani including Nanja, Punja, and garden lands and pay paddy rent for Nanja and cash rent for Punja and garden lands for Fasli 1249. As they found it impossible to give immoveable property security as they evidently possessed no lands or houses, they agreed to stand surety for each other as * * * (sangili punasal jameen) i. e., (the joining together of the tenants as sureties for each other as the links of a chain). It further appears from Exhibit N(32) that after the execution of the Muchilika Exhibit D(4) and security bond Exhibit D(4) they were placed by the Tahsildar in actual possession of the lands to be cultivated.

17. Exhibit E(19), dated 9th December 1839 shows also that some of the lands belonging to the temple were directly cultivated by the temple servants without being leased under the Inam Faisal system or any other system.

18. Exhibit E (20), E(21), E(22), D(5) and D(6) show that whenever the lessees under the Tharam Faisal Muchilikas found themselves unable to continue the cultivation and wanted to abandon their leases, the temple trustee inducted other villagers who were Purakkudis as tenants in their place. Exhibit E(20), for instance, shows that one Sandappa Udayan, who had taken a lease for Manayal village (one of the plaint villages) but who after cultivating it during Fasli 1248 found himself unable to continue the cultivation in Fasli 1249, gave up the lease in that Fasli and that Uchani Ramu Udayan (the grandfather of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913) and 13 others who were already cultivating lands in that village as Purakkudis were granted a lease of those lands under the Faisal system in his place and were put in possession of the lands. Exhibit E(21) shows that Vaithilingam Pillay and Chockalingam Pillay, two of the persons who had taken a Faisal lease of Karagudi (one of the plaint villages), finding themselves unable to continue cultivation in Fasli 1249, gave up their lands in favour of Arumugathudayan (ancestor of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913), who agreed to take them on lease from the temple. Exhibit E(22) refers to the said Uchani Ramu Udayan (grandfather of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913) as Purakkudi.

19. In this period also there was a judicial pronouncement with regard to some lands in Karagudi (one of the plaint villages) to the effect that the Kudimiras, i. e, proprietary right in the soil, belonged to the plaint temple and not to anybody else. This pronouncement was made in Suit No. 726 of 1841 on the file of the Pattukota District Munsif's Court, which was brought by one Thangathammal who claimed Kudimiras right in the said lands as heiress of her husband; the 1st defendant in it was the paternal grand-uncle of 1st defendant in Original Suit 9 of 1913; the 5th defendant was the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913; and the 6th defendant was the grandfather of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913. The suit was dismissed, it being held that the Kudimiras right belonged to the temple [vide Exhibit N(11)]. This, it may be noted, was the first time when a ryot set up Kudimiras right in himself but did not succeed in establishing it. Exhibit E(25) shows that shop rent and ground rent on house sites were collected by the Collector on behalf of the temple in Avadayarkoil, and Exhibit E(26) shows that Pranthani village, after being under Amani cultivation for a long time was let out to the ryots of that village for a rent exceeding the average collection of the previous ten years. This clearly shows that both the Melvaram and Kudivaram rights in it were at the entire disposal of the temple itself. Exhibit E(27), dated 1845, shows that Karungadu village (both Nanja and Punja) was also under Amani cultivation.

20. On 12th July 1850 the temple villages appear to have been handed over to the temple trustee (Thambiran) by the Government, vide Exhibit G (20), and now commences the 3rd period of the temple management already referred to, during which the temple trustee (Thambiran) and not the Collector was in possession of the temple villages and properties. Exhibits G(20), G (21), G (22) and G (56) are all leases executed to the Thambiran (trustee) in 1850 for the temple lands in which the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913 and an ancestor of the 1st defendant in Original Suits Nos. 9 and 22 of 1913 have taken part as executants. There is a tendency visible in these Muchilikas for the tenants to go back to the old Amani system under which the temple itself retained the cultivation in its own hands and carried it on directly and by letting out the lands to the tenants for fixed periods; for the executants of these Muchilikas stated in them that they found themselves unable to continue as tenants under the terms of Tharam Faisal Muchilikas and that, therefore, they preferred to go back to the Amani system under which they stated that, they would pay Melvaram, etc., as of old and take Kudivaram from the temple. For dry crops raised on Nanja and Punja lands they agree to pay the customary Varam. There is also a provision for rendering services to the temple in its festivals and to conduct Kudimaramath in the temple villages. The terms in these Muchilikas clearly show that their executants were acting under the full consciousness that they had no rights of permanent occupancy at any time and that they had not acquired any such rights under Tharam Faisal Muchilikas, which were in force when the temple lands were being managed by the Collector.

21. Exhibit N12, dated 30th June 1851, is again another judicial pronouncement in a claim order passed by the District Munsif of Pattukotta, to the effect that the tenants cultivating lands in Seruguvayal village owned by the plaint temple had no permanent right of occupancy in them. Though it was merely an order in a claim petition, the matter was fully inquired into by the District Munsif who passed an elaborate order giving full reasons for raising the attachment which had been made on the temple lands by a creditor in execution of a decree which he had obtained against the tenants

22. In 1852 Exhibit G (57) was taken for two pieces of waste land in Karuppur village (one of the 48 villages), which its executants agreed to improve and cultivate on condition that if they did not do so the lease might be cancelled and the lands assigned to others. There is also found in it the usual term for the performance of services. This clearly shows that all the waste lands in the temple villages belonged to the temple and that the temple trustee was exerting himself in seeing that they were gradually improved and brought under the yoke.

23. Exhibit E, an order, dated 16th November 1852, of the Head Assistant Collector to whom some ryots of Kalagam village had complained about the increase of the tax payable for trees, etc., by the Thambiran after he assumed management of the temple properties, supplies a correct test as to what was the real position of the Tharam Faisal lessees and other tenants who were cultivating the temple lands, while they were under the management of the Collector. The following extract from his order describes the position of the tenants in a clear manner: "The said Kalagam village belongs to temple as its own and God owns it including the Kudikaniachi right. Even the ryots who came to Court in person admitted that both the Melvaram and Kudikani rights belonged to temple and that they came only as tenants under Sircar for Faisal rates. The lands in the village were given to the ryots for Faisal rates while under the management of Government. Now the village was handed back to the Thambiran and is under his management. Therefore, these ryots must act according to the will of Thambiran. The Faisal rates will apply only so long as the village was under Sircar management and will not bind the temple after the village was handed over to the Thambiran. The Thambiran alone has the power and not the Government to accept any tenant that acts according to his (Thambiran's) will and to eject those that do not. Inform the Thambiran that he may so act and the ryots that they should act according to the will of the Thambiran, and in default they are liable to be ejected and their lands assigned to others. Inform similarly that the Thambiran may so act with regard to other villages whose Kudikani right also belongs to the temple and the respective Faisal ryots of these villages that they should also act similarly."

23. In the next year 1853—54, there was again a judicial pronouncement in a suit brought by the temple itself to eject some tenants of Sirugavayal village (one of the 43 villages) from their holdings on the chief ground that they were not entitled to Kudimiras right and that they were liable to be ejected. Those tenants set up permanent right of occupancy chiefly on the basis of the Tharam Faisal Muchilika under which the lands had been held, and the District Munsif also found in their favour and dismissed the suit [vide Exhibit N (13)]. But in appeal the District Judge of Tanjore refused to confirm the lower Court's decision on the strength of the Pymash accounts, which clearly showed that the temple had the Miras right in its lands, and on the strength of the description of the defendants as Porakkudis in the documents filed by themselves. The District Judge Mr. Bird reversed the District Munsif's decree and granted a decree in favour of the temple [(vide, Exhibit N (14)].

24. Exhibit G (33), a Muchilika, dated 10th April 1885, executed by Mukkanda Veerappa Pillai and 25 others of Avadayarkovil, describes its executants as Porakkudis and further shows that they were cultivating the temple lands but were sought to be ejected through Court, that as soon as proceedings were instituted against them they surrendered possession of the lands, that a portion of them was kept thereafter under the Pannai cultivation by the temple and that the rest was leased out to them on Varam tenure and on condition that they should perform the customary services. There is an important term in the Muchilika to the effect "if we default in cultivating the lands duly or if we delay or default in performing services, you are at liberty to evict such tenants and keep in Pannai, or allot it to suitable Porakkudis and we will perform the customary services." This term renders it impossible to hold that the temple does not own all rights in the Avadayar Kovil and other villages. Exhibit S, dated 1862 (Puli accounts), shows that even for Punja lands Varam was collected.

25. Exhibit G (23), dated 17th July 1866, is a very important document. It is attested by the defendants' ancestors, and it shows that the lands in the cultivation of some Porakkudis were taken from them and handed over to others for cultivation as tenants under the temple. It shows that there was a change of tenants in this manner in 3 villages, viz., Karungudu, Manayal and Praudani all suit villages). The executants of Exhibit G (23) further undertook that they would not sell or mortgage their rights under it on pain of losing their leasehold right if they did so. The terms are surely inconsistent with the existence of any permanent right of occupancy in the tenants.

26. As in the previous period when the temple lands were under the Collector's management (Exhibits E8, E9, E11, E12, E14, D, D1, D3, E31 and E26) leases were taken by the Thambiran (trustee) after the management was handed over to him for fixed periods (vide Exhibits G57, G58, G59, J8 and J6). Exhibits D3, E26, G58, G59, J8 and J6 relate to some of the suit villages.

27. Exhibit G16 belongs to the class of leases called Arrakkat cash leases, under which the executant agreed to pay cash rent for the lands taken by him for cultivation for 15 Faslis from 1305 to 1319 and also undertook to render temple services, tank services, etc., as per mamool. After the expiry of the term possession of the leased lands was to be delivered by him to the temple. In this document there is further an admission by the executant that the temple possessed both Melvaram and Kudivaram rights. They relate to villages included in the 48 villages covered by Exhibit C.

28. Exhibits G to G15, G24, G26, G29 to G32, G34, G39 to G43, G46, G49 to G53 are also similar leases. They range from 1886 (Exhibit G) to 1905 (G14). The common features of these lease are (1) provisions for handling of crops after paying rent, (2) service to tank and temple, (3) surrender after the expiry of the lease, (4) interest payable on arrears in addition to the recital that both Varams belonged to the temple and the executants were mere Purakkudis. G 65, dated 19th December 1881, is a Muchilika executed by one Karuppudayan for the house, and Punja lands previously in the occupation of Porakkudi Samiaatha Odayar but subsequently let out to him by the temple. He undertook to live in that house and cultivate the said land and pay the rent reserved in addition to performing the usual services and on default he was liable to be ejected from both the house and the land. This lease shows that the sites and lands in the possession of one tenant were taken from him and let out to another.

29. In execution of a Civil Court decree passed against one of the cultivating tenants of the temple 146 palmyra trees were sold in Court auction; but in a suit brought by the Thambiran trustee to set aside the sale on the ground that the said trees belonged to the temple and that the tenants were merely Porakkudis, a decree was passed in favour of the temple (vide Exhibits N 16 and N 17). This adjudication is important, as showing that the trees standing on the temple lands belong to the temple, which fact goes some way towards establishing the plaintiff's case that the temple is entitled to the proprietary right in the soil of its lands.

30. Exhibit G15, dated 14th June 1874, is a lease for a house site executed by the father of 1st defendant in Original Suits Nos. 9 and 22 of 1913 and his brother for the purpose of building a house thereon, for which he agreed to pay a fixed ground rent. On default to pay the rent in any Fasli he undertook to remove the materials of the house built by him and leave the site. The site in question is situated in Pandipathuram (one of the suit villages). This lease shows clearly that the Punja sites in the temple villages belong exclusively to the temple.

31. J (8) series is a Muchilika book, and page 23 of it contains a Muchilika executed by the father of 1st defendant in Original Suits Nos. 9 and 22 of 1913, in which he agreed to carry on wet cultivation on dry lands already in his occupation and to pay cash rent annually; and on default he agreed that the lease might be cancelled and that the land might be taken under Amani cultivation. He further undertook to pay the arrears of rent with interest from his own properties and to perform the usual tank and temple services. Exhibit J8, page 111, contains a Muchilika executed by the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913, father of 1st defendant in Original Suits Nos. 9 and 22 of 1913, father of 1st defendant in Original Suit 21 of 1913 and the father of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 28 of 1913, all describing themselves as Porakkudis of Karakudi village (one of the suit villages).

by which they agreed to deliver to the temple a fixed quantity of straw for the consumption of the temple cows each year. J8, page 219, shows that a ryot who was cultivating the lands in Karagudi and Manayal villages gave up his right, as a penalty for his disobedience of the orders of the temple trustee that none should cultivate those lands without the special orders as there was a dispute with regard to their possession. This Muchilika is attested by the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1918. Exhibits N1, N2 and N3 are petitions presented to the Criminal Court by both parties to some criminal dispute about the possession of some lands, to the effect that as both the Melvaram and Kudivaram in them belonged to the temple, they agreed that those of them only who were permitted by the temple trustee to cultivate those lands should cultivate them and that they would abide by the decision of the temple trustee in this matter. The lands referred to are those of Prandani (one of the suit villages).

32. Exhibits H series are debt bonds executed by the temple tenants mainly for arrears of rent in which they invariably described themselves as Porakkudis and agreed to pay the amount due from their own properties. Exhibit H44 was executed by the father of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913 and referred to the arrears due in Prandani, Karungadu, Pandipathram and Karagudi, which are all suit villages. It was attested by Rangappudayan, son of Karuppadayan, the senior paternal uncle of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913; Exhibit H45, dated 3rd October 1881, executed by a Porakkudi of Pandipathram village (one of the suit villages) was attested by Karuppannan, paternal uncle of the 1st defendant in Original Suits Nos. 9 and 22 of 1913. Exhibit H40 related to arrears in Pandipathram, Manayal and Piranthani villages and Exhibit H41 to Pandipathran and Avadayarkoil villages. Exhibit H43, dated 1st May 1883, was attested by the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913. Exhibit H5, dated 2nd July 1885, was executed by the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 23 of 1913, Exhibit H60, dated 9th November 1885, was executed by the father of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913, who described himself therein as Porakkudi. Exhibit H61 was executed by the son of the senior paternal uncle of the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913 describing himself as Porakuddi. In Exhibits H7 to H10 and H23 the executants described themselves as Porakkudis and admitted the Kudivaram (both Varams) rights of the temple.

33. Exhibits F9 to F13 show that compensation for the lands in the temple villages acquired by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act was invariably paid to the plaint temple; and Exhibits F2, F, F5, F11 and F16 show that the trees on roads running through the temple villages were recognised to be the temple's, and Exhibits F1, F2, F6, show that the sites in the temple villages were in its exclusive enjoyment. Exhibits K series are petitions by the cultivators of the temple lands made from time to time praying that fuel for occasional domestic purposes and trees for building and repairing houses might be sanctioned to be given to them by the temple trustee from out of the trees standing in the temple villages. In these documents the petitioners have described themselves invariably as Porakkudis. Their dates range from 1893 to 1910. The petitioner in Exhibit K51, dated 4th June 1893, was the father of 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 21 of 1913. The petitioner in Exhibit K55, dated 8th July 1893, was the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 28 of 1913. Exhibit K60, dated 2nd May 1902, was by 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 7 of 1913, 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 28 of 1913 and 1st defendant in Original Suit 21 of 1913, etc.

34. Exhibits M series and R series ranging from 1896 to 1910 are receipts granted to the cultivators who have described themselves therein as Porakkudis.

35. The data supplied by the documents considered above under 3 periods are far more numerous and definite than those on the basis of which the occupancy right claimed by the tenants was negatived by the Madras High Court in the cases reported as Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chattiar (10) and Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8). The facts proved and the data may be summarised under the following heads with reference to the documents which prove them. (1) Sri Athmanathaswami is the Mirasdar of the lands included in the Inam Sanad, Exhibit C, and the tenants cultivating them are mere Porakkudis having no permanent occupancy right therein (vide Exhibits N11, E, E1, N15, N1 to N3, N24, J6, pages 156, 243, 250, 374 and 386 and 470, G, G1, G2, G46, G24, H6, H11, H7, H8 and H23, all relating to the suit villages, in addition to documents of similar nature relating to the other villages). (2) The temple lands are owned by Sri Athmanathaswami and are in his possession, the ryots having no permanent rights whatsoever in them (vide Exhibits E24 and E). (3) House sites and trees also in the temple villages belong to the god (vide Exhibits N16, N17, G45, J6, page 47[illegible], G27, G25, F5, J4, page 427, J3 page 343, N26 and N27). (4) The temple has been cultivating some lands (both dry and wet) in its villages directly under the Amani system (vide Exhibits E7 to E11, E31, E33, E21, E27, G20 to G22 and G5[illegible], G33, all relating to the suit villages besides others of similar nature relating to other villages). (5) The temple has been exercising the power to cancel the leases entered into by its tenants and let out the lands included in them to others (vide Exhibits G57, E, E1, G33, G23, G59 to G61, J8, J6, J4 and G25, J59, J60, J5, page 406, G4, G14, G1[illegible] and G19, all relating to villages other than the suit ones). (6) The temple has been exclusively paid compensation for acquisition of lands in the temple villages by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act (vide Exhibits F5, F9, F10, F12, F15, F13, F14 and F17). (7) Agreements by tenants not to sell or mortgage their holdings (vide Exhibits G23, J3, page 321, and G4). (8) Undertaking by the tenants not to remove crops before paying the rent due to the temple (vide Exhibits G, G2, G46, G24, J4 pages 164 and 186, G40, G41, G3, G5, G12 G13, G26, G29, G42 and G50). (9) Agreement to give straw to the temple (vide Exhibits J5 page 111). (10) Undertaking by the tenants to surrender their holdings after the expiry of the periods fixed in their leases (vide Exhibits G33, J3, pages 374 and 386, G to G2, G46, G24 and G series from 1889 to 1912, J, page 457 and J5, J3, pages 143, 350 and 311). (11) Special taxes payable for cultivation of Poramboke, Punja, garden crops, 2nd cultivation, etc. (vide Exhibits D2, D7, G20 to G22, G56, G57, G58, IV, IV*g*, G3, G30, G31, G43, G16, G34, G32, G42, G43, G53 and G6). (12) Undertaking to supply labour for the conduct of the temple festivals and for Kudimaramath etc. (vide Exhibits E30, D, G20 to G22, G56, G57, G59 to G61, J8, page 23, G65, J6, pages 156 and 152, 334 and 386, rest of G series from 1886 to 1912 and J5, pages 112 and 117 (13) Change of holdings (vide Exhibits N, E6, E34, E13 to E18, E20 to E22, D5, D6, G33, G23, XXIIa, G30, G61, G65, J4 series, J6, page 386, H20 and J1, page 279. (14) Rents varying from time to time (vide Exhibits E11, E12, E18, E26, G20, G21, G22, G56 and E). (15) Tenants' own property liable for rent, which shows that they had no property in their holdings under the temple (vide Exhibits N33, D3, D4, G65, H15, H44, H33, H39, J6, pages 149, 152, 243 and 250, G to G2, G46, G24, J4, pages 164 and 186, H23 and J5, page? (16) Leases for fixed periods showing that the tenures were only temporary (vide Exhibits D, E31, D3, E26, G58, G59, J8, pages 23 and 111, J6, page 149, G2, G45, G24, G39, G42, G49, G41, G26. G5, G3, G29, G31, G43, G16, G34, G32, G42, G49, G50 to G53, J pages 361 and 414, G55, G54, J5 pages 7, 112, 117, 403 and 406 and G18, all relating to the suit villages, in addition to others of a similar nature relating to other villages).

35. In addition to these data there is the fact that the suit and other villages of the plaint temple were cultivated for sometime under the proposal Izara leases and for sometime subsequently under Tharam Faisal Muchilikas and that the rent payable under both these systems by the cultivators was described as Swamibogam, a circumstance the existence of which alone in the cases dealt with in Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10) and Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8) was considered by the Madras High Court as almost conclusively showing that the landlord had complete rights in the lands in dispute in them. The other circumstances in favour of the theory of the tenants having no occupancy right in the suit lands which appear in those leases have been already detailed (vide paragraphs 10 and 13). Furthermore, the judgments of Courts ranging from so early date as 1810 have been pointed out above as showing beyond doubt that whenever the uestion of occupancy right was raised by the tenants in Courts, that question was invariably decided against them. This is a very strong additional circumstance which did not exist in the cases dealt with in the above two Madras decisions.

37. The appellant's Pleader suggested in his argument that the Amani system referred to in the plaintiff's document simply meant that the temple manager was looking after the cultivation operations carried on by the tenants on their own right as such, for the purpose of facilitating the prompt collection of rents, and that the reference to handing over possession of the temple lands to the persons who executed Muchilikas to the temple, shows that right of collecting the Melvaram from the tenants was transferred to the lessees both under the proposal Izara system and Tharam Faisal system. But, in my opinion, these suggestions are not in the least convincing. The reference to the Amani cultivation as well as the handing over of the possession of the temple lands to the lessees occurs in plaintiff's documents in such definite language that no doubt can reasonably be entertained as to their meaning. He also suggested that the lands for which compensation was granted to the temple might not have been in the cultivation of the tenants. But the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 24, who speaks to the compensation being given to the temple on two occasions [as shown by Exhibits F (9) and F (10)], is that compensation was granted to the temple and that no part of it was paid to the tenants. This impliedly shows that the lands acquired must have been in the cultivation of some tenants. Neither in the cross-examination of this witness nor in the evidence let in by the defendants was it sought to be established that those lands were waste lands not in the cultivation of any tenant. By his explanation as regards Arakkat leases that they relate to the lands silted up or washed away by floods, it is not clear what exactly the learned Vakil for the appellants wanted to suggest in favour of the theory of permanent occupancy. If he meant to state that such leases were granted only in respect of lands in the absolute disposal of the temple, this itself is an admission that the temple had at best some lands in its absolute control, a circumstance clearly against the claim of a permanent right of occupancy in the tenants and in support of the theory that the temple was from the beginning owner of both Varams in the suit and its other villages. But the evidence of defendants' witness No. 1, who has deposed that he executed an Arrakkat lease for 3½ Mahs of land which had become silted up 4 years before and was lying waste but which was in his cultivation before that period, shows that such leases were granted in regard to lands in the occupancy of tenants also. Almost to the same effect is the evidence of defendants' witness No 3. The evidence of defendants' witness No. 14 definitely shows that Arrakkat leases used to be executed even as regards lands already in the enjoyment of tenants. It appears from the contents of such leases that they were generally granted with regard to lands which required to be improved for Nanja cultivation owing to being damaged by floods. What is really important and relevant in these documents is that the lands included in them and which were already in the cultivation of tenants, though requiring to be improved owing to ravages due to floods, were leased out under conditions perfectly inconsistent with the existence of any permanent right therein in favour of the tenants at any time.

38. The appellants' Vakil drew a distinction between the recitals in documents of 1875 and those after that year. But it is not clear on what essential differences between these two sets of documents he wanted to rely and what point he wanted to make out from those differences. No doubt in Exhibits H and J series the recital that both Varams belonged to temple occurred only in the later documents and not in the earlier ones; but the latter distinctly contained a recital that their executants were Porakkudis, which meant virtually that both Varams belonged to the temple. It might be that the temple manager wanted to make his position clear and definite by insisting on the inclusion in documents taken by him from tenants of words showing that the temple owned both Melvaram and Kudivaram in its villages. It should also be pointed out that documents prior to 1875 of an unquestionable nature contain clear indication to show that the temple is entitled to both Varams in its villages, as already pointed out. For instance, Exhibits B series (Pymash Chittas), Exhibits N, N(1), N(2), and N(3), N(11), N(12), N(13), N(14) and N(15) (all judgments) and Exhibits E and E1 show clearly that the temple villages owned both Varams and they are all of ancient dates, though they are not Muchilikas executed by tenants.

39. Muchilikas Exhibits G (20) to G (22) and G (56), which were executed to the Thambiran trustee after the management was handed over to him in 1850 and which have been already dealt with in detail, make it quite clear that the temple owned both Varam rights in its lands, though neither the word "Kudivaram" nor the clause "both Varams belonged to the temple" were used in them.

40. The appellants' Vakil also relied on the following facts to show that the defendants were treated by the temple authorities as tenants possessing permanent rights: (1) In the absence of any grounds to eject the tenants they were not ejected. (2) If a tenant died his heirs were registered in the temple accounts in his place (vide the evidence of plaintiff's witness No. 23 on this point). (3) Alienations by way of mortgage, sale, etc., were made by the tenants and acquiesced in by the temple authorities.

41. The first two points deserve, in my opinion, no serious consideration; for the numbering of tenants and the registering of their heirs in their place after their deaths might be due to a desire to create facilities for proper collection of rent. As regards the 3rd point, viz, alienations of holdings, it no doubt appears from the oral evidence let in and some of the documents exhibited in the case (vide Exhibits II (b), IX, X, XIV, XX and XXI specially referred to at the argument) that alienations of their holdings were occasionally made by the tenants; but it does not appear that they were made with the knowledge of the temple manager or that he recognised them. The earliest of these documents, Exhibits XIX and XX, appear to have been marked on account of their age, though they are cadjan documents and Mr. T. Rangachariar pointed out at the argument that they had not been regularly proved to be genuine. With regard to the argument based on the alienations, the answer is supplied by the following observations of the Madras High Court in Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (10): "No doubt, where a landlord is legally entitled to grant rights as against him to a tenant he can, by acquiescence or by conduct amounting to estoppel, be treated as having made such grant. But the trustees of a temple have no legal right or power to confer higher rights on a temple tenant in the temple lands in his holding than he originally possessed, except for the necessities or the clear benefit of the temple. The acquiescence and conduct of the trustees cannot, therefore, affect detrimentally the rights of the temple." The following observation of the Chief Justice in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8) is in point: "If the defendants' predecessors have not occupancy rights in 1831, I do not think they can have acquired them since by reason of the fact that the trustees have raised no objection of late years to the transfer of the holdings by sale and mortgage. In Mayandi Chettiyar v. Chokkalingam Pillay (15) the Judicial Committee question the right of temple trustees to confer permanent rights of occupancy by express grant, and I think they can still less be held to have done so by implication."

42. With regard to the Tharam Faisal Muchilikas, the appellants' Pleader argued that though no occupancy right can be claimed on their basis, they cannot be treated as having put an end to such rights in the tenants if they already existed. But this argument can be effectively answered by the reply that the terms and conditions in the Tharam Faisal Muchilikas in question make it impossible to accept the position that their executants could have ever had occupancy rights in the lands included in them. If they had such rights, they would not have in all probability executed such Muchilikas. Such an argument has been completely refuted by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in his judgment in Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8).

43. As regards house sites the learned Vakil for the appellants specially laid stress on two documents (Exhibits V and VI), dated 1875 and 1905 respectively to show that the temple did not own any house site in its villages. Exhibit V evidences a sale of a house with its site in Avadayarkoil, which is more or less a town and in which the temple of Sri Athmanathaswami is situated. It does not appear that the temple manager claims title to all the house and house sites in that village, which is not an Yekabhogam village (like the rest of the villages included in the Sanad, Exhibit C) but which is only a Palabhogam village, owned in shares by the temple and other Mirasdars. As there is no evidence that the temple claimed any ownership in the house site included in Exhibit V, the argument based on it loses all force. In fact the sale was in favour of the temple itself and it is improbable that the manager would have purchased it recognising a title in the seller, if the temple had any title to it, considering the claims of complete ownership in the Devasthanam villages including house sites which were being put forward until then from the earliest times.

44. As for Exhibit VI, a document dated 1905 and evidencing a sale of a house site in Kurichikulam by one Velandam Pillai to one Muthusami Chettiar of Siddakoor, it does appear that the vendor was Porakkudi under the temple. It might be that he had ancestral title to the site sold as recited in the document and that that title was in no way derogatory of the claim of both Varams made by the temple. On the other hand, G 45, G 24, G 47 and J6, page 470, place the matter beyond doubt, making out clearly as they do that the temple has the complete control over the house sites in its villages. J6 relates to Manayal and Pandipathram, G45 to Karagudi Lakshmiyendal and another village, G47 to Kuragudi and G25 to Pandipathram village. All these are suit villages. These are Muchilikas executed by the ryots taking up house sites from the temple manager on leases for the purpose of building houses thereon for residence. There is a clause in them that the tenants must quit the premises on default to observe the conditions recited therein To the same effect is Exhibit J6 page 470. In the Pymash Chittas also the houses and house sites occupied by the temple tenants are referred to and described in detail, but invariably their occupants are termed therein as Porakkudis, a term which is inconsistent with their having any proprietary right therein. It thus follows that even as regards house sites the plaint temple is owner of both Melvaram and Kudivaram rights. In the Sikkil Case [i. e. Muna Muhammad Rowther v. Muthu Alagappa Chettiar (8)] where the tenants were held to be entitled to the house sites on which they resided, the Pymash disclosed that some tenants in occupation of the house sites were described therein as Olavadai Kudikani Mirasdar: whereas in this case the tenants were all of them invariably described as Porakkudis. Moreover, it was found by the High Court that the plaintiff in that case had made out no case to eject the tenants from their house sites; but here on the evidence let in and discussed by me, plaintiff has made out his full title to both lands and house site equally.

45. On the above considerations I find the 1st part of the 1st issue and the 2nd issue framed by the District Munsif in plaintiff's favour.

46. 2nd point framed by me :—In the face of my finding on the 1st point this point does not really arise for consideration. But if a finding on it is necessary, I must give it in plaintiff's favour on the same considerations on which issues No. 1 (1st part) and No. 2 of the District Munsif were found in plaintiff's favour. The uniform course of dealings between the temple manager and the tenants of the temple villages, which are only in keeping with the theory of the temple possessing both Varams, the inference which invariably follows on a perusal of public documents of ancient dates consisting of correspondence between public officers, and the judgments of Civil and Criminal Courts, establish beyond any shadow of doubt that Sri Athmanathaswami must have acquired the Kudivaram right in the lands granted to him under Exhibits A and A2 at least after the grants, assuming that he did not do so by virtue of the grants themselves But the question at what time or times and by what means the Kudivaram right was acquired, and whether it was acquired with regard to all the lands at the same time or whether it was acquired gradually cannot be answered, as there are no sufficient materials for such an answer on the evidence.

47. 3rd point framed by me :—If my finding on the 1st point, viz., that Sri Athmanathaswami acquired complete ownership consisting of both Varams in the suit villages by virtue of the grants, Exhibits A and A (2), is correct, the defendants cannot rely on section 6 of the Estates Land Act as creating in them a permanent right of occupancy in the suit lands by virtue of the provisions contained in it. As it has been shown that subsequently to the grants also, the plaint temple has been exercising its rights as the owner of both Varams, the defendants were neither ryots nor were the lands in their possession as tenants' ryoti lands within the meaning of those expressions, as used in section 6 and defined in section 3 of the Estates Land Act when it came into force. Ryoti land means cultivable land in an estate other than private land. But as it has been found that both Varams belonged to the plaint temple from the commencement of the grants and when the Estates Land Act came into force in its villages, the suit lands could not be termed ryoti lands ; nor can they possibly be termed lands in an estate within the meaning of those words as used in section 3, sub-section 2, clause (d). The clause runs as follows:—"Estate means any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in Inam to a person not owning the Kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been made, confirmed or recognised by the British Government, or any separated part of such village." As it has been found that not merely the land revenue but also the proprietary right in the soil of the temple villages was granted in favour of Sri Athmanathaswami by Maharaja Ekoji Raja, the suit villages cannot come under the above clause, and, therefore, cannot be termed "estates" so as to attract the provisions of the Estates Land Act.

48. Supposing for a moment that the temple did not acquire both Varams by virtue of the original grants but somehow acquired title to the Kudivaram right in the suit villages subsequently, the question arises whether under those circumstances section 6, as controlled by the provisions of section 8, conferred permanent right of occupancy on the defendants. It was argued for the appellants that if the acquisition by the temple of the Kudivaram right subsequent to the grants was by virtue of a surrender by the defendants and other tenants, their holdings would be considered to be ryoti lands in an estate when the Estates Land Act came into force and that, therefore, they must be considered to have acquired permanent right of occupancy by virtue of the provisions in section 6, in spite of the Exception to section 8 relating specially to Inam villages which runs as follows:—"Notwithstanding anything contained in this section where before or after the commencement of this Act, the Kudivaram interest in any land comprised in an estate falling within clause (d) of sub-section 2 of section 3 has been or is required by the Inamdar, such land shall cease to be part of the estate," the argument being that acquisition by surrender is not one of the modes contemplated by section 8 or its Exception. The judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., and Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Upadrasta Venkatu v. Devi Sitaramudu (20) supports this view. In Adusumalli Suryanarayana v. Acchutta Potanna (17), a decision passed by the High Court about five months earlier, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., had expressed the same view, the other Judge, however, who took part in that decision (Spencer, J.) having held a contrary view stating that "a narrow interpretation should not be placed on the word 'acquired' in the Exception to section 8 so as to exclude acquisition by an Inamdar by surrender or abandonment of the Kudivaram rights by a tenant." The above view of Spencer, J., was subsequently accepted to be correct by Miller, J., in Ponnuswamy Padayachi v. Karupudayan (21), decided two months earlier than the case reported as Upadrasta Venkata v. Devi Sitaramudu (20). In this conflict of authorities the doubt on this point can only be set at rest finally by the High Court. If the view of Justices Miller and Spencer be correct and if the plaint temple is held to have acquired the Kudivaram right in the suit villages subsequent to the grants, supposing it did not do so at their dates, then it must be held to have acquired that right within the meaning of the word 'acquired' as used in the Exception to section 8 and, therefore, to have become full owner of those lands. In that case the suit lands must have ceased to be lands in an estate as defined by the Estates Land Act.

(20) 24 Ind. Cas. 224; 26 M. L. J. 585; 38 M. 891.

49. If on the other hand the view of Justices Sadasiva Aiyar and Seshagiri Aiyar be correct, the Exception to section 8 would not be applicable to this case and, therefore, section 6 will have to be interpreted independently of section 8. In that view, the question whether the tenants acquired permanent right of occupancy by virtue of the provisions of that section would depend upon the questions

(1) Whether the lands in their occupation when the Estates Land Act came into force could be termed ryoti lands.

(2) Whether they would come under the description "ryots" within the meaning of that word as used in that Act. All these questions have been already considered by me and answered against the defendants in paragraph 47 above.

50. I think also that the defendants must make out that the temple acquired the Kudivaram rights in the suit lands subsequent to the grants, by surrender and not by any other mode, before arguing that the suit lands did not cease to be part of an estate under the Exception to section 8 of the Estates Land Act. No doubt if it is to be eventually held by the High Court that according to the correct interpretation of the original grants the temple did not acquire both Varams under them but if it finds on the evidence as above discussed by me that it subsequently acquired the Kudivaram rights therein, it would then only be necessary to consider under sections 5 and 8 whether the tenants had acquired occupancy right when the Estates Land Act came into force. But even under those circumstances the burden of proving that the temple acquired the Kudivaram right subsequent to the grants by virtue of surrender would, in my opinion, be on the defendants as there is no reason why in the absence of all evidence it should be taken that the acquisition was by surrender rather than by any other mode. The defendants, who request the Court to shut out the plaintiff from the benefit of the Exception to section 8 by stating that the acquisition must be taken to be by surrender, must prove that, as any other fact.

51. The 2nd part of the 1st Issue:—This part of the 1st issue relates to the question of jurisdiction. As I have found that the plaint temple acquired both Varams under the original grants, the definition of an estate as given by section 3, sub-section 2, clause (d), which is the only clause that can be thought of in the consideration of the question whether an Inam village is an estate or not under the Estates Land Act, cannot be applicable to it; for that clause only contemplates Inam grants by which the land revenue alone was granted to the Inamdar. If the view that the plaint temple acquired the Kudivaram rights only subsequent to the original grants is to prevail and if it is to be held that section 6 of the Estates Land Act is not applicable to this case and that Exception to section 8 is applicable to it, even then the suit lands cannot be held to be part of an estate so as to attract the provisions of the Estates Land Act as regards the question of jurisdiction; for in that view the suit lands cannot be termed to be lands in an estate. In any of the views the Civil Court has clearly jurisdiction to entertain these suits. As pointed out in the remand order, the decisions reported in Tadikonda Buchi Virabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna (4), Indety China Nagadu v. Potu Konchi Venkatasubbaya (5), Srimath Kidambi v. Pidipiti Kutumbarayadu (6) and Ramala Venkataswami v. Kanumalla Narasimhayya (7) show that there is further a burden on the defendants who want to oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to show that it has no jurisdiction to entertain these suits. On the findings recorded by me already on the merits, it is clear that they have not discharged that burden. I find this part of the 1st issue against the defendants.

52. No arguments were advanced before me by either the appellants' Vakil or the respondent's Vakil regarding the other issues framed by the District Munsif.

53. 3rd Issue:—This issue raises the question whether the defendants are entitled to any compensation from the plaint temple in case they are ejected from their holdings by the plaintiff. The District Munsif has found this issue against the defendants on the ground that the evidence relating to it is vague and indefinite. The appellants' Vakil did not in his argument make out any case for compensation with reference to the evidence let in and it was not pointed out how the District Munsif's finding is incorrect. I also find this issue against the defendants.

54. 4th Issue:—This issue evidently raises the questions whether the alienations of holdings by way of mortgages and sales effected by some tenants in the suit villages which, as the defendants stated, were acquiesced in by the temple manager, created an estoppel against the plaintiff so as to deprive him of the opportunity to prove that he is entitled to both Varams in the suit villages. But it has been already shown that in the case of temple properties, such an argument has really no force, nor is there any clear evidence that the temple manager consented to the alienations or acquiesced in them. I find this issue against the defendants.

55. 5th Issue:—This relates to the question of the propriety of the notices to quit before suit. This point is not raised in the memorandum of appeal grounds presented in the District Court and, therefore, it may be taken to be given up by the defendants. There is also sufficient proof that notices to quit were given and the District Munsif has found that they were proper. I also find this issue in plaintiff's favour.

56. 6th Issue:—This issue raises the question of limitation. It is not seen how any question of limitation can arise in these suits. The defendants were admittedly tenants at their institution and if it is to be held that the defendants had no permanent rights of occupancy in their holding, their possession must be taken to be the possession of the temple itself. No reference was made to limitation at the argument, though appeal ground No. 16 had raised it. I find that the suits are in time.

57. 7th Issue:—The plaintiff claimed certain consolidated amount in each of those suits as past profits for Faslis 1319 to 1321, the details of the amount also being given in the various plaints. But there is no proof worth the name, as the District Munsif has rightly remarked, that the plaintiff is entitled to recover these amounts from the respective tenants. There is an occasional reference to Pulli accounts, Exhibits L series in the evidence let in by the plaintiff; but their contents have not been properly proved. There is no proof, for instance, as to what was the actual yield in the said Faslis in the various holdings in dispute or as to what crops were raised or as to their prices and the amounts due as rents. The defendants contended that the customary rent due for Fasli 1319 had been paid up and that there was no proper yield in Faslis 1320 and 1321. The evidence was not directed to these points specifically. In the absence of definite evidence with due particulars to show what exact amount is due to the plaintiff as damages for the three Faslis it is not possible to give a decree for mesne profits nor would it be safe to make a calculation solely on the basis of the entires in the Pulli accounts Exhibits L series, which were prepared by the temple servants recently. I, therefore, agree with the District Munsif in finding this issue against the plaintiff.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court on the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the lower Appellate Court's findings and allow the second appeals, setting aside the lower Appellate Court's decrees and restoring those of the District Munsif with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20, O. VII, r. 10—Contract entered into by telegram—Cause of action, where arises—Jurisdiction—Court, whether can consider question suo motu—Order directing return of plaint to proper Court, when can be made.

Plaintiffs, carrying on business at Khanna in the Ludhiana District, sent an order by telegram to defendants, residing and carrying on business at Khamgaun in the United Provinces, to purchase cotton seeds on their behalf. Defendants wired back informing the plaintiffs that the cotton seeds would be purchased and sent, but they sent only a part, withholding the remainder as the price had gone up. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed a suit at Ludhiana for the recovery of the balance of the amount paid by them as well as damages for non-delivery:

Held, (1) that the Court was competent to consider the question of jurisdiction suo motu and to return the plaint at any stage of the suit for presentation to a Court in which the suit should have been instituted; [p. 331, col. 2]

(2) that the contract must be taken to have been made at Khamgaun where the defendants carried on their business and where they received the plaintiffs' telegram and that the Ludhiana Court did not have jurisdiction to entertain the suit [p. 332, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 44 of Act III of 1914, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 3rd January 1917, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Ludhiana, dated the 23rd December 1915, returning the plaint to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court.

Lala Hargopal for Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The allegations in the plaint are as follows :—That two firms Asa Ram-Kalu Ram and Nand Ram-Salig Ram carry on business at Khanna, that they jointly sent an order by telegram from that place to defendants to purchase cotton seeds on their behalf, that defendants replied by telegram to plaintiffs at Khanna to the effect that the cotton seeds would be purchased and sent to plaintiffs at Khanna; that in compliance with the terms of the agreement defendants purchased some 8,000 bags of cotton seeds for the plaintiffs but sent only 2,681 bags and failed to send the remainder of the bags because the rate of cotton seeds had gone up. The plaintiffs accordingly sued the defendants for a sum of Rs. 1,106-10-9, being the balance of the amount sent by plaintiffs to defendants, and the sum of Rs. 1,095-6-0 as damages for loss by reason of the failure to supply the remaining bags of cotton seeds. The plaintiffs alleged that the suit was cognisable by the Court in which it was instituted, namely, the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ludhiana. The defendants did not appear in the case, but the Senior Subordinate Judge suo motu took up as a preliminary issue the question whether the Court at Ludhiana had jurisdiction to try the suit. He held that the Court had no such jurisdiction and that the cause of action arose either at Sirhind in the Patiala State or at Khamgaun in the United Provinces, where the defendants reside and carry on business He accordingly returned the plaint to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. This order was upheld by the District Judge on appeal and the plaintiffs have applied to this Court for revision.

Mr. Hargopal on behalf of the plaintiffs urged that the Court ought not to have taken up the question of jurisdiction suo motu, but upon this point I have no hesitation in holding that the Court acted in accordance with law. The plaintiffs alleged that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court, and before the Court could adjudicate on the suit it had obviously to consider whether upon the allegations made in the plaint it had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Order VII, rule 10, of the Civil Procedure Code is clear upon the point and gives the Court power to return the plaint at any stage of the suit for presentation to a Court in which the suit should have been instituted.

MANNA SULTAN v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

As to the question whether the Court at Ludhiana had jurisdiction or not, it appears to me that the decision of Chatterji, J., in Muhammad Shaffi v. Karamat Ali (1), which I have no hesitation in following, is conclusive upon the point. The contract according to that decision must be taken to have been made at Khamgaun where the defendants carried on their business and where they received the telegram from the plaintiffs, and it is quite clear that the delivery of the bags of cotton seeds was to be made to the railway at that place for conveyance to plaintiffs at Khanna. The rulings cited by Mr. Hargopal, Premji Khetsey v. Ghulam Sarwar Khan (2) and Boseck & Co. v. Mandlestan (3), are clearly distinguishable inasmuch as the question of jurisdiction was in those cases decided by a reference to either the previous practice obtaining among the parties or an express agreement between them as to the place where the money under the contract was to be paid. In the present case the money for the cotton seeds would be paid in the ordinary course of things to defendants at their place of business and the mere fact that the money was remitted from Khanna would not affect the question of jurisdiction.

I hold accordingly that the Courts below were right in returning the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to the Court either at Khamgaun or at Sirhind, and I reject this petition with costs.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE, REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF KISTNA AT MASULIPATAM, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 14—Inams, post-Settlement, granted by zemindar, enfranchisement of, by Government, legality of—Enfranchisement proceedings, whether should be set aside—Madras Proprietary Estates Village Service Act (II Mad of 1894), s. 27—Madras Inams Act (VIII Mad. of 1869).

Where facts are undisputed and do not give an officer jurisdiction, but he nevertheless holds that he has jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter, his decision must be regarded as ultra vires. Where, therefore, the Inam Commissioner, with knowledge that lands with which he was dealing were post-Settlement inams, makes an order in respect thereof in enfranchisement proceedings, his order would not affect the actual rights of the parties entitled to the property and his proceedings need not be set aside under Article 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act [p. 333, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Kistna at Masulipatam, in Appeal Suits Nos. 55 to 74 of 1916, preferred respectively against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Original Suits Nos. 33 to 35 of 1914 and 4 to 19 and 23 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Mr. P. Nagabhushanam), for the Appellant.—The inams are post Settlement inams which it is within the competence of the Zemindar to resume. So an Inam Officer has no power to enfranchise such an inam. See section 17 (Madras) Act II of 1894. Therefore, where he passes an order of enfranchisement, the order is a mere nullity and does not require to be set aside. The question is also concluded by (unreported) decisions of this Court in Second Appeals Nos. 1364 to 1366 of 1915 and Second Appeals Nos. 782 to 787 of 1916. See also Surannanna v. Secretary of State (1), followed in Balvant Ramchandra v. Secretary of State (2). I submit that Article 14 has no application and the suit is not barred.

(1) 24 B. 435; 2 Bom. L. R. 261.
(2) 29 B. 480; 7 Bom. L. R. 497.

Mr. Ramesam (the Government Pleader), for the Respondents.—The decisions lay down that where the inam is subject to a condition, it is liable to resumption. So it was held in Subbanna v. Secretary of State (3) in the case of Dasabandam Inam.

Where an Executive Officer acts bona fide and holds a regular inquiry at which the Zamindar appears and defends, it is not open to the latter to sue in respect of the lands without first getting the order set aside.

JUDGMENT.—The Courts below should not have disposed of these cases on the question of limitation. There can be no doubt that if the lands in suit were included in the assets of the Zamindari at the time of the Permanent Settlement, the Government would have no right to resume them. See section 27 of Act II of 1894. Act VIII of 1869 makes it clear that any decision by the Inam Commissioner would not affect the actual rights of the parties entitled to the property. Therefore, if the Inam Commissioner, with knowledge that the lands were post-Settlement inams, passed enfranchisement proceedings, he would have acted ultra vires. Such proceedings need not be set aside under Article 14 of the Limitation Act. The learned District Judge has relied on the dissenting judgment of Candy, J., in Surannanna v. Secretary of State (1). The judgment of Jenkins, C. J., who differs from Candy, J., was upheld on a reference by Parsons, J., and has been followed in Balvant Ramchandra v. Secretary of State (2) and other cases. In our opinion these decisions lay down the law correctly. No doubt, as the learned Government Pleader suggested, if on investigation of the circumstances which would give jurisdiction, an officer decides facts in a particular manner and proceeds to deal with it further in the exercise of the powers vested in him, it may be contended that the order was not passed ultra vires and that the mistake as to facts of the deciding officer would not oust his jurisdiction. But where the facts are undisputed and do not give the officer jurisdiction, but he still erroneously holds that he has jurisdiction to deal with the subject-matter, his decision must be regarded as ultra vires.

The learned Judge in the Court below has not kept these considerations before him in dealing with the appeal. We find that the very question which would show whether the Inam Commissioner had or had not jurisdiction is raised in the first issue; and in our opinion without deciding it the question of limitation should not have been considered. We must reverse the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suits for trial on the merits. Costs to abide and will be provided for in the decree of the first Court.

Refund of stamp duty will be granted on application.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 19, 21—Appeal dismissed in default—Application for review of order dismissing appeal and for re-hearing cross-objections decided ex parte, nature of—Order dismissing application, whether appealable—Revision, whether lies.

A decree for redemption of a garden having been passed against two minors, they appealed to the District Judge praying for enhancement of the amount awarded to them, while the plaintiffs preferred cross-objections contending that they were entitled to the possession of the property without any payment at all. The minors' appeal was dismissed for default and the cross-objections were accepted ex parte. The defendants then made two applications, one for a review of the order dismissing the appeal in default and the other for setting aside the ex parte order deciding the cross-objections. Both these applications having been rejected, the defendants preferred an application for revision in the High Court:

Held, (1) that neither of the orders dismissing the two applications was appealable and that the defendants were competent to make an application for revision; [p. 334, col. 1.]

(2) that inasmuch as the next friend of the minor defendants had not been served with a notice of the date fixed, the order of dismissal of appeal for default was prejudicial to the minors and could not be sustained. [p. 334, col. 2.]

BHUBAN MOHAN GUHA v SHEIKH BADAN.

Petition, under section 44 of Act VI of 1918, for revision of the order of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 11th November 9.8, rejecting the application.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Petitioners.

Lala Balwant Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th of June 1916 the Subordinate Judge of Delhi passed against two minors, Muhammad Husain and Basir Hussain, a decree for the redemption of a garden on payment of Rs. 3,796. The minors preferred an appeal to the District Judge praying for enhancement of the amount to be awarded to them, and the plaintiffs preferred cross-objections contending that they were entitled to the possession of the property without payment of any money to the defendants. On the 1st June 1918 the District Judge dismissed the minors' appeal for default of prosecution; and on the 17th September 1918 he accepted the cross-objections ex parte, and reduced the amount to be paid to the defendants to Rs. 84-12-0.

On the 11th October 1918 the defendants made two applications, one for a review of the order dismissing the appeal in default and the other for setting aside the ex parte order deciding cross-objections in their absence. Both these applications were rejected on the 11th November, and against the orders thus passed the defendants have preferred to this Court an application for revision.

Mr. Balwant Rai for the respondents raises a preliminary objection that the application for revision does not lie, because the orders complained of were appealable to this Court. This objection appears to me to be wholly untenable. As stated above, the defendants applied for a review of the order of dismissal for default, and I cannot treat their application as an application under Order XLI, rule 19, for the re admission of the appeal. In the same way an application for re hearing the cross-objections decided ex parte cannot be viewed as an application under Order XLI, rule 21, for the re-hearing of an appeal which has been heard in the absence of the respondents. I must hold that neither of the orders passed on the 11th November was appealable and that the defendants are competent to make an application for revision.

On the merits I have, after perusing the various orders passed by the District Judge prior to the 1st of June 1918, reached the conclusion that the minors' appeal should not have been dismissed for default. There can be little doubt that their next friend, who was their father, had not been served with a notice of the date fixed for the hearing of the appeal after the remand by the Chief Court, and considering that the appellants were minors, the District Judge should have appointed another person to prosecute the appeal, if he was of opinion that their father was intentionally avoiding the service of the notice. It is the duty of the Court to protect the interests of the minors, and I do not think that I can endorse the order of dismissal for default which is obviously prejudicial to the minors. I must, therefore, set it aside, and direct the District Judge to hear the appeal on the merits. It appears that one of the appellants has now become sui juris and can prosecute the appeal on his behalf and can also act on behalf of his minor brother.

As regards the ex parte hearing of the cross-objections, it is sufficient to say that the point involved in both the appeal and the cross-objections is the same, viz., the amount to be paid by the mortgagors to the mortgagees. In these circumstances I consider it unnecessary to refer to the irregularity in the procedure of the lower Appellate Court to which the learned Vakil for the petitioners has invited my attention, because it is obvious that the appeal preferred by the minors cannot be adjudicated upon, as long as the decision accepting cross-objections remains undisturbed. There can be no doubt that both the appeal and the cross objections should be decided together, and I direct the District Judge accordingly. I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 49, 85 (1), 167—Landlord and tenant—Sub-lease by raiyat, validity of—Sale for arrears of rent—Sub-tenancy, whether incumbrance—Annulment of sub-tenancy, whether necessary—Notice to quit, sub-tenant, whether entitled to.

A sub-lease granted by a raiyat without a registered instrument and without the consent of the landlord is void as against the landlord under section 85, clause (1), of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for annulment of sub-tenancies and the provisions of section 49 of the Act, which require notice to quit to be served on the under-raiyat, have reference to cases where there is a subsisting tenancy, which stands good against the landlord unless it is put an end to in the manner provided in those two sections. Where the sub-lease is invalid from the beginning as against the landlord, it is not necessary for him to annul that which has never been operative against him.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated the 16th May 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, Bhanga, dated the 29th June 1914.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Asitaranjan Ghose), for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for khas possession of the lands in dispute brought by the plaintiff, who purchased the lands at a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent.

There was a dispute as to the nature of the interest purchased by the plaintiff, but it is found by the lower Appellate Court that the interest of the tenant which was purchased by the plaintiff was an occupancy holding and that the defendant No. 1 was an under-raiyat under that tenant. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was bound to annul the incumbrance of the defendant under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also to serve a notice to quit under section 49 of that Act.

We are of opinion that the learned District Judge was wrong in the view he has taken in the case. Section 85, clause (1), provides that if a raiyat sub lets otherwise than by a registered instrument, the sub-lease shall not be valid against his landlord unless made with the landlord's consent. There was no lease in writing in the present case, and there was no consent of the landlord to the creation of a sub-lease. It was, therefore, void as against the landlord.

The provisions of section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for annulment of sub-tenancies, and the provisions of section 49 of the Act which require notice to quit to be served on the under-raiyat, have reference to cases where there is a subsisting tenancy, which stands good against the landlord unless it is put an end to in the manner provided in these two sections. The sub-lease in the present case was invalid from the beginning as against the landlord. It was, therefore, not necessary for the landlord to annul that which had never been operative against him. This view is supported by the decisions of this Court in the cases of Peary Mohun Mookerjee v. Badul Chandra Bagdi (1) and Gangadhar Mandal v. Rajendra Nath Ghosh (2).

The learned District Judge has relied upon the cases of Amirullah Mahomed v. Nazir Mahomed (3) and Lal Mahomed Sarkar v. Jagir Sheikh Mallik (4). But in those cases the landlord acquired the interest of the occupancy raiyat under a conveyance. Such a voluntary alienation by the occupancy raiyat could not enlarge the rights of the vendee (although he might be the landlord), so as to enable him to get khas possession of the land without putting an end to the sub-tenancy, which his vendor would be bound to determine if there had been no conveyance. The distinction between a purchase at a sale for arrears of rent and a purchase under a conveyance is pointed out by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Lal Mahomed Sarkar v. Jagir Sheikh Mallik (4). In that case it was held that a landlord purchasing the interest of an occupancy-raiyat under him is not entitled to treat as a trespasser an under raiyat holding the land under an oral lease from the raiyat. The learned Chief Justice distinguished the case of Peary Mohun Mookerjee v. Badul Chandra Bagdi (1) on the ground that there the tenant's interest did not pass by the voluntary act of the tenant. The case of Peary Mohun Mookerjee v. Badul Chandra Bagdi (1) was followed by Jenkins, C. J., in Gangadhar Mandal v. Rajendra Nath Ghosh (2) cited above.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must accordingly be set aside and that of the Munsif restored. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

JANGANTHAR SUBBIAH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND HIS LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE—APPELLANTS

KAMISETTI CHINNA VENKATASUBBIAH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS AND LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 54—Attachment of immoveable property belonging to Hindu co-parcener—Attachment of share in each item, validity of.

An attachment of the share of an undivided Hindu co-parcener in joint family property must take the form of an attachment of his undivided share in the family property as a whole, and not of his undivided share in each item of it.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Cuddapah, in Appeal Suit No. 2 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddapah, in Original Suit No. 57 of 1916 (Original Suit No. 8 of 1914 on the file of the District Court.)

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and T. R. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The attachment was effected before the compromise decree between 1st and 2nd defendants. The attachment was of the 2nd defendant's share in the family properties. The brothers cannot get rid of the attachment by allocation of distinct items to each. Such a distribution is, under section 64, Civil Procedure Code, void as against the claim of the attaching creditor.

Messrs. R. Srinivasa Aiyangar and C. V. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondents.—Section 64, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply at all. The attachment itself is invalid. It is not an attachment of the 2nd defendant's undivided share in the entire family but of his share in each item of it. The judgment-debtor's share was not ascertained at the date of the attachment and it has not fallen to his share since. The right of the alienee of a particular item to sue for partition of that item has no analogy to the facts of the present case.

JUDGMENT.—When the facts are understood, this case can be decided on a very short ground.

First and second defendants are brothers. Plaintiff before judgment attached, not 2nd defendant's undivided share in the family property as a whole, but his undivided share in each item of it. A suit for partition as between 1st and 2nd defendants had been filed before this attachment and it ended before the connected Court sale in a compromise decree assigning to 2nd defendant his share of the whole property, not as half of each item of it, but by an irregular distribution of items between the two sharers. First defendant claimed so much of the attached items as fell to his share, and this suit is brought to get rid of the order allowing his claim.

The lower Courts have considered and the argument here has turned almost entirely on the application of section 64, Civil Procedure Code, to the compromise decree in which the partition suit ended. But, in fact, there is no question of the effect of section 64, because there was never a valid attachment of the suit items at all. It is the co-parcener's undivided share in the whole family property, not his share in each item comprising it, which can be attached. No doubt, if he does alienate his share in a particular item, the alienee can sue for possession of that share by partition of that item alone. But that right is based on equitable considerations arising from the co-parcener-vendor's own act, which are not in question here, when the attachment is not made on his responsibility but on that of the decree-holder alone. Shortly, the attachment, so far as its validity is disputed, was not of anything which was ascertained as the judgment-debtor's property at its date or has since been assigned to him, and on that ground the claim petition was allowed rightly. The second appeal is dismissed with costs of the 1st defendant's legal representative. No order as to 2nd defendant's costs.

Appeal dismissed.

GOBINDRAM GURDASMAL AND OTHERS— DEFENDANTS.

Arbitration and award—Reference, effect of—Award, whether extinguishes original cause of action—Agreement authorising arbitrators to arrive at decision in whatever way they like, effect of—Objection to award—Burden of proof—Award not set aside - Decree on ground inconsistent with plaint, whether can be given—Award not stamped, validity of.

The fact that an award duly signed by the arbitrators is not stamped, does not affect its original validity. [p. 337, col 2.]

A valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims raised in the submission, and after the award has been made, the submission and the award are the only basis by which the rights of the parties are governed and constitute a bar to any action on the original cause of action. [p. 337, col. 2.]

Where a party contests the validity of an award, the onus is on him to prove that the award is bad. [p. 337, col. 2.]

An agreement to recognise any award the arbitrators might make, even though it is beyond the scope of the disputes mentioned in the reference, is binding on the parties to the reference. [p. 339, col. 1.]

The ordinary rule that, as the submission only refers to the arbitrator the question between the parties, the moment he touches the interests of a stranger his authority and his award are void, can have no application to cases of partition of joint family property. [p. 340, col. 2.]

Where the parties by their conduct and by the terms of the reference show that the arbitrators are at liberty to get information from one or all of them without there being necessarily a formal meeting with all the three parties present, it is not open to a party to object to the award that it was passed ex parte and without just cause. [p. 341, col 1.]

Where arbitrators are expressly authorised to proceed with or without making inquiries, and to arrive at a decision in whatever way they like, it is open to them to take into consideration a document purporting to be the draft of a Will unsigned by the testator and to regard it as a genuine and valid document. [p. 343, col. 2.]

A party who seeks to upset an award, and who fails to do so, cannot claim a decree on a ground which is quite inconsistent with his plaint. [p. 344, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Isardas Oodharam, for Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for Defendant No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff Ramchand Gurdasmal sues his two brothers Gobindram and Goverdhandas for partition of joint family property left by their deceased father and separate possession of a one-third share. The suit was instituted on the 2nd September 1913. The defendants plead that the suit is barred by an award, dated the 4th September 1913, which was passed by the three arbitrators to whom the parties had made a written reference, dated 24th April 1913. In paragraph 3 (b) of the amended plaint, plaintiff contends that this award is void or voidable on certain grounds there stated. On these pleadings the following issues have been raised ?

(1) Is the suit barred by reference or award, if any, between the parties ?

1 (a) Is the award void or voidable, as alleged in paragraph 3B of the plaint ?

1 (b) Is the suit maintainable in the present form in view of the alleged agreement set up in paragraph 3 (b) of the plaint ?

The award in question (Exhibit 37) has been duly proved and the defect of want of stamp is now cured. The document was signed by three arbitrators, and even if it was intended to be fair copied on to a stamped paper, it does not affect its original validity, cf. Nagabushanam v. Seshachalam (1).

Unless this award is bad for misconduct on the part of the arbitrators or other sufficient cause, it bars the suit. For as held in the case of Khanchand v. Kodumal (2), a valid award ordinarily operates to merge and extinguish all claims raised in the submission, and after the award has been made, the submission and the award are the only basis by which the rights of the parties are governed and constitute a bar to any action on the original cause of action. The onus is, therefore, on the plaintiff to show the award is bad on account of any of the objections that have been raised in paragraph 3 (b) of the amended plaint.

The 1st objection taken is that the award was passed more than three months after the reference was entered upon. This objection avails only if the Arbitration Act of 1899 applies. The reference was signed by the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 at Shikarpur and by defendant No. 2 at Sukkur, at which places the arbitrators reside or work; and there is nothing to show that the parties contemplated the Act being applicable. At the same time I can see no answer to the contention that the case does fall under section 2 of the Arbitration Act, for one of the properties in suit is situated in Karachi, and a suit in regard to the subject-matter submitted to arbitration could be, and actually has been, filed at Karachi. I think, therefore, that the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act must be held applicable to the reference in question.

(1) 1 M. H. C. R. 178.

But it is proved that the reference was not signed by defendant No. 2 till after April 24th. Virumal in his 1st deposition says that it was a month or two later, and in answer to interrogatory No. 2 says it was about two months after. This latter statement is confirmed by the plaintiff's letter (Exhibit 29) where plaintiff, writing on 26th July1913, says it is "from the last five weeks that you have collected signatures from Goverdhan." It seems to me, therefore, probable that defendant No. 4 did not sign this reference till some time towards the middle or end of June. There is no precise evidence as to the date when the arbitrators entered on the reference, but it would in the ordinary circumstances certainly be after defendant No. 2's signing the reference. Again the only meeting referred to in the award is one of 27th August and the correspondence, Exhibits 28, 30 and 41, points to nothing much having been done till August. Even assuming that the arbitrators entered on the reference immediately after defendant No. 2 signed, it is not proved that three months had elapsed from then to 4th September 1913. And in any case under the provisions of the Arbitration Act this Court can extend the time so as to prevent this objection being fatal, see the case of Haridas v. Ootoomal (3). If, on the other hand, the reference falls under the ordinary Common Law, then all that is required is that the award should be within a reasonable time, and this requirement was, in my opinion, satisfied in this case. I, therefore, hold that this objection has failed.

The 2nd objection is that the award was passed after the power of the arbitrators had been validly revoked. If the Arbitration Act applies to the reference, then section 5 of the Act bars this plea. Otherwise admittedly the plaintiff could not revoke the reference unless for "just cause." In this case the only cause alleged is the plaintiff's complaint of the arbitrators' delay in making an award, as appears from his letter, Exhibit 29. But there can be no doubt that there was no unreasonable delay in this particular case. As already pointed out, even the three months allowed by the Arbitration Act had not expired before the award was signed and there was certainly no such delay as would justify the revocation of the plaintiff's authorisation to the arbitrators given in the reference of 24th April 1913.

Defendants contend that in any case there was a waiver of this revocation by the plaintiff's conduct in attending the meeting of the arbitrators on the 27th August. According to all the three arbitrators, he attended the meeting, answered questions put to him, and showed no unwillingness for the arbitration to proceed. The plaintiff in his evidence, on the other hand, first of all said that he only went to Shikarpur on the 27th August in order personally to tell the arbitrators that they could not act, in addition to his having informed them of his revocation by notice. In his examination a week or so later he makes a material change and says that the reason he went was to ask the arbitrators Shivaldas and Dwarkadas to show him the document which is referred to in these proceedings as the 'Will'. Now in his previous cross-examination he had said that he did not then know of the existence of this Will and his explanation of this glaring discrepancy is, I think, a lame one. Plaintiff further admits that he went to Shikarpur on the 27th August in response to a telegram sent by the arbitrators asking him to attend on that date. He also admits that on the 27th August he went with the arbitrator Virumal to the Pleader Mr. Sakhawatrai, as stated in Virumal's deposition. In these circumstances, I think, there can be no reasonable doubt that he went to Shikarpur not with any such particular purpose as he alleges, but in response to the telegram already mentioned in order to attend the meeting of the arbitrators. The plaintiff's deposition and his demeanour in Court convince me that he does not hesitate to lie when he thinks it suits his purpose, and that his testimony cannot be relied on. I have no hesitation in preferring the evidence of the arbitrators as to his actually attending such a meeting, though there are no doubt some discrepancies in their evidence as to the duration and time of that meeting, and the arbitrator Virumal probably exaggerates the time it lasted. The evidence of the arbitrators that enquiries were made of the plaintiff at this meeting is corroborated by various recitals in the award as to the admission by the plaintiff regarding various amounts, etc. I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff did attend such a meeting and (if it were necessary) I think the defendants could rely on his conduct in doing so as amounting to waiver of his revocation of the authority given by him to the arbitrators in the reference. This objection, therefore, in my opinion also fails.

I now come to the 3rd objection, namely, that the award is in excess of the reference. On this point defendants rely on the conditions in the reference that "whatever decisions regarding the above mentioned contentions or the disputes raised personally by the parties the arbitrators arrive at with or without taking any evidence shall be binding upon us. We will not raise obstacles of any kind, whether written or verbal, in the way of decision by the arbitrators. But any obstacle thus raised by any party concerned should be considered as null and void."

This is no doubt an agreement to recognise any award the arbitrators might make, even though it might be beyond the scope of the disputes mentioned in the reference, and there is authority for holding that such an agreement is binding on the parties to a reference. Thus according to English Law, as summarized in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 1, Article 996, "it would seem that parties may by their submission agree that neither of them will set aside the award on grounds of misconduct by the arbitrators," and in the case of Oursetji v. Crowder (4) Farran, J., recognised that the parties might agree that a reference may be conducted in any particular way, and to waive their objection to an irregular course of conduct on the part of the arbitrator. On the other hand in the case of Hurdwary Mull v. Ahmed Musaji (5) Fletcher, J., held that it was not competent for the parties by an agreement to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, vested in it by section 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899, to set aside an award, if misconduct on the part of the abitrators were shown or if it were shown that the award was improperly procured, when the parties desire that the award should be enforced under the provisions of the Act. No full grounds are given for this decision, and it could not of course apply in cases where the agreement not to dispute an award operates as an estoppel. This case is also distinguishable, because here it is not a question of any of the parties desiring to enforce the award under the provisions of the Arbitration Act and the Court is not considering the award under the special provisions of section 14 of the Act. In Basrio Faddoo v. Mahomed Ladha (6), which was a case under the Arbitration Act, an agreement that the arbitrators might decide the disputes without hearing the parties or their witnesses, was held to be valid. I think, therefore, that the defendants are entitled to rely on this agreement as barring this objection. But as this view may be not taken in appeal, I think it best to consider the objections raised under this particular head on their merits.

The 1st contention is that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to award the plaintiff $\frac{1}{4}$th share in certain joint family properties instead of $\frac{1}{3}$rd share. This assumes that in the reference the defendants admitted plaintiff's right to $\frac{1}{3}$rd in all the joint property. But, in my opinion, this is a presumption that is not justifiable. Defendant No. 1 merely denies that plaintiff is entitled to $\frac{1}{4}$th share without saying how exactly the property should be divided between the parties. Defendant No. 2 no doubt says that after getting an allowance for certain things the remaining property should be divided in three equal shares. But this does not, in my opinion, tie the arbitrators down to give the plaintiff at least $\frac{1}{3}$rd. Both the defendants refer to further rights which were to be explained personally to the arbitrators, and by the terms of the reference the latter are appointed "for the final settlement of the disputes existing between (the parties)." The plaintiff himself claimed more than $\frac{1}{3}$rd share and this claim was disputed by the defendants. The amount of his share was, therefore, referred to arbitrators without any limitation as to the amount of his minimum share. In support of this construction, reference may be made to the plaintiff's own letter, Exhibit 41, in which he says "I have all the time left the matter entirely in the hands of arbitrators at their discretion whether to allow me an inch or no from the property." In his deposition he attempts to explain this way by saying this was ironical. It is no doubt very likely that the passage preceding this particular sentence, in which he says "he was very pleased to see the arbitrators acting to the satisfaction of his brothers," was meant to be ironical ; but this particular sentence is a separate one put by plaintiff under a separate heading marked III, and to my mind it does not read as if it was intended to be otherwise than a serious statement. The reference also gives authority to the arbitrators to decide not only about the contentions expressly stated therein, but also the disputes that might be placed before them by the parties orally. Such disputes would undoubtedly cover for instance defendants' contention in paragraph 4 of their written statement that "plaintiff is in possession of a hardware shop and cash to the extent of Rs. 30,000, which is a part of the property liable to be partitioned and which should be brought into hotchpot." This contention would appear also to have been raised before the arbitrators, for Virumul in his evidence mentions that he tried to persuade the plaintiff to give an account of his earnings but the plaintiff refused. And this also is stated in the arbitrators' award. The award shows that it was largely in consequence of this refusal of plaintiff that his share has been reduced, and, I think, the defendant No. 2's admission that the plaintiff was entitled to $\frac{1}{3}$rd share was clearly based on the understanding that all the joint property should be brought into hotchpot, and that any other construction of it would be unreasonable. If it was intended by the parties that this question of the plaintiff's separate earnings was to be excluded from the scope of the reference, it should have been clearly expressed in it. As it is, I hold that the arbitrators had authority to decide, as they did, that plaintiff's separate earnings constituted joint property as they might be under Hindu Law, if they were obtained with the aid of the joint family property ; and even if the arbitrators erred in this finding, it does not vitiate their award. This disposes of the objection that the arbitrators were not justified in awarding plaintiff less than a $\frac{1}{3}$rd share and the further objection that they went beyond the scope of the reference in treating plaintiff's separate earnings as joint family property.

Under this head it is also urged that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to hold that the Karachi immoveable property was not joint family property and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a share in it. But the arbitrators in their award did not say that it was not joint family property, but that it was acquired by Gurbomal from his self-acquired earnings and exclusively belonged to him. In the hands of the sons it might (in the absence of a devise of the property by Will, as to which see Jugmohandas v. Mangaldas (7) and Parsotam Rao v. Janki Bai (8)] constitute joint family property though not ancestral. See Mulla's Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, pages 176 and 177. In any case there is nothing in the reference which barred them in holding that it was not joint family property. And Mr. Isardas in this connection points out that even in the plaintiff's contentions as set forth in the reference the word "ancestral" is qualified by "etc." This objection, in my opinion, therefore, also fails.

The last contention under this heading is that the arbitrators went beyond their jurisdiction by deciding points relating to strangers to the reference. No doubt the ordinary rule is that, as the submission only refers to the arbitrator the question between the parties, the moment he touches the interests of strangers, he exceeds his authority and his award is void. But this strict rule of English Law obviously cannot be applied in partition cases like this, and the reference clearly referred the question of maintenance allowances and of marriage and shradh ceremony expenses to the arbitrators. The plaintiff himself in his contentions refers to the question of presents given to sisters, etc., and marriage and shradh expenses as among those to be settled, and he is almost necessarily estopped from raising the plea like the present one. Unless such questions were settled, there would be no final settlement of the disputes and the defendants presumably would not have agreed to the arbitration. I hold, therefore, that the objection that the award is bad for exceeding the scope of the reference is not substantiated.

(7) 10 B. 528; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 742.
(8) 29 A. 354; 4 A. L. J. 257; A. W. N. (1907) 77.

The next objection raised is that the award has been passed after the institution of the suit. On this point it is sufficient to refer to the case of Sawyer v. Louis Dreyfus & Co. (9), where it was held that section 14 of the Arbitration Act does not apply to a case like the present.

Then it is said that the award has been passed ex parte without "just cause." As already remarked, the reference is very wide and it includes terms approving the decision of the arbitrators even if it be made without enquiries and in any way they liked. This is very natural as the arbitrators were old friends of the family of 20 or 30 years standing, as plaintiff himself admits in his letter, Exhibit 41. They already knew the main facts giving rise to the controversy, and I think it is quite clear that the parties never intended them to act with the formality and strictness applicable in cases where the arbitrator is a stranger who knows nothing about the dispute. Plaintiff himself privately corresponded with the arbitrators regarding the dispute, and the parties by their conduct and by the terms of the reference show that the arbitrators were at liberty to get information from one or all of them without there being necessarily a formal meeting with all the three parties present. This is confirmed by Exhibits 28 and 41. In Exhibit 28 Virumal mentions that "it was only the other day that Goverdhan's representatives came to tell us all about Goverdhan's claim". In his reply in Exhibit 41 plaintiff writes, "for my part everybody has clear monopoly to act ex parte." In his deposition plaintiff admits that this paragraph 11 in Exhibit 41 does express his view of the matter, at any rate, prior to his revocation of the reference. In this case the only formal meeting appears to have been that of the 27th August, when the plaintiff, as I have already held, was present, and in my opinion the plea that the arbitrators improperly acted ex parte is not established.

I now take up the objection that the award has been based on the alleged Will of Gurdasmal which was neither produced nor proved before the arbitrators, and when the parties had agreed to divide the property dehors the said alleged Will. This seems to me to be the plaintiff's main grievance and is a more substantial objection than the others. The document referred to is a draft Will, which the deceased father of the plaintiff got drawn up for him about a year before his death, but which he never signed. It was found after his death, in a box containing this and other documents which the deceased used to keep at the otak of the arbitrator Seth Shivaldas. The latter, in explanation of the document not being signed, says that the deceased told him that he intended to consult a Pleader by name Shivaldas and one or two other friends about it, and the arbitrator Dwarkadas confirms this statement. Shivaldas' evidence regarding this Will is corroborated by his letter, Exhibit 39, and is, in my opinion, reliable. The plaintiff's Pleader admits for the purpose of arguments that, as the case stands, the document should be held to be a genuine draft Will prepared by the deceased in the manner stated by Shivaldas. And even if any dispute can be raised regarding the genuineness of the document in question, it is clear that the surrounding circumstances at any rate justify the arbitrators in treating it as a genuine document, and that they had substantial grounds for believing what Shivaldas has stated in the matter. The objection urges that this Will was neither produced nor proved before the arbitrators. It was, however, certainly produced before them. Virumal says that it was shown to him at Seth Shivaldas' otak and he is corroborated in this by his letter, Exhibit 28, in which he mentions having read the document in question. Shivaldas, as already mentioned, knew of its existence before. The 3rd arbitrator Dwarkadas no doubt says that he saw it for the first time when the award was written. But at the same time he says that he knew of its existence and that Shivaldas might have told him its contents before that. Its existence is also proved to have been known to the parties to the reference. Plaintiff at first denied having had any knowledge of it, but when his attention was drawn to Exhibits 38—40, he had to admit that he had heard about it. As regards the question of its being placed before the arbitrators, it is to be noted that section 6 of the Evidence Act does not apply to the case, for under section 1 of the Evidence Act the provisions of that Act do not apply to proceedings before an arbitrator, in this respect differing from the English Law which holds that arbitrators are bound by the same rules of evidence as Courts of Law, see Enoch & Zaretzky, In re (10). The arbitrators were, therefore, clearly justified in treating the Will as a genuine document. The objection further says that the parties had agreed to divide the property dehors the said alleged Will, but no evidence has been adduced as to any such agreement, nor has it been relied on in argument. All that was contended was that the Will was not mentioned in the reference and, therefore, it must be deemed to be excluded. As to this it is sufficient to say that no particular documents nor any restrictions in the matter of evidence are mentioned in the reference. On the contrary the reference contains an expressed authorization to the arbitrators to proceed with or without making enquiries and to arrive at a decision in whatever way they liked; and in view of this, this contention clearly fails. It is not a case where there was any clear necessity to refer to the Will at all, and the omission to do so does not, in my opinion, justify the inference that the parties intended it to be excluded from consideration.

The objection is, therefore, reduced to the question whether the arbitrators were justified in taking this document in consideration. Now no doubt it is the law that, though the Evidence Act does not apply to proceedings before an arbitrator, yet the latter must not receive and act upon evidence or decide upon grounds which would render his award utterly unfair or worthless. Also as stated in the case of Cursetji v. Crowder (4) it is a well-established principle of law that an arbitrator ought not to hear or receive evidence from one side in the absence of the other side, without, if he does, giving the side affected by such evidence the opportunity of meeting and answering it. A good illustration of this is contained in that case. There the arbitrator had received certain papers and documents from the defendants in a suit referred to his arbitration, together with a letter from the defendants containing some comments on the documents sent to him, and made his award without giving the plaintiffs any opportunity of seeing the said papers and documents and of meeting the inferences deducible from them. The papers in question were documents which referred to particulars of ruling rates of coal (page 312*) that were in dispute and affected the arbitrator's decision. It was consequently held that there was such a breach of duty on the part of the arbitrator as entitled the plaintiffs to have the award set aside. A recent instance of another kind is contained in the case of Walford Baker & Co. v. Macfie (11). In that case a contract for the sale of sugar contained no provision for the suspension of deliveries, "if the production by the sellers was prevented or lessened by causes beyond their control", nor any similiar clause. Owing to a cause beyond their control, the production by the sellers was "prevented or lessened," and they suspended delivery. Dispute having arisen, recourse was had to arbitration. A former contract between the parties containing such a suspension clause as the above was produced to the arbitrator by the sellers. The arbitrator made an award simply that "the sellers are entitled to suspend delivery under this contract." The Court was satisfied that, in making this award, the arbitrator was influenced by the terms of the earlier contract. On this it was held that the award must be set aside, the arbitrator having been guilty of legal misconduct, inasmuch as he had, in making the award, looked to a document other than the contract, which was the only matter before him, or, in other words, had allowed to be given, and had acted upon, evidence which was wholly inadmissible, and which went to the root of the question submitted to him for decision. But the present case is quite a different one. Even if plaintiff did not know the arbitrators contemplated taking this Will into consideration and was given no opportunity of being heard against it, this would not necessarily prejudice him. The document was not one which he could seriously contest, in the sense of showing it was not genuine or its contests untrue. All that he could urge would be that it was unjust or had no legal validity. But he clearly had an opportunity to raise these pleas, and in fact appears to have done so. Even before the reference he was in communication with Shivaldas as to the document prejudicing, or (as he puts it) "deviating" his rights (Exhibit 38); and in his final story of what happened on the 27th he says the arbitrators themselves told him that there was no Will, but only a rough unsigned document which was not genuine and that could not be relied on. This of course is an obvious lie, but it corroborates the evidence of Shivaldas that the Will was referred to at the meeting of 27th August, though he is not supported by the other arbitrators in his statement, that it was actually produced and inspected during that meeting. It was not necessary to produce it as the general tenor of its contents was, I think, undoubtedly known to the arbitrators and parties. In his letter, Exhibit 39, Shivaldas offered to show the document to the plaintiff, and it is very unlikely that the plaintiff did not go and see it when he was at Shikarpur later on during that month about the time he signed the reference. Shivaldas no doubt in his evidence says that he cannot say whether the plaintiff knew of this Will before the 27th August, but his memory is obviously faulty as shown by Exhibits 38–40. I hold on the evidence that the plaintiff knew of the Will and its contents, and had had an adequate opportunity of meeting and answering it, and in my opinion there was nothing improper in the arbitrators taking it into consideration. It was a document which was clearly reliable as evidencing what the deceased father, at any rate shortly before his death, thought should be arranged about the division of the family property between his sons, and presumably he would be in the best position to judge fairly in the matter.

According to Hindu Law, in cases like this not governed by the Hindu Wills Act or Succession Act, it is not necessary that a written Will should be signed or attested, and prima facie it had, therefore, greater validly than a similar document would in English Law. At the same time I do not mean by this to prejudice the decision of the 7th issue, for as stated in the case of Vinayak v. Govindrav (12), in order to make it a valid Will it is necessary to be shown that the document is a complete instrument and expressed the deliberate intention of the testator. All I decide at present is that the arbitrators could take it into consideration and they did not act improperly or unjustly in doing so. I hold, therefore, that this objection is also invalid.

The further objections taken in paragraph 3 (b) of the amended plaint that the award is written on an unstamped paper, and that the award was not made on the date on which it is alleged to have been made, are not now pressed.

The only other objection taken in the arguments is that the award is invalid as being incomplete, in that it does not make any actual partition between the parties. This objection is not included amongst those mentioned in paragraph 3 (b) of the plaint, but it can be taken as covered by the words "inter alia" in that paragraph. As ruled by the Privy Council in the case of Makund Ram Sukul v. Saliq Ram (13), the ground for holding an award to be invalid on account of its not disposing of all the matters referred appears to be that there is an implied condition in the submission of the parties to the arbitration that the award shall dispose of them all But here there is no such condition implied or expressed in the reference, for as there stated, the main object of the reference was to finally settle the disputes between the parties. No doubt it is the case that the plaintiff asks that he should get his share separately, but there is no express or implied indication that the arbitrators were expected actually to partition the whole property by metes and bounds. This would in fact appear impossible for them to have done in the case of the immoveable property at Shikarpur, in which the parties' cousins had shares, so the presumption is against any such intention. The case is also quite different from that of Ghulam Hussein v. Sakinabai (14), where the subject-matter referred was a suit that had been filed for partition and possession. In that case it was of course a necessary consequence that there should be an actual partition by metes and bounds. But here a division by a declaration of shares was quite sufficient for a settlement of the disputes between the parties, and no actual division by metes and bounds was necessary. As ruled in the case of Bhaurao v. Radhabai (15), in cases where an award directs partition to be effected, it dissolves the joint family and from the moment of its date it severs their interests.

This completes the consideration of the objections raised to the award, and for the reasons given above I answer issue 1A in the negative. It follows that under issue 1 the suit must be held barred by the award. It is not necessary to decide issue 1B.

After the above judgment had been delivered, Mr. Rupchand for the plaintiff claimed that the suit should not be dismissed, but that the plaintiff was entitled to a preliminary decree for partition, on the basis of the award. He argues that as the suit was filed before the award was made, the case should be treated as if the suit had been compromised, where a decree issues in terms of the compromise.

The matter must, however, be considered with reference to the amended plaint, which affords the only basis on which plaintiff's suit was allowed to proceed. In this amended plaint, he seeks to upset the award, and now that he has failed in that he cannot claim a decree on a ground which is quite inconsistent with his plaint, in which he contends the award is invalid cf. Vinayak v. Govindrav (12).

This view has the authority of the Privy Council to support it. The case of Kshenchunder Singh v. Shamachurn Bhutto (16) decides that "the determinations in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings, or involved in, or consistent with, the case thereby made," and that "the state of facts, and the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff, are not to be departed from."

In accordance with this principle, there are numerous rulings to the effect that a plaintiff cannot be allowed to abandon his own case, adopt that of the defendant, and claim relief on that footing, cf. Shibkrishk Sircar v. Abdool Hakeem (17), Mylapore Iyasawmy v. Yeo Kay (18), Balmukund Kesurdas v. Bhagwandas Kesurdas (19) and Nogendra Mohan Ray v. Pyari Mohan Saha (20). No doubt it can be said that the original plaint contains nothing inconsistent with the relief now claimed, but as already remarked, it is the amended plaint which the Court has now to consider; and in any case the original plaint was clearly an attack on the arbitration proceedings, which included the award as its natural sequæla.

I, therefore, refuse this request, and hold that plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. If the award is not acted on by defendants, he has his remedy. I can hardly conceive that the present suit would bar a separate suit on plaintiff's title under the award, since defendants themselves admit plaintiff's title thereunder, and this title surely cannot, therefore, be held to be a "matter which might and ought to have been made a ground for defence or attack" in this suit within the meaning of Explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. But Mr. Rupchand's application will in any case suffice to dispose of any such bar.

As to costs, I see no sufficient reason for departing from the ordinary rule that these should follow the event, and plaintiff must bear defendants' costs including those of defendant No. 3, for whom a separate Pleader's fee is allowed. But in drawing up the bill of costs, allowance should be made for those already paid by plaintiff under this Court's order of 27th September 1915, and defendants are not entitled to include in their costs the amount of stamp and penalty paid by them in respect of the award. As the award was mainly in their favour there is no reason why they should not have arranged for the stamp at or about the time it was drawn, especially in view of the plaintiff's suit against them. If they had done so, they would have been entitled to recover the proportionate share of the stamp payable by the plaintiff under section 29 (g) of the Indian Stamp Act 1899.

Suit dismissed.

HALLINGAL MOOSA KUTTI—DEFENDANT No. 1—APPELLANT

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 90, sub-s. 1 (d)—Lease by Government—Grants or assignments of interest, whether include lease by Government—Stipulation against erection of buildings on land demised in Malabar, legality of—Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act (I Mad of 1900, s. 19—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), ss. 2, 3—"Grant", meaning of—Interpretation of Statutes—Ejusdem generis, rule of, applicability of.

The words "grants or assignments of interest" in section 90 (1) (d of the Registration Act are comprehensive enough to include a lease by Government. [p. 347, col. 1.]

Munshi Lal v. Gopi Ballabh, 22 Ind. Cas. 933; 12 A. L. J. 219; 36 A. 176, dissented from.

A stipulation, in a lease granted by Government of land situate in Malabar, that the lessee should not erect buildings thereon does not fall within the mischief of section 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act and is saved by section 3 of the Crown Grants Act. [p. 346, col. 2.]

The expression "grant" in section 2 of the Crown Grants Act is not restricted to the transfer of prerogative rights possessed by the Crown but denotes transfers of land of every description. [p. 346, col. 1.]

Dost Muhammad Khan v. Bank of Upper India, 3 A. L. J. 628; A. W. N. (1906), 255, considered.

In construing expressions used in a section of a Statute, it must first be ascertained from the language of the section the class of cases which were intended to be affected. If the intention is clear, the occasion for the introduction of the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation would not arise. [p. 346, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 324 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Calicut, in original Suit No. 118 of 1916.

FACTS.—Certain land containing cocoanut trees was relinquished by the S. I. Railway Company, and taken possession of by the 1st defendant. The Government thereupon granted the land to the 1st defendant on lease for 3 years at a rent of Rs. 150 per year. The defendant contracted not to erect or alter buildings, not to cut trees, etc. He, however, erected buildings. In a suit in ejectment by the Government the defendant contended: (1) the lease was inadmissible in evidence, as it was not registered, (2) the contract not to erect, etc., was bad as penal and obnoxious to section 19 of Madras Act I of 1900, and the defendant claimed the value of a building he had erected. The lower Courts decreed the suit and ordered the defendant to remove fixtures.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Defendant-Appellant.—The lower Court is wrong in holding that section 90, clause (d), of the Registration Act applies. It applies only to grants of sovereign rights such as rights to minerals, etc.

Section 90, clause (d), refers only to sanads and inam title-deeds "and other documents" obviously ejusdem generis with "sanads" which convey the sovereign right of the Government only. See Munshi Lal v. Gopi Ballabh (1), following Dost Mohammad Khan v. Bank of Upper India (2) and Dost Mohammad Khan v. Bank of Upper India (3).

(1) 22 Ind. Cas. 933; 36 A. 176; 12 A. L. J. 219.
(2) 3 A. L. J. 129; A. W. N. (1906) 44.
(3) 3 A. L. J. 628; A. W. N. (1906) 255.

Government has no sovereign rights in Malabar. So any lease of land by Government cannot stand on a better footing than one by a private party.

Taking it that section 90 cannot apply, either section 17 of the Registration Act or section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act must apply. In either case the document is not admissible without registration.

Secondly, I must get the value of the chamagams made by me.

The contract not to erect buildings, etc., upon the lands is obnoxious to section 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenant's Improvments Act (Madras Act I of 1900). It is void. This law is not affected by the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), which was passed to affect the Transfer of Property Act alone. The Malabar Act is subsequent and it can hardly be said that a prior general Act will override the provisions of a subsequent special Act.

The Government Pleader (Mr. Ramesam), for the Respondent: – Section 90, clause (d), applies. If it can apply to a case of a gift or grant of full proprietary rights, it applies nonetheless to a grant of a limited leasehold interest. The words in the clause end with "any interest in land" including limited interests like the present.

Section 90 is inoperative in excluding the application of the Act to grants by Government. It was never in the contemplation of the Legislature that there should be a distinction between grants of full interests and grants of limited interests. See also sections 17, 48, and 49.

The Crown Grants Act is the sole authority in cases of grants by the Crown of whatsoever nature. See the word "transfer" in the preamble. So Madras Act I of 1900 cannot apply.

There is no difference in the operation of section 17 of the Registration Act and section 107 of the Transfer of Property Act. For the sections of the latter Act referring to registration are to be regarded as part of the Registration Act (section 4, Transfer of Property Act).

JUDGMENT.--Two questions of some importance have been argued before us in this case. By Exhibit A the 1st defendant took a lease of certain lands near a Railway station from the Government. The lease was for three years and provided for a rent of Rs. 150 per annum. It contained a clause that the defendant should not erect buildings on the land. Notwithstanding this undertaking he put up buildings on it. The suit is by the Secretary of State for ejectment. The defendant pleaded that as Exhibit A was not registered it was not admissible in evidence; and secondly, that the provision restraining the defendant from erecting buildings is obnoxious to section 19 of Act I of 1900, of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act. Both these contentions were overruled by the Courts below. We think they are right.

It was argued for the appellant that the first question relating to registration is covered by Munshi Lal v. Gopi Ballabh (1). With all respect to the learned Judges we are unable to follow it. The learned Judges say that the words "other documents purporting to be or to evidence grants or assignments by Government of land or of any interest in land" in section 90, clause (1) (d), of the Indian Registration Act should be read ejusdem generis with the preceding words "sanads and inam title-deeds." We see no ground for applying this principle of construction to the section. As was pointed in Angus v. Dalton (4), we have first to ascertain from the language of the section the class of cases which were intended to be affected. If the intention is clear, the occasion for the introduction of the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation would not arise. (See also the other cases collected at page 546 of Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes.) In the present case the object of the Legislature in enacting section 90 of the Registration Act seems to be to enumerate the class of documents executed by or on behalf of the Government which should not be affected by the previous sections relating to registration. In this view there is no ground for imputing to the Legislature a restrictive scope of the operation of clause (1) (d) of section 90. Further even applying the principle we are not satisfied that a lease of land is not of the same character as a sanad. As the learned Government Pleader pointed out, there are sanads by Government and zemindars which grant property on favourable terms. Therefore, the idea implied in a sanad is not that of a gift without reservation. For these reasons we are unable to agree with the Allahabad High Court that a lease is not within the sub clause. A further argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant requires a little more consideration. He contended, and in this also he is supported by Munshi Lal v. Gopi Ballabh (1), that the words "grants or assignments by Government of lands or of any interest in land" would exclude a lease. We are unable to accept this contention either. Turning to section 17 of the Registration Act we find in sub-clause 2 (vii) the use of the word grant, and that word is used with reference to transfers and receipts enumerated in clause 1 (b) and 1 (c) of section 17. In that connection the word has the meaning of transfer and does not denote a gift. We are, therefore, of opinion that the words "grants or assignments of interest" in section 90 (1) (d) are comprehensive enough to include a lease. The document, therefore, is admissible in evidence.

The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court got over the difficulty connected with the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895) in a manner which we are unable to accept as sound. Section 2 of the Act refers to "grant or other transfer of land or of any interest therein." This language shows that the word "grant" can be employed to denote a transfer of land. In the second place, it is clear that all transfers of land of every description are within the operation of the section. Mr. Menon's suggestion, that the Act is confined to the transfer of prerogative rights possessed by the Crown and not to ordinary incidents of a mercantile transaction in which the Crown may be engaged is opposed to the plain language of the Statute. We find nothing in Dost Muhammad Khan v. Bank of Upper India (2) and Dost Muhammad Khan v. Bank of India (3) to support this view.

On the second point, we feel no doubt that the wide language of section 3 of the Crown Grants Act is conclusive. The Government have specially armed themselves with powers which they have withheld from private parties presumably on the ground that they are not likely to misuse them. It is clear to us that these contracts are not within the mischief of section 19 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act.

We must, for the above reasons, confirm the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the second appeal with costs. The appellant will have two months to remove the buildings erected by him.

Appeal dismissed.

Musammat BHAGWAT KOER AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

DHANUKDARI PRASHAD SINGH AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow, estate of—Renunciation by widow, how effected—Surrender, validity of.

A Hindu widow can renounce her estate in favour of the nearest reversioner of her husband, and can by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. [p. 353, col. 2.]

Such voluntary self-effacement can be effected by any process whereby there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. [p. 353, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, a widow compromised with the reversioner her claims to her husband's estate, and the documents of compromise were drawn up on the footing, not that the widow surrendered her right, but that she admitted that it did not exist:

Held, that the widow was precluded from asserting any further claim against the estate, and that such estate vested absolutely in the reversioner. [p. 353, col. 2.]

This case (Privy Council Appeal No. 117 of 1917) was one of three consolidated appeals from the Calcutta High Court, which in this case affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Saran.

FACTS leading up to the litigation are set out in their Lordships' judgment. The two connected appeals involve only questions of fact and the application of well-known principles. The present suit referred to the estate of Jugal Kishore Singh, and the question arose in it as to the effect of a compromise made in 1874 between Anandi Koer, his widow, and Mahabir, the son of his surviving brother, Bachhu Singh.

After Jugal Kishore's death in 1872 Bachhu applied for a certificate to collect debt due to the estate, alleging that he was joint with Jugal Kishore. Anandi Koer opposed, alleging that they were separate and that she was entitled to succeed for a widow's estate. The District Judge decided against her, and gave the certificate to Bacchu's son Mahabir, Bacchu himself having died pendente lite. Anandi Koer could have contested this decision in a regular suit, but acting through her brother and attorney Dukharan she accepted it, and in consideration of certain property being given her for life for her maintenance, agreed not further to contest the matter. The agreement was duly carried out.

In 1894 Mahabir died, leaving a widow Musammat Bhagwat Koer (the first defendant-appellant). Anandi Koer died in 1904. In 1906 Musammat Bhagwat Koer adopted Ragheshvar Indar Sahi (the second defendant appellant) as son to Mahabir.

The respondent Dhanukhdhari Singh in this suit claimed Jugal Kishore's estate from Bhagwat Koer and her adopted son. He alleged that Jugal Kishore separated from his brothers in 1864 and that the title to his estate, after Anandi Koer's death in 1904, vested in himself as reversioner. It was admitted that he was reversioner both to Jugal Kishore and to Mahabir. The defendants contested his suit on the plea, inter alia, that Anandi had completely surrendered her estate in 1874 to Mahabir, and that the latter thereupon became absolute owner.

The Subordinate Judge found that Jugal Kishore was separate at his death: and that the compromise of 1874 was brought about by corruption and was not binding on Anandi.

He decreed the suit, and an appeal to the Calcutta High Court (Chitty and Teunon, JJ.) was dismissed. With reference to defendants' contention that Anandi Koer had surrendered her estate to Mahabir, the learned Judges observed as follows:

"There is no proof on the record that Anandi Koer was ever a party to the document which was executed in her name by Dukharan. Apart from that, the document in itself does not, in our opinion, amount to such a surrender or relinquishment as the defendants contend. It amounts simply to an admission that the three brothers were joint, an admission which clearly would not, in any way, bind the plaintiff even if it had been made. No doubt, Anandi Koer, who lived for some thirty years after these events, was content to receive the maintenance which was accorded to her by Mahabir Prashad, but there is nothing to show that she ever had any independent advice or was ever really informed of her true rights in the matter. This circumstance, therefore, is not of very much importance. We agree, therefore, with the Subordinate Judge that there was no surrender or relinquishment on the part of Anandi Koer, which would have the effect of accelerating the inheritance and of completing the title of Mahabir to the whole estate. Nor, for the reasons above stated, can it be regarded as a family arrangement which would have had the same effect."

On the present appeal,

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and Dube, for the Appellants, submitted that the Courts below had concurrently found that Jugal Kishore Singh separated from his brothers about 1864, and died separate. That being so, Anandi Koer succeeded him for her life. Mahabir Singh was the next reversioner. Anandi Koer surrendered the whole of her estate to Mahabir, and thereby accelerated the reversion and made him absolute owner. She and the nearest reversioner together represented the whole interest in the estate. A Hindu widow can surrender her whole interest to the nearest reversioner: Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1).

In this case Anandi Koer did so surrender her whole interest. This clearly appears from the terms of the document executed on her behalf: there was no reservation of any kind.

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 498; 46 I. A. 72; 36 M. L. J. 493; 17 A. L. J. 536; 29 C. L. J. 539; 21 Bom. L. R. 640; 23 C. W. N. 777; (1919) M. W. N. 262; 42 M. 523; 26 M. L. T. 5; 10 L. W. 105 (P. C.).

A surrender by a Hindu widow is effective, although she is granted maintenance out of the estate: Noferdoss Roy v. Modhu Scondari Burmonia (2).

The doctrine of surrender under the Hindu Law requires that the right of the widow should cease; it is just as if she died, the reversioner takes the estate not merely when she dies, but when her title is extinguished by renunciation, remarriage, or any other way; Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (3).

There is no evidence that the Rs. 3,000 mentioned by the Subordinate Judge was paid as a bribe to Dukharan, the only evidence is that it was paid for Anandi Koer's credit. We do not contend that the mere execution of the deed by Dukharan is conclusive: but we say that Anandi Koer being entitled and having in compromise of proceedings taken maintenance, there was a relinquishment in Hindu Law which vested the whole estate in Mahabir.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Sir W. Garth, K. C., and Parikh, for the Respondents.—What Anandi Koer is said to have done in 1874 could not possibly amount to surrender of her right and title to the estate. In the first place she did not herself execute the document, and there is nothing to show it was her act. She being a pardah-nashin, it was necessary to prove that she fully understood the meaning and effect of the deed. So far from this being the case, it has been found that her brother was bribed to execute the document.

But even if the document be good, it is nothing but an admission by Anandi of Mahabir's title on the ground that Jugal Kishore was joint with Bachhu. Such an admission by the widow cannot possibly bind the reversioner. The decision of the District Judge was under Act XXVII of 1860 and is not res judicata. Only a decision obtained in a fair trial against a Hindu widow will bind the reversioner: Risal Singh v. Balwant Singh (4).

A mere admission will not bind, especially when, as here, such admission is found to be contrary to fact.

There is nothing to show that Anandi knew or believed that she was the owner, and that as such owner she was relinquishing in favour of the reversioner; on the contrary she was acting, if at all, under the belief that she had no title, and it is impossible to say what she would have done had she known her real position.

Mr. Dube, in reply.—The document of 1874, coupled with the conduct of Anandi Koer for more than 30 years, established that she knowingly surrendered her entire estate in favour of the nearest reversioner. Disclaimer or renunciation in favour of the nearest reversioner by a Hindu widow has the same effect as her death or as her adopting: Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (5), Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (6).

By relinquishing her estate in favour of the reversioners, the widow creates in them a present indefeasible right: Debi Prosad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (3).

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT CAVE.—These are consolidated appeals against three decrees of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 22nd May 1913, two of which affirmed decrees of the First Subordinate Judge of Saran, dated respectively the 17th March and the 12th May 1910, while the third modified a decree of the same Court dated the 18th July 1910.

The facts leading up to the litigation may be shortly stated as follows: Srikishun Singh, Bachchu Singh and Jugal Kishore Singh were three Hindu brothers governed by Mitakshara Law and possessed of considerable properties in the districts of Saran and Gya and in Oudh. Jugal Kishore died on the 5th July 1872 without issue, leaving a widow, Musammat Anandi Koer; Srikishun died on the 18th July 1872 without male issue, leaving a widow and two daughters; and Bachchu died on the 9th February 1874 leaving a son, Mahabir Singh.

After Jugal Kishore's death Bachchu applied to the District Judge of Saran, under Act XXVII of 1850, for a certificate to collect debts due to the estate of Jugal Kishore, alleging that the three brothers had been joint in estate and that he was entitled as survivor to Jugal Kishore's estate. This application was opposed by Jugal Kishore's widow, Anandi Koer, who claimed that a partition between the three brothers had been effected in the year 1864 and accordingly that at the date of her husband's death the brothers were separate and she was entitled to succeed to her husband's estate. Bachchu died while the dispute was pending, but in the result the District Judge decided that the alleged partition had not taken place and accordingly that the three brothers were joint, and granted the certificate to Mahabir. This decision, being given only upon a question of representation, did not preclude Anandi Koer from raising the question of title again in a suit properly instituted for that purpose; but in fact Anandi, acting through her brother and attorney, accepted the decision and executed an agreement, dated the 17th May 1874, agreeing, in consideration of certain property being allotted to her for maintenance during her life, not further to contest the matter; and thereupon Mahabir took possession of the estate. This transaction, the effect of which is in dispute, will be referred to at greater length hereafter.

Mahabir died on the 21st June 1894 leaving no issue but leaving two widows, the defendant Musammat Bhagwat Koer and Musammat Rupkali Koer, the latter of whom was then enceinte and gave birth, on the 11th October 1894, to a daughter, named Ramdulari Koer. Mahabir before his death executed a Will (to be referred to later), probate of which was, on the 5th January 1895, granted to his two widows. The posthumous daughter, Ramdulari, died on the 4th June 1895, her mother, Rupkali, on the 8th February 1899 and Anandi, the widow of Jugal Kishore, on the 4th August 1904. On the 13th February 1906 Bhagwat Koer, the surviving widow of Mahabir, purporting to act under a power conferred upon her by her husband's Will, adopted the defendant Ragheshwar Indar Sahi as his son and executed in his favour a deed of adoption dated the 17th February, 1906.

The plaintiff Dhanukhdhari Prashad Singh is the nearest reversionary heir to Jugal Kishore and Mahabir, and claims to be entitled to their estates; and on the 20th August 1907 he instituted the three suits out of which these appeals arise against the surviving widow and the alleged adopted son of Mahabir in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge at Saran. One Ambika Prashad Singh, the purchaser of a part of the property, joined as co plaintiff in two of the suits, but need not be further referred to. The causes of action in the three suits are different, and it will be convenient to deal with them separately.

In Suit No. 200 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 100 of 1916 arises) the plaintiff Dhanukhdhari sued to set aside the adoption of the defendant Ragheshwar as invalid and contended that the power of adoption conferred by the Will of Mahabir had, in the events which had happened, no operation. The terms of that Will must now be referred to in detail.

The Will of Mahabir, which was dated the 20th December 1894, was divided into paragraphs. By paragraph 1 the testator, after reciting that he had then no male issue but had two wives living, directed that if any child should be born of either wife, or if children should be born of both wives, they should after his death become possessors of all his moveable and immoveable properties, whether ancestral or self-acquired, whereby the name and reputation of his ancestors might be perpetuated and the religious merit of his family might be preserved. By paragraph 2 he directed that if at the time of his death his children should be minors, his wives successively should act as their guardians and manage the estate. It was contended that, although the word "children" (aulad) is used in the above two paragraphs, they were in fact intended to operate in favour of male children only; but it is unnecessary to determine this question, as in any event the first two paragraphs are controlled, so far as female issue are concerned, by the third paragraph of the Will. The third and fourth paragraphs of the Will are in the following terms :—

"3. If there be no son born of either of my wives and only (a) daughter be born, in such a case also the management of the reasat shall be conducted by either the senior or the junior wife, whoever may be existing, and her (the daughter's) guardianship and training and education shall be conducted as provided in paragraph 2. She will have the daughter married in a gocd family as is the custom in my family. My wives up to the terms of their respective lives shall remain proprietresses and possessors as provided in paragraph 2. After the death of both of them my daughter shall become the proprietress, and she shall perpetuate the name and reputation of my family by residing in my house and maintaining the same as the absolute proprietress.

"4. If by the will of Providence no male or female child be born to me, in that case both my wives, one after another as provided in paragraph 2, shall remain, in concord, proprietors and managers and perpetuate the name and reputation of the family up to the terms of their lives. I also authorize my wives that, if both of them exist, they in concurrence, or if either of them die, the surviving wife alone shall select according to her choice some worthy boy from my family or the families of my relatives and adopt him, who shall remain obedient and dutiful as a son up to the terms of the lives of my wives ; and the said adopted son after the death of my two wives shall remain absolute proprietor in my place as my son, and he shall have all authority such as is possessed by me."

In the suit now under consideration it was contended by the plaintiff that under the express terms of the Will the power of adoption conferred by paragraph 4 was contingent on no male or female child being born to the testator, and that as a daughter was born to him (although after his death) the power of adoption never arose. He also contended that Rageshwar was not a member of the class, consisting of the testator's family (khandan) or the families of his relatives, from which alone any adoption could be made. Both these contentions were upheld by the Subordinate Judge, who accordingly set the adoption aside; and on appeal the High Court, while holding that Ragheshwar was within the class described in the Will, agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that in the events which had happened the power of adoption did not arise, and accordingly dismissed the appeal.

On appeal by the defendants to this Board the appellants relied on the strong presumption that the testator, a Hindu, would have desired that, in the event (which happened) of his having no child who survived him and attained maturity, a son should be adopted to him by his widow, and contended that the Will must be construed as having that effect. The presumption is no doubt strong, and in a case of this kind the Courts would not be astute to defeat an adoption not clearly in excess of the power ; but in the present case it appears to their Lordships to be impossible, without unduly straining the words of the Will, to put upon it the construction contended for on behalf of the defendants. The words "if no male or female child be born to me" clearly govern the whole of paragraph 4 of the Will, including the power of adoption ; and it is impossible, without going outside the terms of the Will and in fact making a Will for the testator, to hold that in the events which happened the power took effect.

The result is that the decision of the High Court in this suit is right and that this appeal must fail.

In the Suit No. 198 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 131 of 1916 arises) the plaintiff Dhanukdhari sued for a declaration that under the terms of the Will of Mahabir and in the events which had happened the plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession of Mahabir's estate. He based his claim on the contention that on the true construction of paragraph 3 of the Will the widows were only entitled to be guardians of the testator's daughter and to manage the estate during her lifetime, and that upon her death the estate passed to her mother Rupkali and on the death of the latter to the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge held that, on the true construction of paragraph 3, the widows took life estates in succession and that on the death of the surviving widow the property passed to Ramdulari or her representatives under section 106 of the Succession Act. He, therefore, dismissed the claim for possession, but added to his judgment a declaration, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, of the right of the plaintiff as heir of Ramdulari to succeed to the estate of the testator after the death of the surviving widow Bhagwat Koer. Both sides having appealed to the High Court, that Court affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit for possession, but struck out the declaration as to the plaintiff's reversionary right, holding that his plaint contained no claim for such a declaration and that the plaintiff had not made out his title to succeed to the estate of Ramdulari. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to this Board. Their Lordships agree with the decision of the High Court in this case They are satisfied that on the true construction of the Will and in the events which happened the estate was given to the testator's widows successively for life, and after the death of the survivor to Ramdulari, so that Ramdulari became entitled at birth to a reversionary estate under section 103 of the Succession Act; but the plaintiff has not in this suit adduced evidence proving his claim to be entitled to her estate, and accordingly no declaration should be made in his favour under the Specific Relief Act. This appeal, therefore, also fails.

In the Suit No. 199 of 1907 (out of which Appeal No. 117 of 1917 arises) the plaintiff sued to recover the estate of Jugal Kishore, alleging that in the year 1864 the three brothers, Srikishun, Bachchu and Jugal Kishore, separated and partitioned their properties between them, and that accordingly on the death of Anandi in 1904 the plaintiff as the next reversionary heir succeeded to Jugal Kishore's estate. The plaintiff also alleged in this suit that certain properties in Gya held under mokurrari leases in favour of Bachchu alone in fact belonged to the three brothers jointly and were partitioned with the other properties. The defendants denied the alleged partition and as an alternative relied upon the agreement of 1874 above referred to as amounting to a relinquishment by Anandi of her estate to the next reversionary heir Mahabir so as to vest the whole proprietary right in the latter. They also alleged that the Gya properties belonged to Bachchu alone.

Upon the issues so raised a large amount of oral and documentary evidence was adduced, and in the result the Subordinate Judge was satisfied, notwithstanding the decision in 1874, that the alleged partition had in fact taken place, and accordingly that Jugal Kishore at his death was separate in estate. He also held that the Gya properties belonged to the three brothers and were included in the partition. With regard to the transaction in 1874 the learned Judge held that the agreement executed on behalf of Anandi was not within the authority of her agent and was obtained by corruption, and that such agreement was never ratified by Anandi. He accordingly made a decree in favour of the plaintiff. An appeal to the High Court against this decision was dismissed. On the appeal by the defendants to the Board it at once appeared that upon the question of the partition and upon the question of the ownership of the Gya properties there were concurrent findings of fact in favour of the respondents which could not well be questioned; and accordingly the argument of the appellants turned on the legal effect of the transactions of 1874, which must now be more fully stated.

After the decree of the District Judge delivered on the 18th April 1974, by which he held that the three brothers were joint in estate and accordingly that Mahabir was entitled to a certificate, negotiations were entered into between Mahabir and the attorney of Anandi, her brother, Babu Dukharan Singh, and on the 17th May 1874, two ekrarnamas or agreements were executed. By one of these ekrarnamas, which was executed by the attorney on Anandi's behalf, after a recital of the recent litigation and the grant of the certificate to Mahabir, it was stated that Anandi, "in admission and acceptance of the judgment and order of the District Judge," and in consideration of the fact that Mahabir was the heir, proprietor and possessor of the estate of the three brothers, and that she had no proprietary interest therein and was entitled to maintenance according to the position of the family, "ceased from litigation." and that Mahabir, as the heir of the three brothers, had given her an 8-annas share of a certain mouzah out of the joint estate of all three brothers for her maintenance during her life; and after reciting that Mahabir had on the same day executed an ekrarnama to the same effect, the agreement concluded: "Now contrary to the terms of these ekrarnamas my principal shall have no right, claim, dispute or demand in respect of the estates of the deceased persons against Babu Mahabir Prashad Singh." On the same day Mahabir executed another ekrarnama in similar terms, whereby he secured the agreed maintenance to Anandi during her life. In pursuance of these documents Mahabir was forthwith let into possession of the whole property of the three brothers; and from the date of these documents until her death in 1904 Anandi duly received the agreed maintenance without dispute or objection.

It was considered both by the Subordinate Judge and the High Court that these documents were executed by the agent of Anandi without authority and in consideration of the payment of a bribe to him. Their Lordships cannot accept that view. There was indeed some evidence to show that a sum of Rs. 3,000 was paid by Mahabir to the attorney some time after the execution of the documents; but it was not proved that this sum was not paid in due course to the attorney as agent for Anandi and duly accounted for to her. In any case, the agreement having been accepted and acted upon by both parties for a period of thirty years without objection, and the stipulated maintenance having been duly received by Anandi during the whole of that period, it is not open to the plaintiff now to dispute the authority which was plainly admitted by Anandi herself during her lifetime; and in view of this circumstance it appears to the Board that the agreements in question must be treated for all purposes as binding upon Anandi and the transaction cannot now be disturbed. In this aspect of the matter it became necessary for their Lordships to consider what was the true legal effect of the transactions referred to.

The power of a Hindu widow to surrender or relinquish her interest in her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner at the time has often been considered and was fully dealt with by the Board in the recent case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (1). As pointed out in that case, it is settled by long practice and confirmed by a series of decisions that a Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, and by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. This voluntary self-effacement is sometimes referred to as a surrender, sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights; and it may be effected by any process having that effect, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. In the present case there was indeed no formal surrender by the widow of her estate; but there was an express agreement, binding upon her, that for considerations which appeared to her sufficient she would abandon the claim which at the time she had a good right to make and would have no right, claim or demand in respect of the estate of her late husband. It is true that the documents were drawn up on the footing, not of a surrender of an acknowledged right, but of an admission that the right did not exist; but in substance, and disregarding the form, there was a complete self-effacement by the widow which precluded her from asserting any further claim to the estate. The question is no doubt one of difficulty, but upon the whole their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the execution of the two ekrarnamas, followed by the acceptance for thirty years of maintenance under the terms of those documents, amounted to a complete relinquishment by Anandi Koer of her estate in favour of Mahabir, and accordingly that the title of Mahabir's representatives is established and the plaintiff's action should have been dismissed on this ground.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals in Suits Nos. 200 and 195 be dismissed and the appeal in Suit No. 199 allowed and that the last mentioned suit be accordingly dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay to the defendants their costs of the hearing of Suit No. 199 before the Subordinate Judge, except the costs of issues 4 and 5 (relating to the partition and the Gya estates) on which they succeeded, and will also pay to them their costs of the appeal to he High Court in that suit.

The defendants will pay the plaintiffs' costs of issues Nos. 4 and 5, with the usual set off. Upon these consolidated appeals to the Board, in which each party has partly succeeded and partly failed, there will be no costs on either side.

Order accordingly.

T. S. SUBBARAMA IYER (DECEASED) AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 462—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 7—Compromise, petition for, on behalf of minor—Application for sanction of Court, statement in, that compromise was for minor's benefit—Endorsement of Court on petition—Order not expressly stating that compromise is for minor's benefit, effect of—Petition stipulating for sale of minor's properties not subject of razinama—Guardian ad litem, power of, to sell property of minor—Father of minor joining in sale with guardian ad litem, effect of.

An order of Court sanctioning a compromise on behalf of a minor party need not on the face of it state in so many words that the Court has considered the terms of the settlement and has come to the conclusion that the settlement is in the interests of the minor. [p. 356, col. 2.]

An endorsement of Court on the petition to sanction the compromise, which sets forth that the compromise is in the minor's interests, to the effect that the petition is granted is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. [p. 356, col 2.]

Kalavati v. Chedi Lal, 17 A. 531: A. W. N. (1895) 126; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 666, explained.

If a compromise is binding, it operates as a bar to the trial of any question forming the subject-matter of the compromise. [p. 359, col 1.]

If a Court sanctions an arrangement but some of its provisions cannot be embodied in the decree because they do not relate to the suit, those provisions can be enforced against the minors though not by way of execution of the compromise decree. [p. 359, col. 2.]

Where in pursuance of a compromise a sale of the minor's properties is effected by the father and also the guardian ad litem of the minor, the sale is good, though the guardian ad litem may not have the power to act on behalf of the minor. [p. 360, col. 2; p. 361, col. 1.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—Where an arrangement is sanctioned by the Court involving the sale of a minor's properties, it is within the competence of the guardian ad litem to effect the sale [p. 359, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in Original Suit No. 18 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar Advocate-General, (with him Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The compromise is not valid and effective as the leave of the Court was not obtained. The Court should have expressly stated in its order that it sanctioned the compromise as being beneficial to the minors. The mere endorsement on the Razinamah petition 'granted' is not sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 462 of the old Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882). The Razi petition only required the Court 'to be pleased to accept the Razinamah.' That means that the Court was to file the Razi in the usual course. It is clear that the Court did not apply its mind judicially to see if the Razi was beneficial to the minors. See Privy Council decision in Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1). Also Ganesha Row v. Tulsa Ram Row (2), Subramanian Chettiar v. Rajeswara Dorai (3) and Kalavati v. Chedi Lal (4).

Assuming that the compromise and the decree embodying it are valid, what the Court sanctioned was only the Razinamah. The provision regarding sale did not relate to the suit and the Razinamah did not refer to it. As the stipulation regarding the sale is not embodied in the decree, the sale-deeds, so far as they affected the minors' shares, are invalid. The deeds were executed by the guardian ad litem of the minors who was not competent to execute them. The fact that the father signed the sale-deeds only shows that he conveyed his share.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar), for the Respondents.—Section 462 of Act XIV of 1882 does not say that the Court sanctioning a compromise on behalf of a minor should adopt a particular form of language or that the order should expressly state that it is for the benefit of the minor. It is enough if the petition of compromise and the order thereon make it clear that the Court was satisfied that the arrangement was beneficial to the minor. The petition, Exhibit VIII, distinctly stated that the Razi was beneficial to the minors and the Court, on a perusal of the petition, passed the order 'granted'. In the cases relied by the Advocate General it was held on the facts that the leave of Court was not obtained.

There is no reason to put a limited construction on the order of the Court. What the Court sanctioned was the arrangement contained in the Razi petition, including the stipulation for sale. The entire arrangement was brought to its notice and it is not fair to presume that the Court sanctioned only a part of it. The fact that the Razinamah did not mention the fact of the sale is easily explained by the fact that under the judicial decisions then prevailing it was understood that the terms of the Razi that do not relate to the suit should not be embodied in the decree. The Razinamah must be read with the petition and, so reading it, the provision as to sale is a material part of the arrangement. The fact that the guardian ad litem of the minors signed the sale-deeds does not render them ineffective. There is no statutory bar to it. On the analogy of the English law as to the powers of trustees and executors, the guardian ad litem should be clothed with all the necessary powers to perform his duties. If he has the power to compromise suits and adjust execution proceedings, it follows that he could also transfer the property of the minor in carrying out a compromise.

Even if it was not competent to the guardian ad litem to execute the sale-deeds, it is enough to give them validity that the minors' father, the 1st defendant, signed them. He was competent to dispose of the property to discharge the debts that were incurred for family purposes and it cannot be said that he was only conveying his share. He is referred to as executing for himself to distinguish it from the execution by the guardian purporting to act for the minors.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The real question for consideration is as to the binding character of the compromise proceedings which resulted in the decree Exhibit X and whether the conveyances Exhibits A, A-1 and B are valid transactions. The compromise was effected in a suit instituted to enforce a mortgage against the 1st defendant in this suit and his sons, the present plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 to 5, who were at that time minors, being represented by their grandmother as guardian ad litem. That suit was Original Suit No. 29 of 1899. The main defence to the suit was that the mortgage was not binding on the minor defendants inasmuch as the debts for which the mortgage was executed had been incurred by their father for immoral and illegal purposes. A written statement was filed and issues were framed. The minor defendants, were represented by a very respectable Pleader of the Kumbakonam Subordinate Judge's Court. While the suit was pending, the parties came to an amicable arrangement and a compromise was effected. Exhibit VIII is the petition of compromise and along with it was filed a Razinamah Exhibit IX. A decree, Exhibit X, was passed in accordance with that Razinamah. The petition sets out the nature of the suit and the defence and states that, on an examination made of the accounts with the aid of the minors' relations and in the light of the investigations made, it was found that the amount mentioned in the hypothecation bond sued upon had been borrowed and spent by the 1st defendant, i. e., the father, for the benefit of the family and for family purposes. Then it says that it had been settled through mediators that a sum of Rs. 6,500 should be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs in full satisfaction of the latter's claim. Paragraph 5 states that it had been arranged by the mediators that for this sum of Rs. 56,500 a sale-deed for Rs. 52,000 was to be executed in favour of the plaintiffs by the 1st defendant and by the guardian ad litem of the minors on behalf of the minors in respect of the lands in the hypothecated village, that an indemnity bond should also be executed with respect to the lands of one of the villages and that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs within 1st March 1901 the balance of Rs. 4,000 with interest. The next paragraph says that "the said arrangement is most favourable to the said minors' interest and benefit", and the Court is asked "to accept the Razinamah presented herewith whereby a compromise for Rs. 56,500 has been made as aforesaid with the plaintiffs by me on behalf of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4." It is signed by Lakshmi Ammal, the guardian ad litem of the minor defendants.

The Razinamah referred to embodies all the terms of Exhibit VIII, excepting what is provided in paragraph 5 as to the sale of the villages for Rs. 52,500. What it says is that "Rs. 56,500 is to be paid in full satisfaction of the claims of the plaintiffs in that suit and out of this amount, Rs. 52,500 (the amount mentioned in Exhibit VIII as the price of the villages sold) is to be paid within 2nd March next and the defendants shall pay to the 1st plaintiff within 1st March 1901 the balance amount of Rs. 4,000." The Razinamah is signed both by Lakshmi Ammal and by the 1st defendant. Both these documents are dated the 28th February 1900, and were filed on the same day in the Subordinate Judge's Court. On Exhibit VIII the order passed is "granted" bearing date the 28th February, and on Exhibit IX the order is "decreed accordingly". The decree is drawn up in the terms of the Razinamah and is also dated 28th February 1900. In pursuance of these documents Exhibit A was executed both by the 1st defendant T. S. Subbarama Iyer and Lakshmi Ammal, the guardian of the minors, on the 2nd March 1900 with respect to some villages mentioned in Exhibit VIII. Exhibit B is another sale deed with respect to the remaining lands also executed on the 2nd March by the same parties. Both these documents refer to the settlement arrived at between the parties by the Razinamah and the decree passed in accordance with the Razinamah.

The first argument advanced by the learned Advocate General who appeared for the plaintiff-appellant is that the compromise is ineffective inasmuch as no leave of the Court was obtained. This argument is merely based on a criticism of the words in the last paragraph of Exhibit VIII, that is, "the Court will be pleased to accept the Razinamah presented herewith". It is suggested that this only meant that the Court was to file the Razinamah, not that the Court was asked to apply its mind to the terms of the Razinamah in order to see whether they were for the benefit of the minors or not. I think this is merely quarrelling with words. The petition sets out section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provided for compromise of suits on behalf of minors. It states that the arrangement is "most favourable to the minors and for their benefit". There can be no doubt that the parties intended to ask the Court to give leave for compromise as required by section 462 of the old Code. The petition is signed by the guardian ad litem of the minors and the order made is "granted". That can only mean that the Court sanctioned the compromise as being for the benefit of the minors. The learned Advocate-General next argues that the order itself must show that the Court did, as a matter of fact, apply its mind to the terms of the arrangement and was satisfied that the arrangement was for the benefit of the minors. Section 462 does not require that the order of the Court granting leave should be expressed in any particular form. What it says is that "any agreement or compromise entered into without the leave of the Court shall be voidable against all parties other than the minors." No doubt the Court in granting the leave has to consider whether the arrangement or compromise is such as can be said to be for the benefit of the minor, but I do not think that the law requires that the order of the Court should, on the face of it, state in so many words that the Court considered the terms of the settlement and came to the conclusion that the settlement was in the interests of the minor. The question was before the Privy Council in three of the cases that have been brought to our notice, first, in Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1). There the compromise was held to be bad as, upon the facts, their Lordships found that leave of the Court had not been obtained as required by law. There was no such petition in that case, as there is here, expressed to be under section 462. The petition for leave in this case bears the signature of the Pleaders appearing for the minors, which is always some guarantee that the requirements of the law have been complied with, and there was no evidence in the Privy Council case, as there is here, that the matter was brought to the notice of the Court and the terms of the settlement explained to it. All that their Lordships laid down was that it must be shown that leave of the Court was obtained either by an order of the Court or in some other way not open to doubt. In Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (2) the principle enunciated in Manohar Lal v. Jadunath Singh (1) was confirmed. In Subramanian Chettiar v. Rajeswara Dorai (3) their Lordships refer to the above decisions and confirm the proposition previously laid down by them. If the law were, as contended by the learned Advocate-General, that the order of the Court must contain within its four corners a statement that the Court that considered the terms of the settlement had come to the conclusion that they were for the benefit of the minor, their Lordships would, in all likelihood, have so laid it down. We have, however, been referred by the learned Advocate-General to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Kalavati v. Chedi Lal (4). No doubt, the learned Judges there did say that the Court sanctioning a compromise or giving leave ought to make it clear in the order itself that it had considered whether the compromise was beneficial to the minor. No doubt, the Court ought not to leave a matter of this sort in doubt. But it is a very different thing from saying that, if particular forms of expression are wanting in the order although it is proved otherwise that the matter was fully brought to the notice of the Court and the Court granted leave having before it all the considerations, that the compromise must fail on that account. That this is not the law, is just what has been pointed out by Jenkins, C. J., in Virupakshappa v. Shidappa (5). It may be mentioned, as has been pointed out before, that the new Code has used somewhat different language with respect to this matter. It requires by Order XXXII, rule 7, that leave of the Court should be expressly recorded in the proceedings. But this is an alteration of a minor character and here at all events we have got an order in writing. I have, therefore, no hesitation in finding that leave of the Court had been properly obtained as required by the law.

The next contention of the appellant was to the effect that what had been sanctioned by the Court was only the arrangement contained in the Razinamah Exhibit IX and the decree following upon the Razinamah. But this is not, to my mind, a correct interpretation of the order of the Court. The provision regarding sale in paragraph 5 of the petition was an essential part of the agreement by which the suit was compromised. That was placed before the Court, and the evidence of the Pleader who appeared for the minors shows that the terms were properly and fully explained to the Court. He is a leading practitioner of considerable position, and the learned Subordinate Judge entirely believed his evidence and nothing has been urged by the learned Advocate-General to throw doubt on it. In fact he did not make any such attempt. According to that evidence the whole of the arrangement was brought to the notice of the Court, and it will not be right to presume that the Court wanted to sanction only a part of that arrangement. The entire argument of the appellant is based on the wording of the latter part of paragraph 6, where it is prayed that the Court might be pleased "to accept the Razinamah presented herewith", but this leaves out of account the previous sentence in the same paragraph that "the said arrangement is most favourable to the said minors' interest and benefit", referring to paragraph 5 containing the provision for sale as well as to the preceding paragraphs. I trust it was the entire arrangement which the Court was asked to approve as being beneficial to the minors. So far as I have followed the argument of the learned Advocate-General, he has not been able to suggest any plausible reason why the parties entering into an arrangement like this should have asked for the sanction of the Court for only a portion of it. It is perfectly true, however, that the Razinamah was presented along with the petition and the Court was asked to pass a decree in accordance with the Razinamah, and neither the Razinamah nor the decree contains the stipulation as to the sale of the properties. But that, to my mind, is easily explained by the practice of the Courts with reference to such matters as it obtained at the time in this Presidency. It had been ruled in Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (6) and Muthu Vijaya Raghunatha Udayana Tevar v. Thandavaraya Tambiran (7) that the relief given by a compromise decree should be the same as that claimed in the plaint or less and that any terms which do not come strictly within the scope of the suit could not be embodied in the decree. There can be no doubt that the practice of the Courts in this Presidency was in accordance with these rulings. In Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (6) the learned Judges laid down: "It seems reasonable to hold that the words 'so far as it relates to the suit' in section 375 must be restricted to relief which the Court could have given in the suit, and will not embrace reliefs which could only have been given in a suit based upon a different cause of action". In a more recent decision, however, in Natesan Chetty v. Vengu Nachiar (8), following Joti Kuruvetappa v. Izari Sirusappa (9), this view of the law has been dissented from. But that was long after the date of these transactions, which took place in 1899 and 1900. The frame of the three documents Exhibits VIII, IX and X clearly shows that the Court and the legal advisers of the parties were fully conscious of the law as it stood at the time. It was for that reason that, while the petition stated the terms of the compromise, the Razinamah left out the provision for sale, for it was apparently thought that such a provision could not properly go into the decree according to the above-mentioned ruling in Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (6). At the same time the Razinamah as well as the decree cannot be properly understood without reference to paragraph 5 of the petition, for according to the Razinamah as well as the decree Rs. 52,500 was to be paid within March 2nd, by which time the parties contemplated to complete the compromise by the execution of proper conveyances as provided in paragraph 5 of the petition Exhibit VIII. It may also be pointed out here that this point was never raised in the lower Court; it is not suggested in the plaint, no issue was framed with respect to it and the judgment, which is an extremely lengthy one, does not mention it. The learned Advocate General argues that this is a question of law and, therefore, it does not make any difference whether it was raised in the lower Court or not. I do not think that it is a pure question of law. Whether the Court wanted to sanction the entire arrangement or only a part of it depends upon what transpired in Court at the time. Evidence would have been forthcoming as to what was stated to the Court in this connection and whether this stipulation was brought to the notice of the Court and the Court wanted to sanction it or not. The Pleader of the minor defendants in that suit was examined at great length, and it was not suggested to him that the stipulation regarding the sale was not brought to the notice of the Court. I think there can be little doubt that this contention of the appellant is entirely unfounded.

The learned Advocate-General further urged that the petition, Exhibit VIII, did not contain some material facts which, if brought to the notice of the Court, might have induced the Court not to grant leave. It is said that some portion of the debts, amounting to about Rs. 10,000, was borrowed by the minor defendants themselves. No doubt if that was so, it ought to have been mentioned in Exhibit VIII. But that there was any such plea has not been proved. The written statement in that suit, although apparently in the possession of the Pleader of the present plaintiff, was not produced, and there is nothing to show that any such plea was put forward. Besides in the plaint in this case there is no allegation that any facts were suppressed or concealed from the Court.

Then it was also argued that the appellant must be allowed to show, even if the compromise is a valid and binding one, that the debts, or some portion of them, were in fact incurred for immoral and illegal purposes. In my opinion this is an untenable proposition. If the compromise is binding, it operates as a bar to the trial of any questions forming the subject-matter of the compromise.

The next contention of the Advocate-General is that since the stipulation regarding the sale is not embodied in the decree, the sale-deeds Exhibit A, A-1 and B, so far as they affected the shares of the then minors, are not valid. Those deeds were executed by Lakshmi Ammal, the guardian ad litem of the minors, on their behalf as well as by their father, the 1st defendant in the former suit. The contention of the appellant is first of all that Lakshmi Ammal as guardian ad litem had no authority to execute the conveyance. The question is entirely bare of authority; but so far as I am concerned, I have little hesitation in holding that the conveyances in pursuance of Exhibit VIII are valid and binding transactions. It is not necessary to pronounce upon any general question as to how far, if at all, a guardian ad litem or next friend is empowered, in conducting litigation on behalf of a minor, to deal with any property of the minor, whether involved in the suit or not. Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Iyer, the learned Vakil for some of the alienees, has cited the analogy of the rule of English Law relating to the interpretation of the powers of executors, trustees or public bodies charged with certain duties for a general proposition that where the law requires or empowers a person to do a certain act, that person must be taken to be clothed with all the necessary incidental powers to perform that act. The duty of a guardian ad litem is not confined to the conduct of the defence in the suit, but also extends to execution proceedings in which the guardian continues to represent the minor. The guardian ad litem representing a minor in a suit is empowered with leave of the Court to compromise the suit and also to adjust the decree in execution proceedings; and it is urged that it may often happen that such a person could not discharge these duties properly if he was not empowered with the sanction of the Court to apply the property of the minor in carrying out a compromise or adjustment. It is not necessary to discuss the broad question in connection with this case. Here the minors were sued upon a mortgage. With the sanction of the Court a compromise decree was passed for a certain amount and the property was made liable to be sold in pursuance of the decree. Instead of allowing the property to be sold by public auction, it was found beneficial to the minors' interests that a portion of the property should be sold to the mortgagees in satisfaction of their claim. A provision like this seems to me to be a matter quite within the scope of the suit and one which could be properly sanctioned by the Court. I am of opinion that where, as here, as a part of the agreement arrived at between the parties the guardian ad litem who represented the minor applies to the Court to sanction an arrangement by which the compromise decree is to be satisfied, e.g., by sale of some of the properties involved in the suit, and the Court finding the entire arrangement to be in the interests of the minor sanctions it, the provision for sale could be enforced. It was argued that the leave of the Court granted under section 462 does not necessarily mean any more than that the Court thinks that the arrangement is for the benefit of the minor and that it is no concern of the Court to see whether the arrangement can be effectively carried out and if so, by whom. But there can be no doubt upon the rulings of this Court, and this has not been disputed before us, that if the Court sanctioned an arrangement, but some of its provisions could not be embodied in the decree because they did not relate to the suit as ruled in Venkatappa Nayanim v. Thimma Nayanim (6), those provisions could be enforced against the minors, though not by way of execution of the compromise decree. The specific arrangement in this case was that the grandmother of the minors as guardian ad litem in this suit should convey some portion of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the compromise decree. It seems to me that, if such an arrangement be not within the competence of a guardian ad litem and the sanction of the Court accorded to it is to be of no effect, it might lead to very far-reaching results.

The sale-deeds can also be upheld on another ground. They were executed in accordance with the provisions of Exhibit VIII not only by the guardian ad litem of the minor defendants in that suit but by the 1st defendant, their father. It is suggested by the learned Advocate-General that each of these two parties, i.e., the father and the minors through their guardian ad litem purported to deal with their respective shares. But this suggestion is not at all justified by the terms of the documents. There is no mention in them of any one's share in any village; each of the parties executing the documents clearly intended to deal with the entire property. That was the scope of the stipulation in paragraph 5 of Exhibit VIII and that is the effect of the conveyances Exhibits A, A. 1 and B. That being so, we may leave out of consideration the part played by Lakshmi Ammal, the guardian ad litem of the minor defendants, in joining in the conveyances. The debts were incurred for the purposes of the family, and in order to discharge those debts the father was competent to dispose of the family property. The mere fact that the minors joined in the deeds through a person who might or might not have had authority to represent them in the transaction cannot make any difference as to the effect to be given to the conveyances as the acts of the minor himself. This is amply supported by the ruling of the Judicial Committee in Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh (10). The facts of that case were essentially analogous to those of the present case. There a deed of mortgage was executed by the Karta or manager of the family, one Khalak Singh, as well as by a person purporting to act as the guardian of his minor brother. Their Lordships held, according to well established rulings, that there could be no guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act for a minor member of a joint Hindu family and therefore the person purporting to act as guardian had no authority to represent the minor. Nevertheless they held that the transaction was valid, inasmuch as the debts were incurred for family purposes and Khalak Singh, the managing member of the family, executed the document. There is a similar ruling of this Court in Surapa Raju v. Venkatyya (11) and though the case of Gharibullah v. Khalak Singh (10) was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges, they laid down practically the same proposition. I am unable to see how this case can be distinguished in substance from those rulings which are based on what seem to me to be obviously good reasons. The father of the present plaintiff was clearly entitled to dispose of the properties in order to discharge these debts, and because the mortgagees or purchasers thought it safer that the minors should also be represented through their guardian ad litem or anybody else, that cannot make any difference as to the validity of the act of the plaintiff's father. I am, therefore, of opinion that this appeal fails altogether and must be dismissed with costs.

It may be mentioned that apart from the general defence, the 12th defendant in the suit also relied upon limitation, as he was made a party after the period of limitation had expired. The learned Advocate General did not press the case against him and did not challenge the dismissal of the suit so far as he was concerned.

I may point out that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge in this case is unduly prolix, covering 90 printed pages. It begins with verbatim copies of the pleadings, then sets out the issues and under each issue, states the contentions and arguments of the parties at great length. In dealing with the evidence, no attempt is made to concentrate attention upon such evidence as really throws light upon particular issues. Similarly with regard to the reported cases many passages are quoted at length, although the observations bearing on the questions at issue could be compressed within much shorter compass. There is a great deal of repetition throughout the judgment, with the result that it has necessarily taken up much of the time of this Court in finding out the conclusions of the learned Judge and the reasons on which those conclusions are based. We take this occasion to point out the desirability on the part of the lower Court to endeavour to set out the facts of the case, the questions for decision and the reasons for their conclusions in a way which would be of help to the Appellate Court in ascertaining without unnecessary difficulty how the case has been tried and how far the conclusions of the trial Court were justified.

OLDFIELD, J.—I have nothing to add to my learned brother's reasons for holding that no argument based on section 462 of the previous Code has been made good.

As regards the next point dealt with by him, viz., the capacity of Lakshmi Ammal to execute Exhibit A as guardian ad litem, I am not prepared to adopt his reasons for his conclusion. It is, however, unnecessary that I should deal with this point, because I am able to concur in his alternative ground of decision that the execution of Exhibit A by T. S. Subbarama Iyer, the father of the plaintiff, was sufficient. In doing so, I desire only to refer to the actual language of Exhibit A. The persons executing it are detailed as, firstly, T. S. Subbarama Iyer; then his sons, and their names are given with a statement that they are minors; then Lakshmi Ammal is mentioned as guardian for the said minors and again there is a reference to "Subbarama Iyer, for himself." It is unnecessary that I should follow my learned brother through his treatment of the authorities and his statement of the law on this point, with which I with great respect entirely agree. I only wish to observe that the reference in the document to Subbarama Iyer executing it for himself need not and cannot be, as the learned Advocate-General contended, read simply as meaning that he is executing in respect of his own share. Subbarama Iyer is referred to as executing for himself in order to distinguish his execution from that of Lakshmi Ammal, who is referred to as executing for the minors. The plaintiff's argument here entails that Subbarama Iyer did execute it for himself, firstly, as owner of his share and secondly, as the father of the minors; that is quite sufficient to support the conclusion in favour of the defendants, and there is no necessity whatever to restrict the interpretation of the words referred to as the plaintiff proposes.

In these circumstances I concur in my learned brother's decision and also in his observations on the character of the lower Court's judgment. I may add that it seems to me regrettable that the lower Courts should think it necessary to set out the whole of the pleadings, as they usually do, in extenso in their judgments, especially where they are, as here, voluminous, in disregard of the fact that the parties usually think it necessary to print them, as in fact has been done in this case.

This appeal having been set down for being spoken to this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—I think the respondents who are represented by Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyengar and Mr. A. Krishnaswami Ayyer respectively should be allowed separate fees in this appeal. If they had not succeeded on the preliminary point, it is clear from the grounds of appeal that there would have to be separate arguments on behalf of the two sets of respondents. But Mr. K. Srinivasa Ayyengar has asked us also to apply rule 41 of the Appellate Side Rules (relating to practitioner's fees) to this case. It provides that "in cases of special difficulty or importance, the Judge or Bench disposing of an appeal or other matter may, on the application of a party, direct that ( ) a higher fee than would ordinarily be admissible under those rules be allowed, (2) two sets of fees be allowed to a party who has engaged more than one Advocate, Vakil or Attorney. No doubt in this case three senior leading Vakils of this Court have been engaged on the side of the respondents and the present rule regarding Vakil's fees may be taken to be quite inadequate to meet the costs of respondents in respect of Vakil's fees. But rule 41 is meant to apply only to exceptional cases, that is, cases of exceptional difficulty and importance and we are unable to hold that the present case is one of such a nature. It may be that the present rules in force regarding practitioner's fees are not in touch with the actual practice of the profession but that is a matter for the profession as well as the authorities to consider. So long as the rules prevail, we have to give effect to them even though their application in particular cases may work considerable hardship. All that I would order is one set of costs for the 8th respondent and another set for respondents Nos. 9 and 12 to 14.

OLDFIELD, J.—I agree.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPLICATION IN INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS NO. 120 OF 1917.

January 24, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Rankin.

In the matter of ANSHU PROKASH GHOSE—INSOLVENT.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 36—Examination of insolvent, how to be conducted—Creditor, whether can take part in examination—Examination of mortgagee from insolvent—Mortgagee, whether entitled to costs—Practice.

When an insolvent is examined under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the creditors have no right to take part in the examination. [p. 363, col. 1.]

Where at the instance of certain creditors of an insolvent, a mortgagee from the insolvent prior to the insolvency is examined under section 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, with a view to challenging the mortgage, and at such examination the mortgagee is represented by Attorney or Counsel, he is not entitled to any costs against the creditors at whose instance the examination is held. [p. 365, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Langford James (with him Mr. B. C. Ghose), for the Applicant.

Messrs. N. N. Sircar (with him Mr. B. K. Ghose), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a motion in the insolvency of one Anshu Prokash Ghose, who was adjudicated in this Court by order of the 3rd August 1917. The present applicant is Akhoy Chunder Ghose, who at one time was a partner with the insolvent, in a firm of building contractors called A. P. Ghose & Company, under articles of partnership, dated the 13th December 1915. By a mortgage-deed, dated 27th March 1917, wherein the partnership was recited, and the fact that it had been dissolved, the insolvent mortgaged to the applicant the premises No. 1-1, Issur Mill Lane, (subject to a prior mortgage) to secure the sum of Rs. 24,500 as being the amount for which the applicant was to release all claim against, and interest in, the partnership. This sum appears to have been calculated, not on the amount ascertained by the taking of an ordinary partnership account, but on the amount put into the business by the present applicant with certain interest.

On the 21st January 1918, the applicant, as mortgagee and with the consent of the Official Assignee, obtained an order from this Court under rule 18 of Schedule II of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, for sale of the property and for the taking of the mortgage accounts by the Registrar.

Two creditors, Messrs. Osler & Co. and the present respondents, Messrs. K. C. Ghattack & Sons, appeared by their Attorneys before the Registrar minded to investigate the claim. At the second hearing on the 6th March, Messrs. Osler & Co.'s Attorney examined the insolvent and after so doing, asked for the taking of the accounts to stand over pending enquiry. The respondents' Solicitor joining in this request intimated a desire to examine the mortgagee under section 36. I am quite satisfied of the reasonableness and propriety of this desire, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the insolvent's evidence, the apparent conflict between the insolvent and mortgagee, and the lack of material and opportunity for getting to the bottom of the relationship and transactions between the two; and I notice that the mortgagee's Solicitor immediately took the very proper course of offering to facilitate the examination of his client under section 36, and to give inspection of documents. The respondents then applied for an order for the examination of the mortgagee by a petition which undoubtedly puts in the forefront the question of the validity of the mortgage-deed. The order of the 9th March, which was thus asked for and obtained, summoned the mortgagee to be examined respecting the alleged mortgage, and respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property. From the minutes of the proceedings before the Registrar I find that on the 13th, 19th, 20th and 21st March the present applicant was examined before the Court; his Attorney on the first occasion and his Counsel on the last three occasions being present and taking part on his behalf. In the end the respondents were not advised to attempt to have the mortgage declared invalid, and in these circumstances the present application is brought.

Now, the present application is an application which asks two things, first of all it asks that there may be an order against the creditor to pay the applicant's costs of attending by Solicitor and Counsel upon his own examination; it also includes a claim, of which I think nothing was said in argument before me, that a similar order should be made against the present respondents in respect of the applicant's costs of attending and taking part in the examination of the insolvent. So far as regards the latter part of the claim, there can be no doubt that that must be dismissed. I do not collect from the papers before me that there was any examination of the insolvent except his examination on the taking of the mortgage accounts, and his public examination; but if there was, if the insolvent was examined under section 36 at all, there can be no doubt that the mortgagee had no right to take part in that examination, and both he, his Attorney and his Counsel ought to have been excluded from the room.

I come to the main part of this claim—the claim, that is to say, as regards the costs incurred by the mortgagee in attending by Solicitor and Counsel for purposes of his own examination under section 36.

Now, it seems to me that I must dispose of that application, not (as I was asked to do) upon the footing that the applicant is a lucky man, or on the footing that the mortgage is one which now has got a doubt or taint about it still; I must dispose of it on the footing that the mortgage is valid, and that any appearance of suspicion was due either to the attitude of the bankrupt, or incompleteness of the available information or other circumstances over which the present applicant had no control; still less have I any right to assume that the petition was kept back in the applicant's interest. I have no evidence of the sort, and it looks to me rather as if the insolvent and the present applicant, at a time not very long afterwards, were at loggerheads. On the other hand, I must deal with it on the basis that in view of the circumstances, in view of the insolvent's story it was a proper case for enquiry and I must deal with it on that basis both by reason of the order obtained from the Court and because I think such are the facts.

What happens when a debtor is adjudicated? What happens is, that all his assets are vested in the Official Assignee who may never have heard of him or of his circumstances before. The creditors all rank upon an insufficient fund, and when the adjudication order is made, creditors, who up till then had no right to take any part in questions as between the insolvent and other creditors, become entitled to see that no mortgage is admitted unless it is genuine, that no debt is allowed to rank unless it is really due. Moreover, bankruptcy always commences with the act of bankruptcy, which may be at any time within three months of the petition, and subject to certain exceptions bankruptcy rips up the insolvent's transactions in the meantime, on the footing that during that period he has really been a person in possession of assets, the beneficial right to which was in his creditors. Now, it has long been a settled practice in bankruptcy that the ordinary right of discovery which a litigant has, is insufficient and inadequate to meet the case; ordinarily a litigation must be started, issues must be defined, and only then is it possible to have discovery at all, and the discovery must be confined to the issues; but a trustee in bankruptcy, or a creditor, has got to learn everything from the start, and for that purpose he is given what are intentionally inquisitorial powers, not confined to the determination of issues that have been raised; he is given those powers subject only to the control of the Court. There need not be an existing litigation; on the contrary if a creditor or a trustee has started litigation with the person whom he desires to examine, he has prima facie given up his right so to do and ought, except in special circumstances, then to be confined to the ordinary rights of discovery of a litigant. The purpose of section 36 is to inform the mind of the Court, of the trustee, of the creditor, to inform their mind for the purpose of enabling them to decide whether to embark upon litigation or not; but for such a power as this, the bankruptcy Court would be helpless, and it would be impossible to make any pretence of administration of the debtor's estate as the law requires.

In England for the last 15 years or so, and for a considerable time, I think, before that, there has been a well settled practice under the section which corresponds to our section 36, and that practice is this; the trustee never pays the costs of the witness attending by Solicitor and Counsel; he pays only the witness' travelling expenses and the witness' allowance; if there are no proceedings afterwards, or if proceedings are taken, and are unsuccessful, these costs are not allowed to be recovered by the person who has been examined under section 36. On the other hand, if proceedings are subsequently taken, and the trustee or creditor succeeds, the trustee or creditor is never allowed to include his costs of the examination in the costs of the motion which the other party is ordered to pay. The witness, in short, is treated as a witness, and is not treated for this purpose as a party at the examination. That being so, whenever a trustee or creditor brings a motion in bankruptcy, he is expected and required by the Court to have used those powers before he commenced his motion, and this is necessary because otherwise it will be impossible for the Court to exact the same standard of proof from trustees in bankruptcy as it would exact from any other litigant. If these powers are not to be used, and if the standard of proof is not to be lowered, it would result simply in this: that bankruptcy, instead of being a terror for fraudulent debtors, will become a mere convenience in their interests. Mr. Langford James cited to me two English cases. The first is the case, of Waddell, Ex parte, Lutscher, In re (1). I have read that case, and it seems to me that the utmost which it decides is, that the Court in such a case as the present would not be without power to make the order asked for. Moreover, the remarks made in the course of that case are obiter. Lord Justice James said: "This is not the case of a man who is charged with having property in his possession belonging to a bankrupt and is summoned to give evidence respecting it. In such a case it might possibly be said that there was a litigation between him and the trustee and that he was entitled to be protected by Counsel." Long since this case was decided in 1877, the English practice has been settled and established in the sense I have mentioned. When I come to consider the present case upon its merits, I do not find anything that makes me exercise my discretion in the light of Waddell, Ex parte, Lutscher, In re (1). The next case that was mentioned was a case under the Companies Act before. Mr. Justice Warrington: Appleton French & Scrafton Ld., In re (2). In that case it would appear that the original application which had been taken out asked for a summons for the examination of witnesses and also for leave to issue a misfeasance summons against them. The main argument, so far as I am able to collect from the judgment, went upon the question of jurisdiction to make the order asked for; but when that was decided in the affirmative, Mr. Justice Warrington goes on to say [Appleton French & Scrafton Ld, In re (2)]: "I desire to say in the strongest terms that my exercise of discretion in this case is not to be used as a precedent in any other case. I intend to lay down no such general rule, and I only make the order asked for under the particular circumstances of this case. The summons asked for leave to examine witnesses and leave to issue misfeasance summons, and the examination was asked for for the express purpose of establishing a case in support of the misfeasance summons. I agree that ordinarily persons examined under section 115 of the Act of 1862, as in bankruptcy, merely as witnesses, would not be entitled to be paid out of the assets or otherwise their costs of employing Solicitors or Counsel," and then his Lordship cited Waddell, Ex parte, Lutscher, In re (1). I am not very clear what the special circumstances in the case before Mr. Justice Warrington were that made him make an order that should not be regarded as a precedent. I think they were these, that the applicant in that case in asking for a misfeasance summons asked for a summons under sections 115, because he thought in that way he could not only institute a litigation at once, but could get a part of the evidence which he required for that litigation taken in the other way so as not to make himself liable to pay costs. Some such notion as that or perhaps some other exceptional circumstances may be the explanation; but as far as the precedent is concerned, I shall follow Mr. Warrington's request and I shall not accept it as a precedent in an ordinary case.

On the facts of the case before me I think there are no special circumstances except possibly one. It would appear that this mortgagee has been examined at different times on, at any rate, four days before the Registrar. Prima facie, that is a much longer time than an examination under this section ought to be allowed to take. I am not going to assume that there was anything irregular or wrong, so far, at all events, as the respondents here are concerned. There is no evidence whatever of that. I do notice that the Attorney for the insolvent was present at the examination and if he took any part in the examination, that action was quite wrong. That is the only fact that I can see that I ought to regard as at all a special fact in this case. Whether if a part, a large part, of the four days can be shown to have been occupied by the examination on behalf of the insolvent, I should be disposed to make an order in another application, is a question. There can be no order against the present respondents. In the presence of the Official Assignee, possibly in the presence of any subsequent encumbrancer on the mortgaged property, there might be a question of asking me to make the costs of defending his right part of the mortgagee's costs. There might also in another application be a question of making a case for asking me to give some portion of his costs out of the estate. I do not invite either application on the part of the present applicant but I keep my mind open. All I say at present is, that there is to my mind no case here why, in my discretion, I ought to make the order asked for against the respondent. In India, far more than in England, it is necessary to encourage creditors to look after themselves in connection with bankruptcy. I cannot get creditors to take nearly enough interest in the administration of the estates before me, and I am certainly not going to lay it down that the costs of an honest and necessary enquiry are to be thrown upon the creditors who take part in the administration within their rights, in any greater decree or upon any stricter footing than is the practice at home. For these reasons the present motion is dismissed with costs. I certify for Counsel.

Application refused.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT NO. 355 OF 1918.

February 15, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Marten.

KHEMCHAND ISSARDAS—PLAINTIFFS

versus

KHAIRUDDIN RANGLAHI AND ANOTHER —DEFENDANTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXV, r. 4—Interpleader suit—Claimants, failure of, to appear—Procedure.

Where in an interpleader suit both the claimants fail to appear, the proper course for the Court is to follow the procedure laid down in the first part of rule 4 (1) of Order XXXV of the Civil Procedure Code and to declare that the plaintiff is discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the money claimed, award him his costs, dismiss him from the suit and direct that after getting his taxed costs he must pay the balance of the money in his hands into Court to the credit of the suit. [p. 367, col. 1]

The order might further provide that it is to be without prejudice to any claim by the defendants or either of them for payment out of Court, or alternatively that the suit may proceed in the names of one of them as plaintiff in place of the original plaintiff or alternatively that an issue be directed to determine the rights of the two defendants inter se. [p. 367, col. 1.]

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, for the Plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.—This is a very curious case. It is an interpleader suit brought by the plaintiffs but neither of the two defendant-claimants appears at the trial. The 1st defendant has not entered an appearance at all in the suit. The 2nd defendant did appear by a Solicitor in the suit but has not appeared at the trial.

The question, therefore, that arises, assuming the plaintiffs make out their case, is what relief the Court ought to grant.

The facts very shortly are these. The plaintiffs are commission agents, and in July 1917 they received instructions from defendant No. 1 by telegram to sell 112 bales of cotton which were being consigned to the plaintiffs through defendant No. 2. They were also instructed to honour a hundi for Rs. 12,000 which the defendants or one of them were to draw on the plaintiffs. The cotton arrived and was duly sold and the hundi was honoured and paid by the plaintiffs. After doing all that, and after giving credit for the sale proceeds, and after debiting the parties with the hundi, there remains a balance of Rs. 2,553-2-7, which the plaintiffs admit are due from them.

Now what has happened is this: that defendant No. 2 claims that he was really the pledgee of the goods, that he was really the consignor to the plaintiffs and that as between himself and defendant No. 1, he ought to receive the balance of the purchase-money.

A reference to Daniel's Chancery Practice, Vol. II, 7th Edn., at p. 1275, shows that interpleader was originally a remedy in the Equity Courts and was begun by a bill of interpleader. Subsequently by statute interpleader was extended to the Common Law Courts and was later on amplified and is now governed by the Rules of the Supreme Court which will be found in R. S. C. O. 57. Those Rules are somewhat to the same effect as the provisions as to interpleader embodied in section 88 and in the 1st Schedule, Order XXXV, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Setalvad has not referred me to any of our Bombay High Court Rules dealing specifically with interpleader. As far as my recollection goes, I do not think we have any Rules modifying what is to be found in the Civil Procedure Code. One knows that interpleader is rather a technical subject, and that it is not always open to the parties to obtain relief by way of interpleader. I have not had the benefit of any argument on the point, but, as far as I can see, the plaintiffs have, according to the practice here, properly taken their proceedings by plaint. Proceedings by originating summons do not appear to be open to them, as would be the case in England. Therefore, as far as I can see, this is a case where within the meaning of section 88, two or more persons claim adversely to one another the same debt from the plaintiffs.

I think, therefore, the suit has been properly brought. The evidence in support of it is in order, and, therefore, as far as the plaintiffs are concerned, I think they have done all they can.

Now comes the question, what course I ought to adopt? Turning to Order XXXV, rule 4, it provides that:—

"At the first hearing the Court may (a) declare that the plaintiff is discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the thing claimed, award him his costs, and dismiss him from the suit; or (b) if it thinks that justice or convenience so require, retain all parties until the final disposal of the suit."

There are also certain other alternatives. Under sub rule (2) if I find that the admissions of the parties or other evidence enable me to do so, I may adjudicate the title to the thing claimed. Or, again, under sub rule (3) if I find that the admissions of the parties do not enable me so to adjudicate, then I may direct issues to be framed and tried, and can proceed to try the suit in the ordinary manner.

That is all very well, when there are two claimants before the Court, but in fact I have got neither the one nor the other. I cannot possibly try an action where I have got neither the plaintiff nor the defendant, nor, on the other hand, can I adopt the course of merely dismissing the claim of one or dismissing the claim of the other. There is money in the hands of the plaintiffs which admittedly does not belong to them. Therefore I must make some order which will put matters in train for the due disposition of this sum and for its custody meanwhile, and which will at the same time give a complete discharge to the present plaintiffs.

Mr. Setalvad did refer me to one case of Eveleigh v. Salisbury (1). It was an interpleader suit and there neither the plaintiff nor the claimant appeared. It was the case of a Sheriff having seized certain goods, and there the Court simply directed so much of the goods to be sold as would satisfy the Sheriff's charges and directed the Sheriff to abandon the rest of the goods. In other words, it directed the Sheriff to withdraw after realising his charges.

I cannot take that course here, because I cannot put matters in statu quo as was done there. I must make some order as to what is to be done with the moneys in the hands of the plaintiffs.

On the whole I think that the proper course will be to follow strictly the first part of the rule 4 (1) of Order XXXV and to declare that the plaintiffs are discharged from all liability to the defendants in respect of the money claimed, award them their costs and dismiss them from the suit, and treat this as the first hearing.

Then I will direct that the plaintiffs after getting their taxed costs must pay the balance of the Rs. 2,558 into Court to the credit of this suit.

Then the order will provide that it is to be without prejudice to any claim by the defendants or either of them for payment out of Court, or alternatively that the suit may proceed in the names of one of them as plaintiff in place of the present plaintiffs, or alternatively that an issue be directed to determine the rights of the two defendants inter se.

I think the order may also say, to make it quite clear, that this should be treated as an order at the first hearing under rule 4 (1) (a) of Order XXXV of the Civil Procedure Code.

Then Mr. Setalvad said he would also like to have an injunction. I do not know that he really requires an injunction, but certainly one of the defendants has threatened the plaintiffs with proceedings, and I think it may properly form part of the order that on payment into Court of the balance the defendants and each of them are to be restrained from taking any further or other proceedings against the plaintiffs in relation to the suit goods or the proceeds of them.

I think that really deals with the points.

My order will, therefore, be:—

Direct plaintiffs' costs to be taxed and paid out of the Rs. 2,558 in plaintiffs' hands. Direct balance of Rs. 2,558 to be paid to the Accountant-General to the credit of this suit.

Declare that, on such payment, plaintiffs will be discharged from all liability to defendants or either of them in respect of the suit goods or the proceeds thereof, and direct that thereupon the plaintiffs be discharged from this suit and that defendants and each of them be thenceforth restrained from taking any further or other proceedings against plaintiffs in respect of said goods or the proceeds thereof.

This order to be without prejudice to any claim by defendants or either of them for payment out of Court or for the suit to proceed in either of their names as plaintiff or for an issue to be tried.

This order to be treated as made on the first hearing under Order XXXV, rule 4 (1) (a), of the Civil Procedure Code. Liberty to apply.

The draft decree is to be submitted to me before it is passed and entered.

Notice of this order is to be given to both claimants, defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Order accordingly.

CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS SECOND APPEAL No. 94 OF 1918

ODAYAMANGALATH APPANNI NAIR—APPELLANT

ISAAK MACKADAM—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 135, O. XXXVIII rr. 1, 3—Surety bond, construction of—Undertaking to produce defendant at time and place ordered and to be liable for decree amount in default—Appearance of defendant in Court to conduct case—Release of surety on application for discharge, validity of—Privilege of party while in Court on Court business—Liability of surety where decree passed on compromise—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 135.

ODAYAMANGALATH APPANNI NAIR v. ISAAK MACKADAM.

A person executed a security bond undertaking to produce the defendant in a suit at the time and place ordered by the Court, and that on his failure to do so, he and his property would be liable for the amount payable to the plaintiff. While the defendant was in Court conducting his case, the surety asked to be relieved from his obligation, but as the defendant was unwilling to surrender, the application was disallowed. Thereafter the plaintiff and defendant agreed to a consent decree which was put into execution against the surety. On appeal the District Judge discharged the surety from his obligation. On second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that in order to discharge the surety from his obligation it was necessary for the defendant to appear in pursuance of a summons or warrant, or to voluntarily surrender to the Court, and to submit himself to be dealt with by the Court as directed by Order XXXVIII of the Civil Procedure Code and that as the defendant was not before the Court in the manner above indicated and did not surrender, the surety could not be discharged. [p. 369, col. 2.]

Where a person becomes surety for the production of the defendant in a suit, the fact that the parties effect a compromise, instead of going to trial, would not relieve the surety of his obligation to the Court. [p. 370, col. 2; p. 371, col. 2.]

A party who is before the Court to conduct his own case or to give evidence should not be arrested while he is before the Court or when leaving the Court house. [p. 370, col. 2; p. 371, col. 2.]

The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code should be strictly complied with in taking surety bonds. [p. 370, col. 1.]

Appeal and petition against the order of the District Court South Malabar, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeals Nos. 28 and 29 of 1918 respectively, preferred against the orders of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Calicut, in Execution Petition No. 2513 of 1917, and Miscellaneous Petition No. 342 of 1917 respectively, in Original Suit No. 325 of 1917 on the file of that Court.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondent, took the preliminary objection that the civil revision petition did not lie to the High Court, as the District Judge's order, even though wrong in law, was not lacking in jurisdiction. The civil miscellaneous appeal also went with the civil revision petition and followed the fate of the latter.

The Court overruled the objection so far as the civil miscellaneous appeal was concerned.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Appellant.—The bond is not in the form specified in the Civil Procedure Code. The surety could not be discharged as the conditions laid down in Order XXXVIII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, have not been fulfilled. The defendant was not brought to Court under coercive process. He was present to conduct his own case and, as is apparent from the Munsif's judgment, he declined to surrender himself. His mere presence in Court would not amount to surrender, unless he submitted to the Court to be dealt with under Order XXXVIII. Under section 135 he is immune from arrest while in Court on Court business.

The provisions of section 135 of the Contract Act do not apply, as the bond was given to the Court and the section only applies to contractual relations between the parties.

Mr. Menon, for the Respondent.—The surety's obligation ceases when the defendant is somehow before the Court after he has applied for discharge. It would be meaningless not to secure the defendant when he is actually in Court but to let him go and then issue fresh process against him. The defendant was in Court only in connection with the very case in which he was required to furnish security.

The decree having been passed by consent of parties, the surety was discharged from his obligation. Vide section 135 of the Contract Act.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The original suit was instituted against one C. W. Fuller. In the course of the suit an application was made for his arrest. When he was brought before the Court, the respondent before us agreed to stand surety for him. Thereupon Fuller was released from custody. I shall refer to the terms of the bond and its legal effect later on. Subsequent to this, the surety asked the Court, at a time when Fuller was before it to conduct his case, that he should be relieved from his obligation to produce the defendant. The District Munsif did not apparently agree to this course. Thereafter the plaintiff and the defendant agreed to a consent decree which has now been put into execution. The surety, whose bond was not in terms discharged, now pleads that by his producing the defendant before the Court and praying to be relieved from responsibility the liability which he undertook under the bond was put an end to. There is a further contention that as the parties to the suit instead of going to trial agreed to a decree by consent, the surety was discharged under section 135 of the Indian Contract Act. The District Munsif rejected these contentions and ordered execution. On appeal the District Judge has reversed the order. A civil miscellaneous appeal against the order refusing execution against the surety and a civil revision petition against the order discharging the surety from liability have been filed in this Court.

Mr. Menon for the respondent raised a preliminary objection that as the District Judge in the exercise of his appellate powers released the surety from liability and as his decision on law does not affect his jurisdiction, the civil revision petition is incompetent. As regards the civil miscellaneous appeal his contention is that if the civil revision petition goes, the ground of appeal in civil miscellaneous appeal fails and should be dismissed. It may be that for the hearing of the civil revision petition the preliminary objection has some force. But as the same order has been passed in the appeal from which the civil miscellaneous appeal has been presented, we are entitled in second appeal to scrutinize the correctness of that order. I must overrule the objection so far as it relates to the civil miscellaneous appeal.

Now to the merits. Mr. Madhavan Nair at the outset referred us to the terms of the bond which ought to have been taken by a Civil Court under Order XXXVIII. Form No. 2 in Appendix F of the Code of Civil Procedure is far more comprehensive than the bond which has been taken in the present case. The attention of the District Judge should be drawn to the incompleteness and inaccurate language of the bond now before us. It is desirable that in taking bonds of this description the provisions of the Code should be strictly complied with. Nonetheless we are not concerned now with what might have been the terms of the bond but only with the interpretation of the actual agreement that was signed. We must, therefore, deal with the liability of the surety with reference to the bond which he actually executed. By that bond which is Exhibit A in the case, the surety undertook "to produce the defendant at the time and place ordered by the Court. If I fail to do so, I and my properties are liable for the amount payable to the plaintiff." The question for consideration is, did he produce the defendant at the time and place ordered by the Court? The procedure to be adopted on an application by the surety for discharge, from liability is contained in Order XXXVIII, rule 3. Two contingencies are contemplated in that rule. The first is an application by the surety for discharge, whereupon the Court decides either to summon the defendant or to issue a warrant for his arrest. Clause (3) of that rule provides for the discharge of the surety: "On the appearance of the defendant in pursuance of the summons or warrant, or on his voluntary surrender, the Court shall direct the surety to be discharged from his obligation, and shall call upon the defendant to find fresh security." It is conceded that there was no summons or warrant against the defendant. He was in Court for the purpose of conducting his suit. The next point is did he surrender himself on that occasion? The District Munsif says: "He also expressed his unwillingness to surrender that day. I declined to arrest him on the spot, as he being a party attending Court for the purpose of conducting his case is exempt from arrest." In order to satisfy the requirements of a surrender it is not enough that a party is before the Court, but he should submit himself to be dealt with by the Court as directed by Order XXXVIII. The sentence from the Munsif's judgment which I quoted makes it clear that the defendant did not surrender.

Learned arguments were addressed to us upon the question whether it is necessary that the defendant must be in a position to be arrested in order that the requirements of production by the surety may be satisfied. The two provisions of the Code which have a bearing on this question are Order XXXVIII, rule 1, and section 135. Under Order XXXVIII the Court is empowered at any stage of the suit to issue a warrant to arrest the defendant and to bring him before the Court. At first sight it may appear as if the defendant is liable to be arrested while he is engaged in the conduct of his suit. But turning to section 135 the meaning of the Legislature seems to be clear. The first clause of section 135 provides for immunity of judicial officers from arrest while discharging their judicial functions. By clause 2 the parties to the suit, Pleaders and witnesses are exempted from arrest. The latter portion of clause (2) says that in cases in which the party before the Court is guilty of contempt, the exemption would not apply to him. Clause (3) provides for a further exception and enables a decree-holder to apply for the arrest of the judgment-debtor immediately after the decree. These are the only two exceptions which the law has recognised, and it seems to me that notwithstanding obvious inconveniences in requiring that an application should be made for the arrest of a judgment-debtor, while allowing him to get away from Court, the Code leaves us no room for doubt on the matter. The principle enunciated in section 135 has long been recognised in England and in India. It is not necessary to consider the vexed question whether the rule has been enacted in favour of parties or to safeguard the rights of the Court. I am inclined to the view, which has found favour with some eminent Judges both in this country and in England, that the intention of the Legislature is to enable Courts to render justice as between party and party by not subjecting a person who is expected to assist them in the discharge of his duties to the disability of a possible arrest. However that may be, the principle of exemption has been well stated in Appasami Pattar v. Govinen Nambiar (1) in these terms: "The well-established rule of English law that a witness or party to a civil suit, whose attendance is required on a trial before a judicial tribunal, is protected from arrest on civil process during the time reasonably occupied in going to, attending at, and returning from, the place of trial, rests on a principle which applies with full force here, namely that freedom from the fear of arrest encourages willing attendance and thus tends to the advancement of justice." That case is also an authority for the proposition that a party who comes to Court to give evidence should not be arrested while he is before the Court. The principle of this decision has been followed in a later decision in Zainab Bee v. Official Assignee of Madras (2). In that case the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Oldfield held that, while a person appeared in Court to prosecute an insolvency petition, he should not be arrested for claims arising under the petition for insolvency. John v. Carter (3) also contains observations to the same effect. Mr. Menon strenuously contended that it would be a meaningless procedure to demand that a fresh process should issue for bringing a person to Court without taking steps to detain him in custody while he is already actually before it. As I said before, the rule of exemption of a party appearing to conduct a case is a principle founded on a well recognised theory of jurisprudence which we are not at liberty to ignore. I am, therefore, unable to agree with the view of the District Judge that the presence of the defendant in Court, albeit it was for conducting his suit at the time when the surety asked the Court to discharge him from obligation, was a compliance with Order XXXVIII, rule 3.

There is one other contention of Mr. Menon which must be referred to. He argued that as his client undertook the liability only for any decree that may be passed on trial and as the ultimate decision of the Court was based on a compromise, the bond spent itself out. Mr. Madhavan Nair furnished two answers for this contention and I think both of them are right. The first is that the surety bond does not say that the liability is to be only for a decree that may be passed on contest. There is nothing unreasonable in a surety agreeing to be bound by a decree which may be passed either after trial or with the consent of parties. In the absence of a special stipulation in that behalf there is no ground for limiting the liability only to a decree passed after contest. If there has been collusion between the plaintiff and the defendant in obtaining the decree, the surety is not without remedy. Secondly, section 135 of the Indian Contract Act contemplates contractual obligations between the parties. Under the Code of Civil Procedure the bond is given to the Court and any infringement of the terms of the bond is a violation of the obligations to the Court and therefore the agreement between the parties which resulted in a compromise decree has not the effect of discharging his liability to the Court. For all these reasons I think the order of the District Judge should be reversed and that of the District Munsif restored with costs here and in the Court below. The civil revision petition is dismissed without costs.

(2) 24 Ind. Cas. 513.
(3) 4 B. L. R. O. C. J. 90.

BURN, J.—Action was taken against the 1st defendant in Original Suit No. 325 of 1917 (Calicut Additional District Munsif's Court) under Order XXXVIII, rule 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Security was furnished and the surety is the respondent in civil miscellaneous second appeal and civil revision petition. The bond which he executed does not follow the wording of the form given in the Appendix to the Code of Civil Procedure, but the variation does not appear to me to be material for the disposal of the present matter. The liability with which the surety has been saddled by the Court of first instance is clearly within the terms of the bond. The surety can escape only by showing that his liability has been terminated. The bond was executed on 31st December 1915 and the suit was disposed of on the 15th November 1917, when a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff in accordance with the terms of a compromise entered into between him and the defendants. On the same day the surety applied to the Court to be released from his obligation, on the ground that business engagements would prevent him from producing the defendant before the Court in future. The 1st defendant was present in Court and the Court was asked to take him into custody. The District Munsif declined to do so, holding that the 1st defendant was exempt from arrest because he was attending the Court as a party for the purpose of conducting his own case. The 1st defendant was allowed to leave the Court and summons was issued for his appearance (Order XXXVIII, rule 3). He did not appear and steps were not taken as the surety failed to pay the requisite batta. The respondent's application for discharge was dismissed on the 5th June 1918 and the decree-holder was permitted to proceed in execution against the respondent, but these orders were reversed by the District Judge. The decree-holder has, therefore, preferred the present civil miscellaneous second appeal and civil revision petition. The appeals before him (District Judge) were disposed of simultaneously and there is in effect only one judgment. I think the whole matter is open for consideration.

The District Judge was of opinion that by the mere fact of the 1st defendant's appearance in Court, the obligation of the surety was discharged. In this, I think, he was wrong. The procedure provided by Order XXXVIII, rule 3, had to be adopted before the Court could grant the discharge. The issue of a warrant is in any event discretionary and I am inclined to agree with the District Munsif that in the present instance, the 1st defendant was protected against arrest in Court by the provisions of section 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is immaterial that his presence was in connection with the suit in which security had been required, vide in Appasami Pattar v. Govinen Nambiar (1) and in Zainab Bee v. Official Assignee of Madras (2). Order XXXVIII, rule 3, contemplates that the application of a surety should be disposed of after the defendant has been brought before the Court for the purpose of the application or has surrendered to the Court for this purpose. These conditions were not complied with in the case.

For the respondent the principle underlying section 135 of the Contract Act has been referred to, and it has been contended that as the 1st defendant entered into a compromise with the plaintiff without the assent of the surety, the latter is discharged from his obligation under the security bond. This provision is not, in my opinion, applicable. The respondent had made himself liable for the amount that might be adjudged against the defendant. This adjudication might follow a compromise which the Court considers lawful and the liability of the surety is not limited to cases where there has been a contest to the finish. The liability of a surety is neither greater than nor different from that which he undertook.

I agree that the orders of the District Judge should be set aside and those of the

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CASE No. 3 OF 1915.

June 9, 1919.

Present :—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice.

THE KARADENIZ.

Prize Court—Vessel belonging to neutral having hostile commercial domicil, whether can be condemned —Orders in Council, effect of—Crown, right of, to alter law applicable to Prize Courts.

Where it is found by a Prize Court that on the outbreak of war a claimant who is a neutral subject had his commercial domicil in enemy territory and that at the time of the capture of the vessel and for a long time after he had no intention of removing that domicil to a neutral country, the vessel must be condemned as lawful prize [p 379, cols. 1 & 2.]

(Authorities discussed and reviewed.)

While the Crown cannot by Orders in Council prescribe or alter the law to be administered by a Court of Prize, the Court would act on Orders in Council in every case in which they amount to a mitigation of the Crown's rights in favour of the enemy or neutral, as the case may be. [p 372, col. 2.]

Messrs. Mirza and Inverarity, for the Claimant.

JUDGMENT.—On the 11th March 1915, I delivered a preliminary judgment in the matter of the S.S. Karadeniz. I was then of opinion that I was bound by an Order in Council of the 20th August 1914 to consider the Declaration of London as governing this case, that under Article 57 of the Declaration the neutral or enemy character of a vessel is determined by the flag she is entitled to fly, and that before the capture the Persian Government had recognised this vessel's right to fly the Persian Flag. That, therefore, the vessel could not be condemned as lawful prize unless I was satisfied that in spite of the apparent validity of the transfer of the vessel to the claimant, the control of the vessel remained in the hands of the Turkish vendors. On the evidence there was considerable justification for my holding that there was an arrangement between the claimant and the vendors that the latter should retain the control of the vessel and use the transfer as a means of getting her to the nearest Turkish port under the Persian Flag, but the claimant asked to be allowed to produce further evidence regarding the bona fides of the transfer, so I directed the cause to stand over for further proof. Some further evidence has now been taken in England on commission, but owing to the continuance of hositilities the claimant has been unable to procure the evidence he wanted from Constantinople. However, owing to a recent decision of the Privy Council the Government have asked me to set down the cause for further argument, and I have heard the arguments of Counsel on the question whether the vessel should not be condemned as lawful prize on the ground that the commercial domicil of the claimant at the time of the capture was Turkish. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in The Zamora (1), that while the Crown cannot by Orders in Council prescribe or alter the law to be administered by a Court of Prize, the Court would act on Orders in Council in every case in which they amount to a mitigation of the Crown's rights in favour of the enemy or neutral, as the case may be.

Then, in The Proton (2) the question arose whether Article 57 of the Declaration of London, which it was declared by the Declaration of London Order in Council No. 2 of 1914 should be adopted and put in force, prescribed the law to be administered by a Court of Prize or directed that the rights of the Crown were to be mitigated in favour of a neutral or of the enemy. The judgment says :—

"In their Lordships' opinion the former is the effect of the article. It declares that a Court of Prize shall determine the character of a vessel alleged to be of enemy character by one single circumstance, the character of the flag which she is entitled to fly, and not by the entire body of relevant circumstances, which determine the truth as to that character. This is a positive prescription as to a material part of the law of evidence...The terms of this article are little adapted to a waiver of His Majesty's rights in favour of others ; they clearly purport to prescribe the law on a topic which has been the subject of many decisions."

In my previous judgment I said :—

"But for the change effected by Article 57 there would have been no difficulty in deciding this case. According to the authorities the claimant at the outbreak of hostilities for the purposes of Prize Law would be considered a Turkish subject by reason of his mercantile domicil, unless within a reasonable time he transferred himself and his property to another country. See The Ariel (3). But this he had no intention of doing. It was by mere chance that he was at Piræus when the war broke out, and in his evidence he said that he intended to go back as soon as the Dardanelles were open to look after his business. It was immaterial to him whether war was going on or not."

I have now been asked by Counsel for the claimant to reconsider the opinion I then expressed regarding the commercial domicil of the claimant, when the question was one of mere academical interest, while Counsel for Government contend that on the authority of The Proton (2) it is clear that the vessel must be condemned unless I can come to a different conclusion. I am not prepared to say now that the question is so free from difficulty as I thought it was when I delivered my first judgment.

However, it has been argued for the claimant that I definitely decided that I was bound by the Order in Council and that it is not open to me to reconsider the case in the light of the judgment of the Privy Council in The Proton (2). I think I am entitled, before final judgment is given, either condemning or releasing the vessel, to reconsider any opinion I have previously expressed.

The Hague Convention does not apply to this case, as it was not ratified by Turkey. If then I can find that the Karadeniz bore an enemy character, she must be condemned. I shall now consider the authorities on that point.

"If a person has a settlement in a hostile country by the maintenance of a commercial establishment there, he will be considered a hostile character and a subject of the enemy country, in regard to his commercial transaction, connected with that establishment": Kent's International Law, p. 217.

In The Indian Chief (4) it was laid down by Sir William Scott that for all commercial purposes the domicil of the party without reference to the place of birth becomes the test of national character. The character that is gained by residence ceases by non-residence and is an adventitious one, no longer adhering to the subject of it from the moment he puts himself in motion to quit the country sine animo revertendi.

Therefore Kent says that the most important test is the animus manendi.

In The Gerasimo (5) it was laid down that :—

"The national character of a trader is to be decided, for the purposes of the trade, by the national character of the place in which it is carried on. If a war breaks out, a foreign merchant carrying on trade in a belligerent country has a reasonable time allowed him for transferring himself and his property to another country."

The property of a person not resident in enemy territory may acquire a hostile character.

In The Jonge Klassina (6) a claim was made by a Mr. Ravie, describing himself as Ravie of Birmingham, to certain goods coming to be imported from Holland under the authority of a license. Ravie had been to Amsterdam in connection with the export of the goods and the Court ordered their confiscation on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that Ravie had been as substantially employed in the trade of Amsterdam as any other mercantile firm of that place.

In The Ann (7) the ship under American colours was seized in the river Thames on the 1st August 1812. A claim was made by the master who was also sole owner of the ship, describing himself to be a British subject and as such entitled to the benefit of an Order in Council of November 1812 directing the restitution of British ships under the American Flag. The claimant said he was born in Falkirk in Scotland, that during the last seven years he had been chiefly at sea but when at home he had lived and still lived at Bathgate in the Shire of Linlithgow, where his wife and family were, that he was a British subject but that about sixteen years ago he had been admitted a citizen of the United States of America for the purpose of commerce only. The Court said: "Why this transaction is for the purpose of commerce: According to his own account, then, he ceased to be a British subject for commercial purposes." Nor did the mere circumstance of leaving his wife and family in Scotland avail him for the purpose of retaining the benefit of his national character.

In the leading American case of The Venus, Rae, Master (8) the decisions of the English Courts on the subject of national character acquired by residence and on the consequences of such acquired character were recognised as being founded on sound principles of public law.

"As a consequence of the doctrine of domicil, the Court decided (by a majority) that if a citizen of the United States should establish his commercial domicil in a foreign country, and hostilities should afterwards break out between that country and the United States, his property, shipped before knowledge of the war, and while that domicil continued, would be liable to capture, on the ground that his permanent residence had stamped him with the national character of that country.....The doctrine of enemy's property, arising from a domicil in an enemy's country, is taken strictly; and equitable qualifications of the rule are generally disallowed, for the sake of preventing frauds on belligerent rights, and to give the rule more precision and certainty." Kent's International Law, page 223.

In The Eumæus (9), decided in November 1915, Sir Samuel Evans said that Professor Dicey's definition of 'commercial domicil' as such residence in a country for the purpose of trading as makes a person's trade or business contribute to or form part of the resources of such country and renders it, therefore, reasonable that the hostile, friendly or neutral character should be determined by reference to the character of such country, was sufficiently clear and accurate for practical purposes.

It must be noted, however, that a person who has an interest in a house of trade in one country, although not resident there, is sometimes said to have a commercial domicil in that country and a personal domicil in the country in which he resides. See The Anglo-Mexican (10).

"Again, it seems clear that a neutral wherever resident may, if he owns or is a partner in a house of business trading in or from an enemy country, be properly deemed an enemy in respect of his property or interest in such business. He acquires by virtue of the business a commercial domicil in the country in or from which the business is carried on, and this commercial domicil, though it does not affect his property generally, will affect the assets of the business house or his interest therein with an enemy character."

From the opinion of the majority in The Venus, Rae, Master (8) Marshall C. J., dissented, contending that a commercial domicil wholly acquired in time of peace ceases at the commencement of hostilities, that the presumption of an intention to return to the native country at the first opportunity is to be entertained and that this presumption ought to shield the property from condemnation until delay or circumstances destroy that presumption. If then property of a neutral with a commercial domicil in belligerent territory is liable to capture although shipped before the outbreak of war, it would follow that a ship belonging to such a neutral, if captured at sea or in port on the outbreak of war, would be liable to be treated as an enemy ship, although the owner may have had no opportunity of absolutely relinquishing his commercial domicil.

I have searched through some hundreds of decisions of the Prize Courts of the Allies during this war in the hopes of finding a case the facts of which were in any way approximate to the facts in this case, but without success. The Venus, Rae, Master (8) was referred to by Sir Samuel Evans in the case of The Manningtry (11) decided in October 1915. Certain goods had been shipped before the outbreak of war by a partnership of four members. three of whom were in the position of British subjects and the fourth was a German subject. The place of business was in Germany. The President said:

THE KARADENIZ.

"The question to be determined would be what the position was in the circumstances of this case with regard to the right of capture or seizure of the goods at sea after the commencement of hostilities. If a subject of a belligerent or a neutral had a business in hostile territory at the outbreak of war, and resided there, he would, according to international law, have a commercial domicil there, and his goods would be subject to capture at sea after hostilities, although shipped before the war, ... [The Venus, Rae, Master (8)]. Apart from a commercial domicil by residence, the property of a person may acquire a hostile character, independently of his national character or his personal residence. If a person be a partner in a house of trade in an enemy's country, he is, as to the concerns and trade of that house, deemed an enemy: Pratt's Edn. of Story, p. 60; and the property of the house of trade established in an enemy country is considered liable to capture and condemnation as prize: Wheaton, Inter. Law, 4th Edn. (1904), section 334. The rule is succinctly stated by Story, J., in The Friendschaft (12): 'It has been long since decided in the Courts of Admiralty that the property of a house of trade established in the enemy's country is condemnable as prize, whatever may be the domicil of the partners. The trade of such a house is deemed essentially a hostile trade and the property engaged in it is, therefore, treated as enemy's property, notwithstanding the neutral domicil of any of the company'. But it seems also to be settled that in such cases confiscation will not take place at the commencement of war, if the trade has been carried on during peace, unless the person affected continues his connection with the trade after the war: Pratt's Edn. of Story, p. 61... The Vigilantia (13). It is not easy to see why, in the case of a partner in a hostile house of trade, time should be given to sever connection after war before confiscation by capture at sea is permitted, when no such opportunity is given to a person having a commercial domicil by residence in hostile territory. But I accept the law as it stands."

In his dissenting judgment in The Venus, Rae Master (8) Marshall, C. J., discussed how a commercial domicil might be terminated. He said:—

"If a British subject, residing abroad for commercial purposes, takes decided measures, on the breaking out of war, for returning to his native country," and again,

"An immediate discontinuance of trade, and arrangements for removing, followed by actual removal within a reasonable time, unless detained by causes which might sufficiently account for not removing, would fix the intention to change the domicil".

In The Manningtry (11) the President decided that the British partners had not taken immediate steps, as their duty was, at the outbreak of war, to divert the goods from reaching Germany and condemned their shares. If they had been neutral the case would have been different.

"The question turns upon the stage at which in the case of a pre-war shipment a neutral partner in an enemy house of trade ceases to have his share in the partnership property protected from confiscation... One test would be whether the neutral partner has done anything actively after the commencement of hostilities to further or facilitate the delivery of the goods to the enemy house...If the neutral does no act after the war in regard to the goods, but merely allows them to proceed in the ordinary course, I find it difficult to hold that his share in the goods innocently shipped should be forfeited. He has no duty in regard to the goods towards the belligerent State to stop their delivery because he has an undivided share in them. His situation appears to me to differ in that respect from that of a partner who is a subject of the belligerent State." The Anglo Mexican (14).

It would also seem that in the President's opinion a British subject carrying on a business in Germany but not resident there would be allowed an opportunity to sever his connection, as he cites with approval a passage from Calvo, Vol. IV, section 1937, p. 70:—

"According to these principles, if a merchant domiciled in a neutral country does not take at the commencement of the war immediate measures for withdrawing his goods from a commerce which has no longer a neutral character and to which he could legitimately attend in time of peace in the country of a belligerent, he cannot guarantee his goods from capture and from hostile confiscation by alleging that personally he resides in a neutral country."

In these days there would no doubt be difficulties placed in the way of withdrawing property, but I presume from this passage that if a British or a neutral subject engaged in trade in Germany at the outbreak of the war in August 1914, but not resident there, had goods at sea belonging to that trade, they would not be liable to capture and confiscation, provided the owner had taken such immediate steps as were open to him to divert the goods from that trade.

These questions were discussed by Judge Cator in the case of The Lutzow (No. 4) (15) before the Egyptian Prize Court in March 1916.

The Lutzow was a German ship which was captured and condemned as prize. A claim was made to certain goods on board her by the American Trading Company which had a branch in Hamburg. The goods had been bought by the Hamburg branch and had been shipped for transmission to another branch at Kobe. It was held that at the time of the capture the ownership was in the Hamburg branch and the goods were, therefore, to be treated as prima facie belonging to an enemy. The learned Judge criticised adversely the law as laid down by the majority of the Court in The Venus, Rae Master (8). He referred to The Ocean (16), in which a British subject settled as a partner in a house of trade in Holland had made arrangements for dissolution but was only prevented from removing personally by the violent detention of all British subjects who happened to be within enemy territories at the breaking out of war. Sir William Scott said:—

"It would, I think, under these circumstances, be going farther than the principle of law requires, to conclude this person, by his former occupation, and by his present constrained residence in France, so as not to admit him to have taken himself out of the effect of supervening hostilities, by the means which he had used for his removal."

Judge Cator remarks: "This...was the case of a partnership, but Sir William Scott makes no point of that fact." Again The Venus, Rae, Master (8) "declares that the supposed right of election on the outbreak of war does not exist." "This doctrine", it says, "is believed to be as unfounded in reason and justice as it is in law." But the learned Judge declined to consider the decision in The Venus, Rae, Master (8) good law. He concludes:

"No one can wish to inflict needless hardship on British subjects or on neutrals, and if on the outbreak of war a non-enemy, be he neutral or British, resident or non-resident, promptly closes his business and merely takes the steps necessary to remove his own property from the enemy country, I think he is entitled to do so."

The learned Judge further expressed the opinion that Sir Samuel Evans in The Manningtry (11) had not approved of the decision in The Venus, Rae Master (8) but from the passage which I have underlined (italicised) above, it would appear that the President felt himself bound to accept the decision although he thought that there was a good deal to be said in favour of the dissenting judgment.

In May 1915 the Prize Court at Malta had to deal with the claim of one S. Hovaghimain to certain goods forming part of the cargo of the SS. Erymanthos, a German steamer, which was captured and condemned as prize. The claimant was an Egyptian subject and a sleeping partner in a firm at Alexandria but he was domiciled and carried on business in Constantinople. On the outbreak of war he left Constantinople and came to reside in a neutral country. The Court expressed the opinion that he was not to be treated as an enemy subject. The facts of the case are not very fully set out on the record, but if, as it seems, the goods were consigned to the claimant at Alexandria, the Court may have considered that they did not belong to the trade carried on in enemy territory.

The decision of Judge Cator was reversed on appeal by the Privy Council [The Lutzow (17)] on the ground that the goods had been ordered by and belonged to the Japanese branch. Their Lordships said at page 441:

"On the outbreak of war the appellants were entitled to save themselves from being treated by Great Britain and her Allies as an enemy in respect of their German branch by promptly ceasing to carry on trade in Germany, and if for the purpose of doing so they removed from Germany by sea any property they then had in Germany, it would during its transit for that purpose be free from seizure and condemnation as enemy property."

In The Anglo Mexican (10) a claim was made by a naturalised American who had a one-fifth share in a German partnership. Their Lordships said at page 425:—

"An acquired domicil may be abandoned, and if prior to the actual capture the owner has already done some unequivocal act indicating an abandonment of his acquired domicil in the country of the enemy, the goods will prima facie be treated as belonging to a neutral. It has been sometimes urged that neutrals, resident in a country which by the outbreak of hostilities becomes an enemy country, ought to be allowed a reasonable time after such outbreak to elect whether they will abandon or retain their acquired domicil. This point was discussed in The Venus, Rae, Master (8). In that case the majority of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the United States decided against allowing any interval for election...The English authorities are not conclusive one way or the other. The point does not, however, fall to be determined on this appeal, for the respondent was not at the outbreak of hostilities permanently resident in Germany."

The Lordships also said:—

"If (a neutral not resident), having such a commercial domicil in a country which by the outbreak of war becomes an enemy country, he desires to avoid the consequences entailed by such domicil, he may avail himself of the interval allowed by law to discontinue or dissociate himself from the business in question. Inasmuch, however, as goods at sea when the war commenced may be captured before such reasonable interval has elapsed, the Court will in a proper case take notice of a discontinuance or dissociation taking place after the capture, or will even adjourn proceedings in the Prize Court, to give an opportunity for such discontinuance or dissociation."

There are, therefore, four classes of neutrals who may be engaged in trade in enemy territory on the outbreak of war:—

1. Resident; 2. Non-resident; 3. Resident and partners with enemy subjects; and 4. Non-resident and partners with enemy subjects.

The property of class 1 would be liable to capture at sea and confiscation on the outbreak of war if the decision in The Venus, Rae Master (8) must be followed, but the decision of the Privy Council in The Gerasimo (5) seems to lay down the opposite view and allow such a neutral a right of election. The property of class 2 would not be liable, provided the claimant took immediate steps on the outbreak of war to prevent it reaching enemy territory.

In classes 3 and 4 there seems to be a distinction according as the claimant is a subject of the other belligerent country or of a neutral country.

In the case of the former, a British subject at any rate is bound to take immediate steps to divert the goods from reaching enemy territory.

In the case of the latter, if in class 4, he is only bound to refrain from taking any active steps to enable the goods to reach enemy territory. If in class 3 I presume his duty would be the same, though I have not found any decision on the point.

Now the present claimant as regards the Karadeniz, which was his own private property, clearly comes within class 1, unless the fact that he was by accident temporarily residing in Greece at the outbreak of war can bring him within class 2. Such a question, as far as my researches have gone, has not been discussed before. It seems to me just possible that a Court of Prize guided by principles of equity might decide in favour of such a claimant, even if it held that he came within class 1, provided he took immediate steps to announce his intention of abandoning his enemy domicil and to prevent the goods from reaching enemy territory.

It cannot be disputed that on the outbreak of war with Turkey the claimant's commercial domicil was Turkish. He was born in Constantinople, he had always resided and carried on business there. About 1912 he became a Persian subject in order to free his children from the obligation to serve in the Turkish army, but that made no difference to the way in which his business was conduc'ed. He left Constantionple on the 21st October for Piræus because he had heard that one of his ships had been damaged there in a collision, but up to the 5th November he had disclosed no intention of giving up his business in Constantinople. When war broke out, he sent a man to Constantinople to remove his wife and family as he was afraid for their safety because they were Greeks, and they arrived at Piræus about the 13th or 14th November, but that by itself would not constitute a step towards getting rid of his commercial domicil in Turkey. See The Ann (7).

He said in examination in chief that he did not intend to go back to Constantinople as long as the present Government was in power. In cross-examination he said: "I object to the Young Turks' Government. I shall go back as soon as the Dardanelles are opened. It is immaterial to me whether war is going on or not. I want to go to look after my business." It was suggested that as the evidence was given on the 23rd February, two or three days after the Allied Naval Forces had commenced an attack on the Dardanelles, that the claimant was referring to the possibility of the forcing of the Straits and the capture of Constantinople by the Allies, but I do not think the claimant can be considered as meaning anything more than that he wanted to get back to Constantinople as soon as he could. Then in re-examination he said: "If I got to Constantinople I would try and get my ships to Piræus. I have some immoveable property and some cash there (Constantinople). I don't want to trade there while war continues."

The claimant had a partner called Bachrato, a Turkish subject, in Constantinople, who was looking after the agency business with reference to the other steamers in which the claimant had an interest, and if the Karadeniz had not been seized in Bombay, there is no certainty that the claimant would not have returned to Constantinople, or, if he had elected to remain at Piræus, that he would not have continued to direct the business at Constantinople from there.

The difficulty of the case lies in the fact that it may be said that he came within class 2 above, and that he had no opportunity after the declaration of war, when he happened to be in Greece, of making his election to retain or renounce his commercial domicil. It may well be that finding himself outside Turkey, and recognising the impossibility of removing his property from Turkish jurisdiction, he might have decided on carrying on such business as he could with the ships under his control outside Turkish limits, and it might, therefore, be conceded that thus he would have done everything in his power, which the Law of Nations required, to give up his commercial domicil in Turkey so as to render immune from capture property connected with a business carried on without the limits of Turkish territory. What importance is to be attached to his answer in re-examination? His objection to the Turkish Government must have been one of very recent growth, as he had made no attempt to remove himself from subjection to it before November 1914. In an unguarded moment he said in cross-examination he wanted to go back to look after his business, not to remove it; it did not matter to him whether a war was going on or not. Then he saw his mistake and said that if he got to Constantinople he would try and get his ship to Piræus. Against that there was the undeniable anxiety of the claimant, as soon as he had bought the ship, to get her out of Bombay to Busrah, a Turkish Port. On the 16th and 19th November he got telegrams despatched from Piræus inquiring whether the ship had left for Busrah. Is that consistent with an intention after the outbreak of war to remove his property as far as possible from Turkish territory? Does it not rather point to the fact that his after-expressed intention was influenced by the ship not having been able to proceed to Busrah and having been captured in Bombay? Is there anything to lead me to suppose that if the ship had got to Busrah, the claimant would have done anything to get rid of his commercial domicil in Turkey? Can it be said that the claimant was sine animo revertendi? On the best consideration that I can give to these questions I have come to the conclusion that on the outbreak of war the claimant had his commercial domicil in Turkey, and that at the time of the capture and for many months after he had no intention of removing that domicil to a neutral country. Nothing is said in the claimant's petition of the 15th January 1915 regarding any such intention. The only evidence now is the claimant's statement made before me, at a time when it was clearly influenced by the events which had happened and made in contradiction to his evidence already given. Therefore, even if the claimant can be considered as belonging to class 2, he has not proved what it was necessary for him to prove in order to save the ship.

If The Venus, Rae Master (8) is not to be followed, and no distinction can be drawn between classes 1 and 2, both having a right to elect, the result will be the same.

If the claimant on the outbreak of war had directed that the ship should remain in Bombay and had announced that he dissociated himself entirely from his business in Turkey, leaving the question of his being able to remove his property from Turkish territory to depend on the attitude of the Turkish Government, I do not think it would have been according to the law administered by Prize Courts to condemn the ship. But the claimant did absolutely nothing towards abandoning or denouncing his Turkish domicil. He does not come within the scope of the judgment of Marshall, C.J., in The Venus, Rae Master (8), when he said, "there must be an immediate discontinuance of trade and arrangements for removing followed by actual removal within a reasonable time".

Therefore, in my opinion, on the best consideration I can give to this very difficult case the ship must be condemned as lawful prize. This decision, whether reversed or upheld on appeal, still leaves open the question whether the transfer to the claimant was made in good faith.

Vessel condemned.

NACHAPPA GOUNDAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT IN S. A. No. 345 OF 1918 AND APPELLANT IN S. A. No. 401 OF 1918.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s 31—Rectification of instrument—Gift, deed of—Property, wrong description of—Title, whether perfected—Remedies open to transferee—Declaration of title, suit for—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 95, 96, 97—Subsequent bona fide purchaser for value without notice, position of—Preference.

Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act is only an enabling section. It is open to a transferee to seek relief by rectification under this section, but that is not his only remedy. He can protect his title as defendant without rectification. He can sue for a declaration that the property belongs to him without seeking rectification, in which case he can avail himself of the provisions of sections 95 to 97 of the Evidence Act. [p. 381, col. 1.]

Where property is transferred to a person and the deed of transfer gives a wrong number or description of the property conveyed which does not belong to the transferor, the transferee is entitled to treat his title to the property that was really intended to be conveyed as complete at the time of the execution and registration of the document, and to plead misdescription as a defence in an action against him for the recovery of the property, invoking in aid the provisions of sections 95 to 97 of the Evidence Act. [p. 381, col. 1.]

A subsequent bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the property that was intended to be conveyed by the prior deed of transfer, will have preference as against the first transferee if the latter, by his act or omission, made it possible for the transferor to deal with the property, the principle being that of two innocent transferees the one who has rendered it possible for the owner to deal with the property a second time must suffer for his negligence, [p. 381, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeals against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in Appeal Suit No. 86 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Erode, in Original Suit No. 248 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Iyer, for the Defendant-Appellant.—The plaintiff acquired no title under Exhibit C. Survey No 560 was not conveyed to him under that document. The only remedy open to the plaintiff was to have applied for rectification of the document under section 31 of the Specific Relief Act. His title is not complete until rectification. He might have sued for a declaration that Survey No. 560 passed to him under Exhibit C. Even then, there must be a prayer for rectification.

Defendant was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the plaintiff's title. It was the plaintiff's negligence in not seeking rectification that enabled his grantor to deal with the property a second time. He must, therefore, suffer and his claim cannot have precedence over that of the defendant. Defendant was not bound to go behind the title deeds Exhibits I and II, which were given to him at the time of the sale.

Mr. A. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.—The mention of Survey No. 553 in Exhibit C was a patent mistake. It was a mistake for Survey No. 560 which really belonged to his grantor, Both the lower Courts found that Survey No. 560 is what is referred to as Survey No. 553 in Exhibit C. The plaintiff is not bound to seek for rectification. Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act does not render that course obligatory. He might defend an action against him for possession, letting in evidence as to the property that in reality passed to him under sections 95 to 97 of the Evidence Act.

The defendant is not a bona fide purchaser for value. Defendant is a resident of a neighbouring village and knew the parties well. He could easily have ascertained by reference to the partition deed under which the land fell to his vendor's share and to Exhibit C and to Exhibit K, mortgage of the suit land by plaintiff, that what was really conveyed to plaintiff was No. 560 and he purchased the property at his risk. He could not claim priority over the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.—As the lower Appellate Court has not properly understood the pleadings and has not applied the law correctly, it is necessary to state the facts. One Kuttianna Goundan was the absolute owner of the properties in suit. By two contemporaneous deeds, Exhibits B and C, he disposed of the whole of his property in April 1906. By Exhibit B, he gave some property to his concubine with remainder over after her death to the plaintiff. By Exhibit C, he gave all the remaining properties to the plaintiff, who was his nephew. The uncle and nephew subsequently fell out and there was another document in 1908. This is Exhibit D. By it, the plaintiff gave back a portion of the properties covered by Exhibit C to Kuttianna. By Exhibits B and C, the donor purports to give to the donees Survey No. 553 consisting of 6 acres 52 cents. It is the common case of all the parties that Kuttianna was not possessed of Survey No. 553. Further the extent of Survey No. 553 which belongs to a third party is not acres 6·52 in extent. The donor was the owner of the Survey No. 560, which is 6 acres and 52 cents in extent. There can be no doubt that it was this property that was referred to as Survey No. 553, and this is found by both the lower Courts.

After these transactions Kuttianna sold to the defendant Survey No 560 in 1911. The concubine died a month before the suit. The case for the plaintiff is that he became the owner of Survey No. 560 under Exhibit C and that there was no title left in Kuttianna to sell that property to the defendant. The District Munsif gave a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for. In appeal, the Subordinate Judge has taken the view that Exhibit D was the only basis of the plaintiff's title. There is no warrant for this conclusion It is not pleaded that Exhibit D superseded Exhibit C. There is no issue about it and even in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court, there is no complaint that Exhibit D should be regarded as the only title under which plaintiff should claim.

Both the Courts below have dealt with the case as if plaintiff's case was one for rectification of Exhibit C. In this Court also, the authorities quoted by the learned Vakil for the defendant referred to this aspect of the case. In our opinion the Courts below were wrong. Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act is only an enabling section. It is open to the transferee to seek relief by rectification under it. If he gets a decree for rectification, the plea of a possible innocent purchaser that he got it bona fide for value without notice might be avoided. But the transferee is not bound to seek this remedy. He can protect his title as defendant without rectification : see Rangasawmi Aiyangar v. Sowri Aiyangar (1). He can have a declaration as plaintiff that the property belongs to him without seeking rectification. In such cases, the provisions of sections 95 to 97 of the Evidence Act can be availed of by him. This was the course pointed out in Karuppa Goundan v. Periathambi Goundan (2). The learned Vakil for the defendant suggested that even in such cases there must be a prayer for rectification. We do not think that it was held in Karuppa Goundan v. Periathambi Goundan (2) that without rectification, the title would not be complete. What was said was that if the plaintiff asked for this relief, it may be granted by amending the plaint. As was pointed out in White v. White (3), the decree declaring that Survey No. 560 was covered by Exhibit C would give to the plaintiff all that he wants. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiff's claim to the property was complete by the execution and registration of Exhibit C.

There is the further question whether this title can prevail against that of a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. If the plaintiff by his act or omission made it possible to the grantor to deal with the property and if the purchaser, without knowledge that Survey No. 560 was really conveyed by Exhibit C, bona fide paid consideration, it may be that he would be entitled to the property in preference to the plaintiff. The principle is well settled that of two innocent transferees, the one who has rendered it possible to the owner to deal with the property a second time must suffer for his negligence. It is not necessary to cite authorities for this proposition.

Before finally disposing of this case, we must ask the Subordinate Judge to return a finding on the question, in the light of the above observations, "Whether the defendant is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice."

No fresh evidence should be adduced. The finding should be submitted within six weeks and seven days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore submitted the following

FINDING.—A finding has been called for by the High Court on the following issue:—

"Whether the defendant is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice?"

2. It is urged by the appellant that as Kuttianna, the vendor of the land under Exhibit II, put the defendant in possession of the sale deed Exhibit I under which Kuttianna's father acquired the land and as Exhibit II made no mention of a partition deed, it was unnecessary for the defendant to have ascertained anything more about the title of Kuttianna to the land.

3. No doubt the partition deed Exhibit E under which the land fell to the share of Kuttianna at a division between himself and his brothers, the deed of gift Exhibit C under which the land was given to plaintiff along with some other lands by Kuttianna, Exhibit K which is a mortgage bond executed by plaintiff in respect of the suit land among others and attested by defendant and Exhibit D which is a settlement deed executed between plaintiff and Kuttianna and attested by defendant, refer to the suit land by a wrong Survey No. 553 while it is really 560 Exhibit D does not mention the suit land as having been allotted to plaintiff, but only refers to the northern moiety of it as having been given to one Ammani Ammal for life for her maintenance. The title of plaintiff under Exhibit C in respect of the suit land remains unaffected as observed by their Lordships in appeal.

4. Defendant is a merchant of Erode living at Selambagoundenpalayam, which is 2 or 3 miles from the village at which the plaintiff is living and the suit land is situate. He was aware of the disputes between the uncle and the nephew and of the arrangement come to as regards the enjoyment of lands. He also knew that a moiety of a land was given to Kuttianna's concubine for maintenance. If defendant knew that only one Nanja land was reserved for Kuttianna's enjoyment, it was but reasonable defendant should have ascertained how Kuttianna Gounden got the suit land. Kuttianna Gounden had brothers. If there was partition, defendant was bound to ascertain whether Kuttianna Gounden got it under the partition deed. If this had been done, it would have revealed the fact that the land was referred to by a wrong number. Then it would have also brought to light the fact that subject to one moiety of it being enjoyed for life by Ammani Ammal, the whole of it was given to the plaintiff under the deed of gift.

5. There seems to be no doubt whatever that Ammani Ammal was in possession and enjoyment of the northern moiety until her death a few months before the institution of the suit, and the Cist of the land has been paid by plaintiff from 1907. It is more likely that, as stated by plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 1 to 8, the land was in the possession of plaintiff than it was in the possession of Kuttianna Gounden as stated by plaintiff's witness No. 9. Defendant exercised no reasonable diligence to ascertain and find out how Kuttianna was entitled to the property, whether Kuttianna was in possession and enjoyment of the land and who paid the assessment of the land.

6. The mere payment of the consideration spoken to by defendant and borne out by an entry in his account book and the inferential evidence given by defendant's witness No. 1 that as there is a recital in Exhibit II as to payment, the consideration would have been paid, do not impress me as sufficient in this case to find that there was actual payment of consideration in spite of defendant's position as a man paying a large Kandayam and income tax as a trader.

7. I find that defendant is not a purchaser for value without notice.

These second appeals coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by the Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding and dismiss Second Appeal No. 345 of 1918 with costs. As a result of this conclusion, the decree in Second Appeal No. 401 of 1918 will be reversed and the decree of the District Munsif will be restored. As was held by the Subordinate Judge in the appeal we have confirmed, there must be an enquiry as to mesne profits in respect of the property covered by Second Appeal No. 401 of 1918 as well and a final decree embodying the result must be passed. There will be no costs in this Court in Second Appeal No. 401 of 1918. Plaintiff will have his costs in the lower Appellate Court.

HARAN CHANDRA MUKHERJEE AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS AND OTHERS—Pro forma DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Mourasi mokarrari lease, construction of—Rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind—Value of paddy payable, fixing of, effect of.

In a mourasi mokarrari lease the rent was fixed at the rate of Rs. 1-6-8 gandas per year in cash in addition to paddy rent at the rate of 7 aris per year, and the price of the paddy was fixed at a certain rate per ari and taking the cash and the price of paddy together the total rent was stated in the lease to be fixed at Rs. 16- 6-8 gandas. In the lease there was also a clause that there shall be no increase or abatement in the jama:

Held, per Curiam (Newbould, J., dissenting)—(1) that the lease being mourasi mokarrari the rent was a fixed one, and that the landlords were entitled to recover only at the rate of Rs. 16-6-8 gandas per year, as noted in the lease, as the total rent and not at any higher sum, though the price of paddy might vary from time to time; [p. 384, col. 1; p. 385, col. 1.]

(2) that the parties should be held to that which they had said in the contract and the Court should not speculate to arrive at the conclusion that the provision regarding the total yearly rent had been inserted merely for the purpose of registration fee. [p. 384, cols. 1 & 2; p. 385, col. 1.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—The Court will give effect only to such intention as the parties were able to express by the language used in the document, and it will not be concerned with any unexpressed intention which they might have entertained. The suggestion that the quantity of paddy deliverable might have been valued for the purpose of payment of the registration fee was a speculation for which there was no foundation. [p. 385, col. 2.]

To hold that the amount of rent would vary from year to year according to the market price of the paddy would be to destroy the character of the lease as mourasi mokarrari. [p. 386, col. 1.]

Per Newbould, J.—The recovery of paddy rent at its cost value as it varies from year to year is not inconsistent with the tenure being a mokarrari one. When the value of the paddy varies, the value of the cash may also be said to vary in comparison with the paddy. [p. 386, col. 1.]

In the absence of any agreement in the kabuliyat to pay the total rent in cash, the statement fixing the total rent at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas can be taken as a statement added to the document for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and the registration fee. [p. 386, col. 2.]

Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra, 7 Ind. Cas. 875; 37 C. 626, relied on.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of 24-Perganas, dated the 20th August 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Barasat, dated the 28th July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Narayan Chandro Kar), for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendants, and it arises out of a suit for rent. The Courts below have erred in giving the plaintiffs a decree for the full amount claimed by them. The question is whether the total rent payable under the lease is fixed or is liable to variation as the price of paddy rises or falls. I submit that upon a proper construction of the lease the parties had fixed the amount of rent at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas. There is no foundation for the finding of the Courts below that the total rent was inserted merely for the purpose of determining the stamp duty. The kabuliyat is a mourasi mokarrari lease, and the character of the lease would be destroyed if the rent be held to be liable to variation according to the rise or fall of the price of the paddy. I rely on Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1), Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (2), Bipro Charan v. Suchand Roy (3) and Dwarika Nath Mukerjee v. Dwijendra Nath Ghosal (4).

Babu Atindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Respondents, urged that although the rent was fixed in perpetuity, it was liable to variation according to the variation of the price of the paddy. The total rent was inserted merely for the purpose of determining the registration fee and stamp duty. Referred to Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (5), Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (6), Sheikh Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (7), Chandra Kumar Singh v. Kali Prosad Chuckerbutty (8). The case in Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (2) was distinguishable, because there the tenant had an option to pay the whole rent in cash whereas in the present case the tenant had no such option to pay the whole rent in cash.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of 24-Pergannas, whereby he affirmed the judgment of the Court below, and the only question which arises on this appeal is with reference to the amount of rent which is payable under the contract in writing, a translation of which has been handed up to us.

I think it is desirable in this case to draw attention to the terms of the plaintiff's claim, and we are indebted to my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee, who is sitting with us at our request, for having our attention drawn to the claim. The claim is one for Re. 1-6 8 gandas in cash, the value of the paddy is Rs. 23-12, making a total of something over Rs. 30; then in addition to that, the plaintiffs have claimed 25 per cent. on the Rs. 30 odd, making an amount of Rs. 7 odd and altogether Rs. 38-9. The 25 per cent. is obviously a claim in pursuance of section 68 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore, it is obvious that, that is a claim for rent and nothing else. Otherwise, the plaintiffs could not have claimed 25 per cent. on the amount which they had claimed.

In order to justify this claim, the plaintiffs must satisfy us that there was a covenant in the contract to pay such a claim.

The document was a mokarrari and mourasi kabuliyat. The kabuliyat was in respect of 4 bighas and "at the rent at Rs. 1.6.8 each and 7 aris of paddy the market price whereof is Rs. 15." Then comes a phrase as to the translation of which there was a little dispute, although I think the translation given by the learned Vakil for the appellants and that given by the learned Vakil for the respondents did not differ very much. On behalf of the appellants it was said that the Bengali words (of that phrase) ought to be translated as follows: 'Taking the cash and the price of paddy together, the total rent being fixed at Rs. 16 6 8 gandas." The learned Vakil for the respondents translated them as follows: "Taking the cash and the price of paddy together, assessing the total rent at Rs. 16.6.8 gandas." As I have said before, I do not think there is any material difference between the two translations. Then the document goes on as follows: "And on payment of Rs. 30 as salami, and covenant that I will maintain the boundaries and shall pay the cash rent fixed every year in Bhadra and Pous and the paddy in the month of Magh every year in one kist." Then there are several other provisions to which I need not refer. Then there is the following clause: "There shall be no increase or abatement in the jama." At the end are these words: "To this effect I hereby execute this mokarrari mourasi kabuliyat."

On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the material sentence to which I have referred was inserted merely for the purpose of determining the registration fee. On the other hand, on behalf of the appellants it was contended that the parties had agreed to fix the total rent which was payable under this contract and had fixed this amount at Rs. 16.6 8 gandas. The question we have to decide is which of these constructions is the correct one.

In my judgment the appellants' contention is the correct one.

The first thing to be noticed is that this is a mourasi mokarrari kabuliyat, and, therefore, one would expect to find a fixed rent. In the next place, the parties should be held to that which they have said in the contract, and I do not see why the Court should speculate and as a result of that speculation arrive at the conclusion that the important provision to which I have referred had been inserted merely for the purpose of determining the registration fee. I think there might be good reason for the parties having fixed the rent: the parties may have thought that it would be more prudent, as between themselves, to fix the amount which should be taken as the value of the paddy rather than have a dispute upon each occasion as to the market value of it, in case it were not delivered. That is a point to which the late Chief Justice Sir Francis Maclean drew attention in giving his judgment in an unreported case, decided by Sir Francis Maclean, and Mr. Justice Banerjee, Appeal from Appellate Decree No 966 of 1895 [Duarika Nath Mukerjee v. Diwijendra Nath Ghosal (4)], to which our attention was drawn. The Bengali words which were used in the present contract are, no doubt, not the same as the Bengali words in the contract with which Sir Francis Maclean and Mr. Justice Banerjee had to deal, but it was contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants, and I think it is not denied by the learned Vakil for the respondents, that there was practically no difference in the meaning of the two phrases, and I was much struck with the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerjee, when referring to the Bengali phrase used in the contract in that case, he said, "the words in the original.....are a well-known Bengali expression, which means a great deal more than a provisional settlement of the rent for the incidental purpose of ascertaining the stamp duty. The lease was a mokarrari mourasi lease, and, when such a document mentions a certain sum of money as the 'jama abadarita' which words may well be rendered as 'the fixed rent,' the meaning of the document seems to be very clear, that the parties wanted to fix the value of the paddy, that is the part of the rent which was payable in kind."

Being impressed with that the learned Judge's judgment as to the meaning of the words, I thought it was desirable that we should have the assistance of one of the learned Judges of this Court who are thoroughly acquainted with the Bengali language, and that is the reason why I asked my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee to sit with us:—and we shall have the advantage of his judgment presently. The best construction that I can put upon this contract is the one that is contended for by the appellants. Looking at the document as a whole I think the parties did intend to fix the total rent which should be paid in the event of non-delivery of paddy, namely, Rs. 16-6-8 gandas.

There are several cases dealing with points somewhat similar to the point which we have had before us to day, but there is no case which is exactly the same. The words in each of the cases differ to some extent from the words of the contract in this case. Consequently, I do not think there is any question which should be referred to a Full Bench, as we were asked to do by the learned Vakil for the respondents. In my judgment, it is our duty to put on the contract the best construction we can.

For these reasons I think that the appeal should be allowed, with costs.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that this appeal must be allowed. In my opinion, in the events which have happened, the landlords are entitled to recover rent from the tenants only at the rate of Rs. 16 6 8 gandas under the terms of the contract between them.

The lease is described as a mourasi mokarrari kabuliyat and the rent payable thereunder is fixed in perpetuity. This is manifest from the concluding words "dharjya jami jamar opor komi beshi asile asibe na", in other words, at no time would there be reduction or increase in the land and the rent fixed.

The document states that the rent is payable partly in cash and partly in kind. The cash rent is payable at the rate of Rs. 1 6 8 gandas, and the paddy rent is payable at the rate of Rs. 7 3 16 gandas an ari. The document further states that the market value of the paddy is Rs. 15 and the total rent is Rs. 16 6 8 gandas (obtained by the addition of the rent in cash and the money value of the rent-in-kind). It is fairly clear that upon the lease taken as a whole the rent was fixed at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas, if the tenant should fail to deliver the paddy under the terms of the contract.

It has been suggested by the learned Vakil for the respondents that this was not the true intention of the parties, but we must remember that we have to give effect only to such intention as the parties were able to express by the language used in the document; the Court is not concerned with any unexpressed intention which they might have entertained. The suggestion that the quantity of paddy deliverable might have been valued for the purpose of payment of the registration fee is a speculation for which there is no foundation either in the document or in the evidence.

There are many cases to be found in the books on the construction of documents of this character, more or less varying in their terms. The earliest case I have been able to trace in which the suggestion was made that the money value of the paddy was stated for purposes of the registration laws is that of Sohobut Ali v. Abdul Ali (9). The theory that the paddy is valued either for the purpose of convenience of the parties or for the purpose of registration re appears in two later cases, Akbar Ali v. Durga Kripa Sen (6) and Sheik Isaf v. Gopal Chandra Dey (7), the latest case where it is reiterated is Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (5). On the other hand, there are decisions where the Court has construed the agreement strictly, without travelling beyond the terms expressed there: and, amongst cases of this class reference may be made to Bipro Charan v. Suchand Roy (3), Afar v. Surja Kumar Ghose (1) and Nilmadhab Mahapatra v. Keshab Lal Mahapatra (2). It now transpires that the earliest case on the point is in the same direction, namely, the unreported decision of the late Chief Justice Sir Francis Maclean and Mr. Justice Banerjee in Dwarika Nath Mukerjee v. Dwijendra Nath Ghosal (4), and it is probable that if that ruling had been reported, the current of decisions of this Court might have been uniform. I have read the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerjee in the case just mentioned, and I entirely agree with that learned Judge as to the meaning of the expression "abadharita jamma". The expression used in this case is not "abadharita" but

(9) 8 C. W. N. 151.

ANGAMUTHU CHETTI v. VARATHARAJULU CHETTI.

"dharjya." The two words however, are derived from the same root, and, in my opinion, they have clearly the same significance.

If we were to accede to the contention of the respondents, the result would be to destroy the character of this lease as a mourasi mokarrari kabuliyat; the amount of rent payable would vary from year to year according to the market price of the paddy. This, in my opinion, was not the intention of the parties, so far as that intention can be gathered from the words used in the document.

NEWBOULD, J.—With respect, I find myself unable to agree with the learned Chief Justice and my learned brother Mr. Justice Mookerjee.

The facts of this case seem to me to be undistinguishable from the facts of the case of Baneswar Mukherji v. Umesh Chandra (5). There was as here a mokarrari kabuliyat, the annual rent was cash rent and a paddy rent. In the kabuliyat the paddy was valued and the total of the cash rent and valuation of the paddy rent was stated as settled in perpetuity, and it was held that the statement as to the market value of the paddy was explicable by the desirability of stating that amount for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty. It seems to me that to give any other meaning to this portion of the kabuliyat, we have now had to consider, would contradict the terms of the document. The market value of the paddy rent and the total rental of Rs. 16-6-8 gandas are stated at the commencement of the document and subsequently comes the covenant to pay the cash rent on two different occasions and the paddy at a later date each year. There is nothing in the covenant suggesting that there is any option given to the tenant to substitute cash rent for the portion of the rent which is payable in paddy. The recovery of the paddy rent at its cash value, as it varies from year to year, does not seem to me to be inconsistent with the tenure being a mokarrari one. When the value of the paddy varies, the value of the cash may also be said to vary in comparison with the paddy. The effect of variation is diminished by fixing, as in this case, the rent partly in cash and partly in kind. In the absence of any agreement in the kabuliyat to pay the total rent in cash, I cannot see that the statement fixing the total rent at Rs. 16-6-8 gandas can be given any other meaning than a statement added to the document for the purpose of fixing the stamp duty and the registration fee. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

SANDERSON, C. J.—The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below, and direct that a decree be drawn according to the judgment of the majority of the Court.

ANGAMUTHU CHETTI—DEFENDANT No. 1—PETITIONER—APPELLANT

VARATHARAJULU CHETTI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Widow—Surrender by widow of her estate to reversioner—Provision for maintenance and residence, effect of—Requisites of surrender.

A reasonable stipulation for residence and maintenance contained in a deed of surrender by a Hindu widow of her estate to the reversioner does not affect the validity of the deed, provided the surrender is a bona fide one of the entire interest of the widow in the whole estate and is not a mere device to divide the estate with the next reversioner. [p. 391, col. 2; p 393, cols. 1 & 2.]

Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir, 19 C. 236; 19 I. A. 30; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 88; 9 Ind. Dec (N. s.) 603 (P. C.), Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh 53 Ind. Cas 347 (P. C.), explained.

Case-law reviewed.

Per Oldfield, J.—The surrender which the law recognises is a surrender of the estate held by the widow as such; and it will not be the less total owing to a reservation in her favour of a right of maintenance, to which she was not previously entitled as widow, even if that right be secured on part of the property comprised in her widow's estate. [p. 393, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—To make a surrender effectual, it must comply with the following requirements:—(1) it must be in favour of the nearest reversioner, (2) there must be no reservation, (3) it should be made bona fide and not as a device to effect a bargain between the widow and the reversioner. A provision for maintenance does not, in the least, affect the spiritual character of the surrender or derogate from its completeness. If a transaction is ex facie and in intention a surrender and reserves no portion of the property surrendered to the widow, the fact that the surrenderee agrees to provide for the maintenance of the surrenderor would not vitiate the transaction. Appeal against the order of the District Court of Madura, dated the 6th September 1917, in Appeal Suit No. 116 of 1917, preferred against the order, dated the 5th January 1917, of the Court of the District Munsif of Melur at Madura, in Execution Application No. 212 of 1916 in Execution Petition No. 329 of 1915, in Original Suit No. 534 of 1912 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Madura.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 7th of February 1919, the Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) delivered the following JUDGMENT.—Since the judgment before us was delivered, the law in question, especially so far as it is stated in the case of Rangappa Naik v. Kamti Naik (1), on which the lower Appellate Court relied, has been re-stated in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2).

It is, moreover, not clear whether the lower Appellate Court intended to find that Exhibit I effected a total surrender of the widow's rights.

We, therefore, call on the lower Appellate Court to return findings, in the light of the foregoing, on the following issues :—

(1) Did Exhibit I effect a total surrender of the widow's right ? and

(2) If the surrender was partial, did Exhibit I effect a valid transfer to Mariappa Chetty ?

Findings should be returned on the evidence on record within six weeks. Seven days will be allowed for filing objections. A copy of the judgment of the Judicial Committee is communicated herewith to the lower Appellate Court for use and return.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Madura submitted the following

FINDINGS.—I am asked to submit findings upon the following issues :—

(1) Did Exhibit I effect a total surrender of the widow's rights ? and

(2) If the surrender was partial, did Exhibit I effect a valid transfer to Mariappa Chetti.

The recent decision of the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2) has been referred to by the High Court, and I have carefully perused it.

2. Exhibit I recites the death of M. Govindan Chettiar, husband of the two widows executing the document, about a month previously, the claim by Govindan's brother, Mariappa Chettiar, that they had been undivided, the fact that there were creditors to be settled, and states that in accordance with the advice of Panchayatdars Mariyappa Chettiar shall take and enjoy the properties with absolute rights and the widows shall have no right or concern therein. This is undoubtedly an absolute surrender of all rights and the schedule shows that even household utensils and book debts were surrendered. There was, however, some consideration, Rs. 500 in cash and Rs. 300 worth of jewels which she had been wearing, to the one widow and a promise of maintenance to the other widow, Thangammai. There was also a stipulation that if Thangammi should wish to live separately, she could then claim for her maintenance a certain wet land and a room in the house. It is argued that this was a reservation of a portion of the property and, therefore, the surrender was not total. Exhibit IV, a sale-deed executed by Mariappa two years later, certainly mentions that he had allotted a room to Thangammai and reserves that room to her for her life. As a matter of fact it appears that Thangammai ultimately died in Mariappa Chettiar's house, and, therefore, presumably there was no occasion for the stipulations in Exhibit I to come into force.

3. Exhibit I is undoubtedly a document surrendering all the life-interests which Thangammai had in her late husband's properties. I do not see that a stipulation for maintenance can affect it, for if her husband had been undivided and she had had no interest in her husband's property, she would have been entitled to maintenance from her husband's brother. She, therefore, divested herself of all her rights and fell back upon what she would have been entitled to if she had had no rights. I, therefore, consider that her surrender was total. In the case reported as Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (3) it was held that a stipulation for maintenance cannot affect the validity of a surrender. It is argued that the recent Privy Council decision has overruled that case, but it does not appear to me to be so.

4. I, therefore, return a finding on issue 1 in the affirmative, and on that, issue 2 does not arise.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 17th of July 1919 after the return of the above finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and orders of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance, the material papers in the suit, and the said finding of the lower Appellate Court and the memorandum of objections to the said finding filed by the appellant and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellant, and of Mr. K. S. Jayarama Aiyar, for the Respondent, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Odgers, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The finding is that the widow surrendered the whole property she inherited from her husband by Exhibit I, which contained a stipulation that if Thangammai (meaning the widow) should wish to live separately, she could then claim for her maintenance a certain wet land and a room in the house. Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar argues that this stipulation vitiates the surrender: Mr. Jayarama Aiyar, on the other hand, contends that the provision for maintenance and residence does not detract from the completeness of the surrender and the stipulation objected to is not within the mischief of the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2). We are inclined to think that the Board had not in its mind provisions for maintenance which even a widow "effacing herself" must have for the sustenance of her physical body. At the same time, the language of the Privy Council is very comprehensive and may affect any reservation of property, whether it is for maintenance or not. We are aware that Abdur Rahim and Oldfield, JJ., are inclined to restrict the scope of the Privy Council judgment to instances in which a temporal advantage is obtained in the guise of surrender. But they follow the view of Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (3), which was based on the judgment of the Full Bench of the High Court in Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangaswami Gounden (4), which was under appeal before the Judicial Committee. As we said before, the language of Lord Dunedin goes further than that employed in the Full Bench judgment of the High Court: and as the question is one of great importance and may recur often, it seems desirable, in our opinion, that there should be an authoritative pronouncement by the Full Bench on the subject. We have, therefore, resolved to refer for the opinion of the Full Bench the following question:

"Is a deed of surrender by a Hindu widow invalid by reason of a provision for maintenance and residence in her favour contained therein?".

This appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench on the 25th and 26th August 1919.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The essentials of a surrender are fully dealt with by the Privy Council in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir (5) and Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2). The effect of a surrender is said to be "as if the widow had operated her own death." So any provision detracting from an absolute withdrawal by the widow would render the surrender incomplete and so invalid.

[OLDFIELD, J.—The real question resolves itself into whether this provision for maintenance is in effect a retention of part of the estate surrendered, or a consideration for the transfer to the reversioner.]

In either view the surrender would be bad. No widow is compelled by law to surrender, but the law says that if she decides to surrender of her own free will, she must be prepared to renounce completely, becoming thereby a Bairagi or Sanyasi. Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (6).

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—But the provision for maintenance is not an interest in the estate, nor does she have it as a legal 'widow'.]

Then the provision is a consideration for the transfer. But a surrender cannot be a transfer for consideration, as then the widow would not be operating her death.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The legal entity called the 'widow' dies on surrender, but the human being is not dead and has to live.]

A widow who inherits her husband's estate has no right in law to maintenance, as what is called 'a right to maintenance' means at law. In any case there cannot be a transfer for consideration. See Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai (7), Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2).

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The surrender is complete and valid. It may be that the quid pro quo is bad.]

There can be no such dissociation, as the quid pro quo comes in only by and on account of the surrender. Even a separate reconveyance has in this respect been held to invalidate surrenders. Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (8).

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—As a device used to divide the estate, such transactions are set aside.]

A surrender is not a transfer, but an extinction or renunciation of the proprietary title of the qualified owner. Hence there can be no consideration passing. See Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (9), Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangaswami Gounden (4), Raj Kishore v. Durga Charan Lal (10), Satyalakshmi Narayana v. Jagannadham (11).

But the following cases take a contrary view Rangasami Gounden v Nachiappa Gounden (2), Appeal No 162 of 1916, Mulugu Katayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri (12) and Appeal No. 373 of 1915. Appeal 373 of 1915 is based on Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (13), which is not good law after Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2). In Mulugu Katayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri (12) the observation is plainly obiter. Diltor Koer v. Harku Singh (14) takes a similar view.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar (with him Mr. K. S Jayarama Aiyar), for the Respondent.—Under the old Hindu Law, the widow was not an 'heir' to her husband's estate. She had only a right to maintenance. It was Jimutavahana who, by construing an ambiguous text, made her an heir. See Ghose's Hindu Law, Volume II. page 891, Volume I, page 229; Narada, Chapter XIII. The widow comes in as an interloper for her lifetime and when she goes out either by surrender or by death, the normal rule of succession is restored. Gunga Pershad Kur v. Shumbhoonath Burmun (15). If she surrenders, then the original right of maintenance remains to her, whether she stipulates for it or not. It has been held that even an annuity stipulated for on surrender is good. See Jadomoney Dabee v. Surodaprosono Mookerjee (16). This is cited in Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (6) and Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (9). The maintenance of the widow is for the benefit of the husband, as observed in Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (6). A surrender, being a pious act, cannot be taken to deprive the husband of such benefit. Raghunath Singh v. Kura Kumari (17).

[OLDFIELD, J.—Then why is it said that Courts should not encourage surrenders?]

ANGAMUTHU CHETTI v. VARATHARAJULU CHETTI.

Because very often a surrender is made to serve as a device.

[ABDUR RAHIM Offg., C. J.—The Privy Council say that it would possibly be defeating the right of the reversioner entitled at the time of the widow's death].

I rely upon Diltor Koer v. Harku Singh (14), Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (3) and other cases already cited as being in my favour. Karetti Brahmanaikudu v. Kareti Mahalakshmi (18) follows Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (13).

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, in reply.—The widow was a normal 'heir' under Hindu Law until the Mitakshara first denied the heirship. See Gudimetla Vencataraju v. Bollozu Kottaya (19), Narayanasawmi Naidu Garu v. Tirumalasetti Subbaya (20), Soundararajam v. Arunachalam Chetty (21). In Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (16), Jackson, J., takes a strong view in favour of my contention at pages 123, 124.*

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, Offg. C. J.—The answer to the question referred depends mainly upon the interpretation of the scope and effect of a recent ruling of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2), where the law on the subject of surrender and alienation by a Hindu widow has been authoritatively considered. They begin by pointing out that these two classes of transactions are different in their nature and legal incidents. Surrender is described as "an effacement of the widow—an effacement which in other circumstances is effected by actual death or by civil death—which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date." In another place it is stated to be a withdrawal of the widow's life-estate so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee, thus approving of the proposition as stated in Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir (5) by Lord Morris that "according to Hindu Law the widow can accelerate the estate of the heir by conveying absolutely and destroying her life estate." Then their Lordships sum up the law in these words: "An alienation by a widow of her deceased husband's estate held by her may be validated if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation. In such circumstances the question of necessity does not fall to be considered. But the surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner." It may be observed here that their Lordships speak of surrender as an alienation and in another place as a gift. But that, in my opinion, cannot be taken to obscure in any way the distinction between a surrender as defined above and an alienation of the whole or part of the estate on the ground of necessity. So far as this judgment of the Privy Council goes, I find no warrant for holding that, where a transaction is by way of surrender of the widow's whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner and such surrender is bona fide and not a mere device to divide the estate with the reversioner, it would not be valid in law simply because the deed of surrender makes a bona fide provision for a reasonable maintenance and residence for the widow or widows making the surrender. On the other hand, it seems to me that their Lordships intended to lay down that if the conditions mentioned by them were satisfied, that was all that was required for a valid surrender and any provision or benefit reserved for the widow not inconsistent with those conditions would not affect the legality of the transaction. Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar contends that the description of surrender as "an effacement of the widow which in other circumstances is effected by actual death or by civil death opening the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date," shows that any provision for maintenance and residence in favour of the widow surrendering her life estate is inconsistent with a proper surrender. But I fail to appreciate this argument. If the Privy Council had intended any such result, I think they would have made it clear that reservation of any sort of benefit or provision for maintenance would vitiate a surrender. On the other hand, all that they were prepared to lay down was that it must not be a device to divide the estate with the reversioner. The transaction which has given rise to this reference, it is conceded, is not such a device, but a bona fide surrender. All that was argued was that the stipulation by the nearest reversioner in whose favour the surrender is made (which was a payment of a lump sum of Rs. 500 to one widow for her maintenance and an undertaking to maintain the other widow and to provide for their residence), though perfectly reasonable, was in itself sufficient to vitiate the surrender. As I said, this contention is not borne out by the judgment of the Privy Council. It is obvious that if it were to be accepted, if the law were that the widow surrendering her estate cannot stipulate for her maintenance, that would virtually be prohibiting surrenders in most of the cases, even though the widow be actuated by a bona fide desire to divest herself of the entire estate which she inherited from her husband in favour of the next heir.

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer was not able to produce a single authority in support of his proposition. On the other hand, as far back as 1856 Sir James Colvile, then Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, laid down that a relinquishment of the inheritance by a widow in consideration of maintenance, in favour of the next heir was valid. See Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (16). It was not, so far as one can gather, for the first time that the law was so laid down in 1856. On the other hand, it would appear from Lukhiprea Dassee v. Sheosundri Dassee (22), referred to by Sir James Colvile, that that was the Hindu Law as understood for a long time. In Lalla Kundee Lall v. Lalla Kalee Pershad (23) a surrender was upheld as a family arrangement in spite of a stipulation for maintenance. In Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (6) the previous authorities appear to have been fully discussed, including the case in Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (16). I find no suggestion in the judgment of Garth, C. J., or of Mitter, J., throwing doubt on what was laid down by Colvile, C. J., nor is there any doubt cast on that proposition in the elaborate judgments of Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., in Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (9), referred to with approval by the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2). In this Court in Rangappa Naik v. Kamti Naik (1) it was laid down that a provision for maintenance does not vitiate a surrender and though their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case have said that they did not approve of "a good deal of what was said" in that case, I cannot assume that they meant to hold that the High Court's ruling was bad on this particular point. That was also how the law was enunciated in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswmi Pillai (3), although the learned Judges, following the Full Bench of the High Court in Nachiappa Gounden v. Rangaswami Gounden (4) [which was the case in appeal to the Privy Council in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2)] laid down certain other propositions which were disapproved by the Privy Council. I may also mention that sitting with Oldfield, J., I had recently to consider the effect of the recent Privy Council ruling on this point and on the matter being more fully discussed on this occasion, I am strengthened in my view that there is nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council to militate against what appears to me to have been always understood as the law, namely, that a reasonable stipulation for maintenance and residence does not effect the validity of a surrender, provided it is a bona fide surrender of the entire interest of the widow in the whole estate and is not a mere device to divide the estate with the next reversioner. That is how I would answer the question under reference.

Since I had prepared the above opinion, the judgment of the Privy Council in the consolidated appeals from Bengal Nos. 100 of 1916, etc. [Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh (24)] delivered by Viscount Cave on 30th June 1919 (not yet reported in the Law Reports) has come to my notice. It certainly confirms the view of law I have expressed In that case in the course of certain proceedings under the Succession Certificate Act instituted by the adopted son of one of three Hindu brothers alleging that they were joint in estate, the widow of one of the brothers also claimed his estate, alleging that they had divided, an agreement was arrived at by which in consideration of certain property being allotted to her for maintenance during her life she gave up all her rights in favour of the adopted son. Their Lordships held that the agreement which was subsequently acted upon amounted to an effective surrender. It does not appear that the surrender was even attacked on the ground that it was made in consideration of the widow being given a certain portion of the estate for her maintenance during her life; in any case the Privy Council had no hesitation in upholding the surrender in spite of such a provision. They say: "In the present case there was indeed no formal surrender by the widow of her estate: but there was an express agreement, binding upon her, that for considerations which appeared to her sufficient she would abandon the claim which at the time she had a good right to make and would have no right, claim or demand in respect of the estate of her late husband. It is true that the documents were drawn up on the footing, not of a surrender of an acknowledged right, but of an admission that the right did not exist: but in substance, and disregarding the form, there was a complete self-effacement by the widow which precluded her from asserting any further claim to the estate. The question is, no doubt, one of difficulty, but upon the whole their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the execution of the two ekrarnamas, followed by the acceptance for thirty years of maintenance under the terms of those documents, amounted to a complete relinquishment by Anandi Koer of her estate in favour of Mahabir, and accordingly that the title of Mahabir's representatives is established and the plaintiff's action should have been dismissed on this ground"

OLDFIELD, J.—The reservation in favour of the widow of a right to maintenance is a common term in surrenders; and it is not necessary to explain or justify it, as proposed by Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar for respondent, with reference to any fiction of a revival, when her separate property passes from her, of the right she would have enjoyed, if no such property had ever been in question and the family had been joint. It is a sufficient reason for allowing the validity of a surrender, notwithstanding the inclusion of provision for the widow's maintenance, that she cannot be supposed to make a surrender so comprehensive as to deprive herself entirely of the means of subsistence. Yet that, except in the rare cases in which she has or has means of earning separate income, would be entailed by acceptance of appellant's argument. No doubt the widow has been described in some authorities as operating by the surrender her physical or civil death. But those, as Sadasiva Aiyar, J., held in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (3), are "loose expressions, which can mean only that the reversioner succeeds in such a case as if the widow died at the moment of surrender" and should not be pressed as embodying the law in all their implications.

As the judgment just delivered shows, there is very little authority dealing directly with the matter; but, so far as it goes, it is in respondent's favour We have, moreover, been shown no decision, in which the inclusion of a bona fide provision for maintenance was regarded as invalidating a surrender; and the negative inference is strong, since, if the contrary view had been tenable, it would have afforded a clear and immediate ground of decision in the majority of the cases in the reports. The contention that a surrender cannot be valid, unless it is literally of the whole estate and reserves no benefit to the widow whatever, has been supported by reference to the latest comprehensive exposition of the law on the subject, the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nochiappa Gounden (2); and certainly according to it the surrender must be of the whole estate. But it is material that in that case the widow retained or received more than a mere right to maintenance, since she was also allowed possession of certain mittah lands, and, as the latter fact was a sufficient foundation for the conclusion against the validity of the transaction as a surrender, there is no reason for assuming that the effect of the stipulation for maintenance was considered or influenced the decision. It is indeed clear that the widow's acceptance of some benefit was not regarded as inconsistent with her effacement or the total withdrawal of her estate, which was held essential to the validity of her surrender, since reference was made in the course of the judgment to the necessity for the surrender being "bona fide and not a mere device to divide the estate with the reversioner", requirements which would be meaningless, if the widow's right to receive anything were denied in toto. And this interpretation is confirmed by the fact that in a very recent decision, received since the argument on the present reference, Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh (24) (Privy Council Appeal No. 100 of 1906) the Judicial Committee, proceeding statedly in conformity with Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2) and reiterating the necessity for a bona fide and total renunciation by the widow of her right, held that such a renunciation was effected by a document, under which she was to hold certain land for life for her maintenance, that being the sole stipulation for her benefit. The surrender, which the law recognises, is, as I understand these decisions and as the language used in the later suggests, a surrender of the estate held by the widow as such; and it will not be the less total owing to a reservation in her favour of a right of maintenance, to which she was not previously entitled as widow, even if that right be secured on part of the property comprised in her widow's estate.

It is conceded that the provision for residence must stand or fall with that for maintenance. I concur with the learned Chief Justice in answering the question referred in the negative.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The question for decision may be examined from three standpoints, Firstly, with reference to the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (2); secondly, with reference to the theory of surrender, apart from decided cases: and thirdly, with reference to decided cases.

Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar's attempt was, in the main, directed to showing that the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee leaves Indian Courts no option in the matter. The judgment has been ably commented upon. The Board had before them a case which was not essentially one of surrender. They had mainly to deal with the proposition whether the consent of a reversioner to an alienation was conclusive proof of its binding character. Incidentally they referred to the distinction between surrender and alienation. In dealing with these matters they roughly classified them under three heads: (a) surrender proper, (b) indirect surrender and (c) alienation. As regards alienation they held that the consent of the immediate reversioner was only presumptive proof of its validity. In this connection they point out that the principle is an offshoot of the theory of surrender which alone is referred to by the Smrithi writers. As regards surrender itself, they say:—"The surrender must be a bona fide surrender, not a device to divide the estate with the reversioner." As regards indirect surrender, they seem inclined to hold that where the widow in possession alienates to a stranger and the consideration wholly passes into the hands of the immediate reversioner, the transaction may be regarded as one of surrender

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied upon certain expressions in the judgment, for the broad proposition that there should be no element of quid pro quo in effecting the surrender. The expression "civil death" and "effacement" must be taken to have been used figuratively qua the estate surrendered. I am clear that it was not the intention of Lord Dunedin that these words should be understood as suggested in this Court. Reading the whole judgment it is apparent that the noble Lord thought that to make a surrender effectual, it must comply with the following requirements. (1) It must be to the nearest reversioner; (2) there must be no reservation, and (3) it should be done bona fide and not as a device to effect a bargain between the widow and the reversioner. Mr. Karishnaswamy Aiyar wanted to import a fourth condition, namely, entire absence of consideration. I do not think there is anything in the judgment to support this suggestion. As I said in the Order of Reference, and suggested at the course of hearing, a provision for maintenance does not in the least affect the spiritual character of the surrender. The commonest instance of a bona fide surrender is where a religiously inclined widow seeks relief from the worries of temporal management, of her estate and retires to a place of pilgrimage like Benares, she would then surrender the whole of her property to the next reversioner; But she will have to live even in Benares. Any provision made for her maintenance there would not, in the least, derogate from the completeness of the surrender. Therefore, in my opinion, if a transaction is ex facie, in substance and in intention a surrender which reserves no portion of the property to the widow, the fact that the surrenderee agreed to provide for the maintenance of the surrenderor should not vitiate the transaction.

Since this case was argued, the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Appeal No. 100 of 1916 [Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prasad Singh (24)] from the Calcutta High Court has been circulated to us. That decision makes it clear that a provision for maintenance would not affect the validity of a surrender. In the judgment of the Board the passage quoted by the learned Chief Justice makes it clear that if the provision for maintenance is bona fide and reasonable, the transaction will be upheld.

An examination of the texts on which the theory of surrender has been built, leads to the same conclusion. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar in his very interesting argument drew attention to the fact that excepting Yagnavalkya and Vishnu, none of the Smrithi writers recognised the right of a Hindu widow to a share in the joint family property. The two Smrithi writers apparently gave expression to the prevailing sentiment at the time they wrote. When the texts were commented upon, two theories were propounded. Vygnaneswara held that the texts should be confined to awarding property only where the husband had become divided from the rest of the family. His view was that the theory of survivorship should not be prejudiced by granting a share to the widow. Jeemutha Vahana did not agree with this interpretation. He held that the share should be allotted, whether the family was divided or undivided. At the same time he gave expression to a sentiment which has since assumed large proportions. The unpretentious words in Chapter II, section 1, paragraph 59, "if her right ceases or never takes effect, the residue of the estate is taken in the same manner as they (reversioners) would have succeeded if the widow's right had never taken effect" have led to all the trouble. As I understand the position, both Vygnaneswara and Jeemutha Vahana were trying to placate male opinion against the innovation by Yagnyavalkya and Vishnu. Both of them wanted to put limitations upon the texts. Jeemutha Vahana apparently thought that by enabling the widow to give up the estate he would expound the text in a manner not very unacceptable to persons who have been accustomed to the belief that women have no share in the joint family property. However that may be, there is no doubt that the prevalent idea was that by surrender the widow would gain spiritual benefit, and that for this end she should walk out of the estate as if the property still belonged to the undivided family and as if her husband had never become divided from the rest. As Subramania Aiyar, J., pointed out in Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai (7), the principle enunciated by Jeemutha Vahana has been applied to cases governed by Mitakshara. The conclusion I come to is that the theory that by the operation of surrender the widow secures for herself at least as much right as she would have had, had she never taken the property by inheritance is inferable from the language of Jimutha Vahana. It follows from this that any provision for maintenance would be perfectly legitimate and would not offend against the doctrine of surrender. This is the view which underlies the decision of the Chief Justice Colvile in Jadomoney Dabee v. Sarodaprosono Mookerjee (16), although Mr. Justice Jackson was of a different opinion. Colvile, C. J., refers to Lukhipree Dassee v. Sheosundri Dassee (22) in support of his view, and this undoubtedly must have been in the mind of Mr. Justice Mitter when he says in Gunga Pershad Kur v. Shumbhoonath Burmun (15) that relinquishment brings in the normal rule of succession.

Lastly, turning to decided cases, it seems to me that the weight of authority is against the contention of Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar. In Marudamuthu Nadan v. Srinivasa Pillai (7) it was held that the surrender must be absolute and complete. Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (8), which was very much relied on, was really a case of a device by the widow to get advantages for herself and for her dependents in the guise of a surrender. The observations in Mulugu Katayya v. Mudigonda Chandramowli Sastri (12) that there should be no benefit for the widow except possibly for maintenance, is purely obiter and was not a considered pronouncement. On the other hand, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in Chinnaswami Pillai v. Appaswami Pillai (3) lays down explicitly that an obligation to maintain does not vitiate a surrender. One of his reasons for the conclusion is that the surrenderor would have otherwise a right to be maintained. This statement is in accordance with the decision in Raghunath Singh v. Kura Kumari (17); but I think there is force in the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant that the surrenderor can have no legal claim against the surrenderee, at least in cases of surrender of her husband's self-acquired properties. But this criticism of one of the reasons for the opinion does not affect the main conclusion. In Challa Subbiah Sastri v. Palury Pattabhiramayya (13) an absolute surrender, which was followed by a reconveyance, was held good. In Appeal No. 162 of 1916 the learned Officiating Chief Justice has put the theory of surrender on the ground that the widow by walking out of the estate is practically restoring the property to the joint family. In Pilu Appa Nalwade v. Bebaji Naru Mang (25) there was a reservation of the estate which was held to vitiate the surrender. In Nobokishore Sarma Roy v. Hari Nath Sarma Roy (6), although the case was one of alienation and observations relating thereto may be open to exception, having regard to the recent pronouncement of the Judicial Committee, Garth, C. J., referred to surrender as if all that is necessary is that there should be completeness and bona fides. In Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir (5) there was no conveyance of estate at all but only the right of management. It was held by the Judicial Committee in that case that the transaction cannot be supported as a surrender. The observations of Mookerjee, J., in Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (9) are really in favour of the view that a bona fide reservation for maintenance would not affect the validity of a surrender. Therefore, the authorities do not lend support to the contention advanced by the learned Vakil for the appellants. I agree in the answer given by the learned Officiating Chief Justice.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL NO. 51 OF 1919.

July 24, 1919.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Heaton.

VANICHAND RAJPAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

LAKHMICHAND MANECKCHAND—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 15—"Judgment", meaning of—Order refusing injunction to restrain suit, whether judgment—Appeal, whether lies.

An order refusing to restrain the defendant from prosecuting a suit filed by him against the plaintiff in a Court of a Native State is not a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court, and no appeal, therefore, lies against such an order under that clause. [p 396, col. 1.]

Per Macleod, C. J.—The word "judgment" in clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. [p. 396, col. 1.]

Per Heaton, J.—If an order directly involves a real question of jurisdiction, if its effect is to give jurisdiction or to take away from the Court jurisdiction, then an appeal will lie against such order under clause 15 of the Letters Patent [p. 397, col. 1.]

Messrs. Setalvad and Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Kanga, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This is an appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Pratt on an application made by the plaintiffs on motion that pending the hearing and final disposal of this suit the defendant, his servants and agents might be restrained by an order and injunction of this Honourable Court from prosecuting the suit filed by him against the plaintiffs in the Court of the Morvi State. The learned Judge held that the motion failed and directed the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the motion.

A preliminary point has been taken that no appeal lies against that order. It is admitted that the appeal could only lie under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and that, therefore, no appeal lies, unless the order can be considered as a judgment. A "judgment" in clause 15, according to the decision in Justices of the Peace for the town of Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1), which has been followed in this Court, means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. The questions in this suit appear in the prayers of the plaint. It was prayed, first, that it might be declared that the partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant was dissolved on or about the 26th day of June 1917; that since the date of the said dissolution the plaintiffs were the sole owners of the assets of the said firm; that the defendant had no interest in the profits of the said firm since the date of the dissolution; and then the plaintiffs further asked that pending the hearing and final disposal of this suit the defendant, his servants and agents should be restrained from prosecuting the suit he filed in the Court of the Morvi State.

Now the defendant in this suit filed a suit in the Morvi Court on the 4th January 1919, praying that the Court should take an account of the partnership business and realise its assets, and that on such account being taken, the Court would be pleased to pass a decree in the plaintiff's favour for such amount as appears due to him from the defendants or for whatever relief he might be entitled.

The plaintiffs in this suit did not file their plaint until the 14th May 1919. Now it is difficult to see how the order of Mr. Justice Pratt, refusing to grant the injunction asked for, is a decision which affects the merits of the questions between the parties by determining any right or liability on either side. It has been suggested that the effect of refusing to grant the injunction would be to oust the jurisdiction of this Court. If the jurisdiction of this Court in this suit is in any way ousted, it is owing to the fact that the plaintiff in the Morvi suit preferred to file his plaint there, and might get a decree in that Court which would bar, under section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs' suit in this Court, unless the plaintiffs can succeed on any of the exceptions to that section. We have been referred to the case of Sonabai v. Tribhowandas (2). In that suit Mr. Justice Davar ordered the plaintiff to deposit with the Prothonotary a sum of Rs. 3,000 as security for the first defendant's costs. It was objected on appeal as a preliminary point that no appeal lay against the order, and it was conceded that there could only be an appeal if the order was a judgment within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent. Mr. Justice Batchelor said in referring to the case of Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (3):—

"I am of opinion that this reasoning covers the case of the order now under discussion, for the effect of it is, at least conditionally, to deprive the Court of the jurisdiction which it otherwise would have to try the plaintiff's suit."

That is not the case here. If the order of Mr. Justice Pratt is allowed to stand, the jurisdiction of this Court is not ousted as a direct consequence of that order. It may be ousted in future by the defendant in this Court obtaining a decree in the Morvi Court. But whether that will occur or not remains for future decision. I can see nothing in this order which brings it within the definition of "judgment" above referred to.

(2) 32 B. 602 at p 610; 10 Bom. L. R. 337.
(3) 13 B. L. R. 91 at p. 101; 21 W. R. 303

Therefore in my opinion the preliminary point is good and no appeal lies.

We have heard Counsel, however, for the appellants on the merits. I may say that in my opinion the decision of the learned Judge in the Court below was perfectly correct. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs throughout.

HEATON, J.—I agree both that the order of the Court below was correct on the merits, and also that no appeal lies. It may be that the definition of the word "judgment," as used in clause 15 of the Letters Patent, which was quoted by my Lord the Chief Justice, is not exhaustive. I gather from the case of Hadjee Ismail Hadjee Hubeeb v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub (3) that if the order directly involves a real question of jurisdiction, if its effect is to give jurisdiction or to take away from the Court jurisdiction, then an appeal will lie. But there is nothing of that kind in this case. It is not disputed in this appeal that the Court had jurisdiction to grant or refuse an injunction. But it is contended that the effect of refusing an injunction was to deprive the Court of its own jurisdiction. To my thinking, if the jurisdiction of the Court can in any way be affected, it is, or rather it will be, (because the event has not yet happened) by operation of law. If the Morvi Court makes a decree, then by the operation of section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code the High Court here may be debarred from proceeding with the suit. But to refuse to prevent the natural operation of the law in that way, is not to cause an ouster of the jurisdiction. Therefore, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The principle underlying section 108 (B) (e) of the Transfer of Property Act is not applicable to such a case. [p. 398, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of South Kanara in Appeal Suit No 73 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Kasargad in Original Suit No. 524 of 1916.

FACTS.—Certain premises were in the occupation of the defendant as lessee when a portion thereof was rendered permanently unfit for cultivation by ingress of salt water. On a suit by an assignee of the right to collect rents, the defence was that the tenant was entitled to proportionate abatement. The claim was allowed by the lower Appellate Court.

Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Section 108 B (e) of the Transfer of Property Act enacts that where a portion of the leased premises is rendered unfit for cultivation by flood, etc., (ingress of the sea in this case), the lease shall be void at the option of the lessee. See also Dhuramsey v. Ahmedbhai (1), Breul & Co. v. Haji Sidick (2). Notice to determine the lease is essential.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—Do you say that the principle of apportionment has no application to this case?].

That principle applies only to cases of devolution or partial alienation. Bruel & Co. v. Hari Sidick (2) is confirmed on appeal in Sidick Haji Hoosein v. Bruel & Co. (3); Redman on Landlord and Tenant, page 406. See also Izon v. Gorton (4).

Mr. K. P. Lakshmana Rao, for the Respondent.—As the Transfer of Property Act has no application to the suit lease, the question is whether the dispute cannot be decided without resort to the principles of that Act. I submit that under the general law the tenant is entitled to the abatement in question. Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, page 479, Foa on Landlord and Tenant, page 122 (referring to page 63, Volume VII of Bacon's Abridgment). The law is that a tenant shall not suffer by reason of an act of God. The English cases cited for the appellant are all cases of accident by fire or other 'accidents' which can be repaired, as distinguished from cases where the premises are rendered substantially and permanently unfit. Salimullah v. Kali Prosonno (5).

Mr. K. B. Venkatchalam, for Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, in reply.—If the Transfer of Property Act cannot apply, I submit that the law relating to contracts which subsequently become impossible of performance applies.

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the Court below is that a portion of the demised premises became unfit for paddy cultivation, because it was inundated by sea water. The question, therefore, arises whether the tenant can plead as a defence to a suit for rent that he is entitled to proportionate abatement. There is not much authority on the subject. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar contended that the principle of section 106, clause B (e), of the Transfer of Property Act was applicable and that the only remedy open to the tenant was to have avoided the lease in toto. Mr. Lakshmana Rao for the respondent argued that the Transfer of Property Act, not being in terms applicable to agricultural tenancies, the application of the principle underlying the section must depend upon whether there are recognised pre-existing rules on the subject which render the application of the principle inequitable. He drew our attention to Sheik Enayutoollah v. Sheik Elaheebuksh (6) and Salimullah v. Kali Prosonno (5) and contended that, prior to the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act, the principle of rateable apportionment was recognised in this country. We may say that the idea is in accordance with the notions of natural justice and unless we are compelled to apply the provisions of the Act, there is no ground for not following the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock in Salimullah v. Kali Prosonno (5).

Even if the principle of section 108, clause B (e), is to be invoked, it is not clear that the present case is covered by the accidents enumerated. From the earliest times flooding by sea-water has not been recognised in England as standing on the same footing as destruction by fresh water floods. It is explained in 18 Halsbury, page 431 that, whereas deterioration by fresh water flooding is reparable, flooding by sea water would render the land practically unfit for all time to come. Whatever may be the reason, it was laid down in Bacon's Abridgment, Volume VII, page 63, that the tenant could claim abatement where the leased land was flooded by sea water and this view has been accepted as good law by all text writers. Woodfall, page 479, Foa, page 112, and Halsbury, Volume XVIII, page 481. Therefore even under the Transfer of Property Act following these authorities the word flood may have to be restricted to sea water flooding. Further, it is open to argument whether section 108 B (e) is exhaustive of the rights of the tenants. Avoidance of tenancy is no doubt one mode of relief. But does it exclude the notion that the claim for abatement is available to him? The English Law seems to countenance the view that avoidance is the only remedy, Baker v. Holtpzaffell (7). In Sidick Haji Hoosein v. Bruel & Co. (3) and Dhuramsey v. Ahmedbhai (1) the principle has been accepted. However that may be, in our opinion, as the Act is not in terms applicable, there is

RAMANDI PANDARAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 25—Minor, custody of, suit for, maintainability of—Procedure.

A civil suit for the custody of a minor will not lie in the Civil Courts. To obtain such custody proceedings must be taken under the Guardians and Wards Act. [p. 403, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 22 of 1918 (Appeal Suit No. 652 of 1917 on the file of the District Court) preferred against the decree of the Court, of the District Munsif of Alatur in Original Suit No. 276 of 1916.

FACTS.—Suit by the father to recover custody of his minor child from the mother who, according to plaintiff, was persuaded to leave him by her father, the 2nd defendant. Admittedly plaintiff had taken another wife and 1st defendant stated that she left him of her own accord on account of cruelty and ill-treatment. The District Munsif dismissed the suit, following Muthuverappa Chetti v. Ponnuswami Chetty (1), on the ground that the removal was not to the welfare of the minor. The Subordinate Judge, on appeal, decreed the suit. The defendants appealed.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 3rd February 1919 before Bakewell and Phillips, JJ.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, and P. G. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The Courts have no jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for. Act VIII of 1890 provides a special procedure which bars a regular suit. See section 7. See also Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) and Sham Lal v. Bindo (3), which clearly lay down the law. An application under the Act alone will lie.

[PHILLIPS, J.—The section of the Act deals only with guardians appointed by Courts. It does not say that a father is to be deprived of his rights over his son.]

No doubt the Court can appoint the father as guardian. But the welfare of the minor is the test. The father, because he is such, cannot insist on being appointed guardian.

[PHILLIPS, J.—Suppose the child is kidnapped and the kidnapper, being wealthy, treats the child better than the father can or does. Is the father to be deprived of his right?]

That is a question under the Penal Code. But no child will be removed from a custody where he gets better treatment solely because the applicant is the father.

Sham Lal v. Bindo (3) says that the Act is exhaustive and bars suits. It is followed in Utma Kuar v. Bhagwanta Kuar (4). Even though there is no express bar in the Act, the intention of the Legislature was such. See Arunachallam Pillay v. Iyama (5) following Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2). Sections 25 and 4 read together include also a natural guardian. See Dayabhai Raghunathdas v. Bai Parvati (6).

The Act is exhaustive. On an application under the Act notice is to be served on all persons interested, while in a suit it is only on the defendant. That is the ruling in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2). Also the District Court was held to have no jurisdiction even though it could try all suits of a "civil nature."

Sharifa v. Muns Khan (7), followed in Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (8), is against my contention. But even there the Court was not satisfied as to the correctness of the view taken. The Calcutta cases are all before the Act but wholly in my favour. There is no case in Madras after the Act.

Mr. C V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The Act only consolidates the previous enactments and covers only the ground covered by them. It is not, therefore, exhaustive. There is no provision in it for applications by parents and other natural guardians who are not always appointed as a matter of course. Section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code does give the plaintiff a right of suit. See Mathuraban v. Tewary (9), which follows the Bombay view and dissents from Arunachallam Pillay v. Iyama (5).

In any case I am entitled to be declared the father.

Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar, in reply.—Dayabhai Raghunathdas v. Bai Parvati (6) is authority that the Act applies to a father also. Section 25 applies to him. Mohideen Ibrahim Nachi v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (10) says that a father can apply under section 25.

See also Muthuveerappa Chetti v. Ponnuswami Chetty (1), which says that under the Hindu Law no one has an absolute right to be guardian.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The only question for determination is whether a suit by a father to recover possession of his minor child is maintainable in a Civil Court, or whether the sole remedy is by proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890). In the latter case the procedure would be by application to the District Court under section 25 of the Act, and it has been held in Dayabhai Raghunathdas v. Bai Parvati (6) that this section is applicable to all guardians, and not only to guardians appointed by Court, but the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act distinctly recognizes a right of suit, for suits for the custody of a minor are not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes (Article 37). It has been held that such a suit is maintainable both in this Court [Krishna v. Reade (11)] and in Bombay [Sharifa v. Mune Khan (7)], but a contrary view has been taken in Allahabad [Sham Lal v. Bindo (3)]. It is now argued that the decision of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) has overruled the Madras and Bombay decisions, but this proposition has been distinctly negatived in Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (3). The argument is based on the statement of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) that the District Court in which the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction over the infants except such jurisdiction as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. The previous passage, which we quote below, also supports the contention:—

"The real question was whether he was still entitled to exercise the functions of guardian and resume the custody of his sons and alter the scheme which had been formulated for their education. Again, it was not and could not be disputed that the letter of 6th March 1910 was in the nature of a revocable authority. The real question was whether in the events which had happened the plaintiff was at liberty to revoke it. Both questions fell to be determined having regard to the interests and welfare of the infants, bearing in mind, of course, their parentage and religion, and could only be decided by a Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants, and in their presence."

From this it would appear that in the opinion of their Lordships, the District Court had only jurisdiction under Act VIII of 1890 so far as the case under reference was concerned, but they do not appear to have specifically decided the question of whether any suit like the present one is maintainable in a Civil Court.

We may point out that the decision in Krishna v. Reade (11) was under Act IX of 1861, which was held to be an enabling Act only, and that Act VIII of 1890 is a consolidating and amending, Act although in other respects the provisions appear to be the same; also that the actual decision in Achratlal Jekisendas v. Chimanlal Parbhudas (8) was based on the fact that the father never had custody of the child, but it has been held by this Court in Mohideen Ibrahim Nachi v. Mohamed Ibrahim Sahib (10) that this fact does not prevent the application of section 25 of the Act of 1890. Section 25 does not expressly state whether the procedure thereunder should be by plaint or petition, when no application has been made for the appointment or declaration of a guardian by the Court.

In view of the apparent conflict between the decision in Krishna v. Reade (11) and the recent dictum of the Privy Council, we think it advisable to refer to a Full Bench the question whether a Mufassil Court other than a District Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a father for the custody of his child.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 9th and 10th April 1919 before the Full Bench.

Mr. P. G. Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellant. —Act VIII of 1890 fully provides for the case. Krishna v. Reade (11), when the Act of 1861 was in force, is the only case where a suit is held to lie. But that Act was only an enabling Act while the present is a consolidating Act.

Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2).

[WALLIS, C. J.—The suit there was filed in the District Court. How do you determine the Court for bringing the suit?]

The plaintiff puts his own value and the forum is based on the value. In the case of applications under the Act, section (4), clause (2), fixes the District Court.

[Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—In the arguments before the Privy Council the question whether a suit will lie or not was not allowed to be argued.]

[AYLING, J.—Apart from the Acts of 1890 and 1861 had the Courts jurisdiction to entertain suits?]

There was no such jurisdiction.

[WALLIS, C. J.—Such jurisdiction was part of the prerogative of the Crown and so there must have been such jurisdiction.]

The cases are Krishna v. Reade (11) (suit lies); Huro Soondures Boistobee v. Joy Doorga Boistobee (12) (application alone lies); Venkamma v. Savitramma (13) doubts Krishna v. Reade (11). Mohideen Ibrahim Nachi v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (10), Mushraf Husain v. Mohammad Jawad (14), Sham Lal v. Bindo (3), Joy Kishen Mookerjee v. Jodoonath Ghose (15), Utma Kuar v. Bhagwanta Kuar (4).

WALLIS, C. J.—The real point is what do the Privy Council mean in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2)?]

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondent.—Prior to the Act of 1861 there were other Acts under which it has been held that suits like the present were of a civil nature and cognisable by the Civil Courts. In Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (16) this High Court held that the Act of 1890 did not take away the common law right to proceed by suit. The case in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Narayaniah (2) was for a declaration that the minors were wards of Court. The Privy Council say that the only provision of law under which the period of minority could be extended so as to allow the declaration was in the Act of 1890 alone. So the only effective remedy that could be had under that Act could be granted only by a District Court. What ways were open for recovery of custody of the child was a question which was argued but was held unnecessary. See at pages 814, 816, 818, 820.*

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—If there are to be concurrent remedies, as stated in the Allahabad case, is there not a possibility of conflict of decisions, e. g., two persons, each claiming to be guardian, apply one by suit and the other under the Act.]

Section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act lays that orders under the Act are conclusive, so the suit would become futile.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—If a decree had already been passed?]

It could be vacated by application with a copy of the order under the Act.

A consolidating Act simply contains in one Act the provisions of all previous Acts and in supersession of them. It is the same as a codifying one except that the latter
